Lee Brockley "The Spender" Takes French Leave With Father's Dashing Young Sweetheart

TRAPPED IN PROMINENT CAFE COUPLE EXECUTES NEAT GETAWAY

$90,000 In Cancelled Checks Reveal Touching Influence of Old Man's Darling.

Society is running around in circles today in a mad effort to guess the identity of the beautiful French blonde who snuggled her way into the heart and bankroll of Howard Brockley, the prominent financier, and then hiked for other climates with no less a person than Lee Brockley, the gay young spender, familiarly known as the "gilt-edged kid"

Maeterlinck's

"THE BLUE BIRD"

Directed by Maurice Tourneur, Scenario by Charles Maigne

An ARTCRAFT Picture

"THE BLUE BIRD"

THIS spectacle of Happiness is first of all a great money picture—a "showman's" picture. It has every quality necessary to pull the big crowds. It is a story of strong sentiment, of mortal men and women and it carries a big message that will cheer a war-torn nation.

Tremendous is its appeal to women—a play of heart-throbs, of sweethearts, of mothers—a show that makes the women smile, weep and applaud. That means a show that will play to capacity.

"The Blue Bird," as a play, is known everywhere. It was an S.R.O. attraction on the stage. In motion pictures, it is even bigger and better.

A mighty advertising campaign that will bring big business is behind "The Blue Bird." Thousands of circulars and other advertisements are reaching your patrons now. They'll come in droves whenever you say the word.

"THE WHISPERING CHORUS"

By Jeanie Macpherson, from the story by Perley Poore Sheehan

An ARTCRAFT Picture

CECIL B. DE MILLE is the directing genius who aided Jesse L. Lasky in establishing the Lasky Productions as motion pictures of supreme merit. He is the man who directed all the Geraldine Farrar productions.

No one knows better than Cecil B. De Mille how to tell a story dramatically in motion pictures.

"The Whispering Chorus," the strangest story ever told, is a photoplay of tremendous vitality, the first of Artcraft's four Cecil B. De Mille Star Series Pictures, produced personally by the Director-General of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

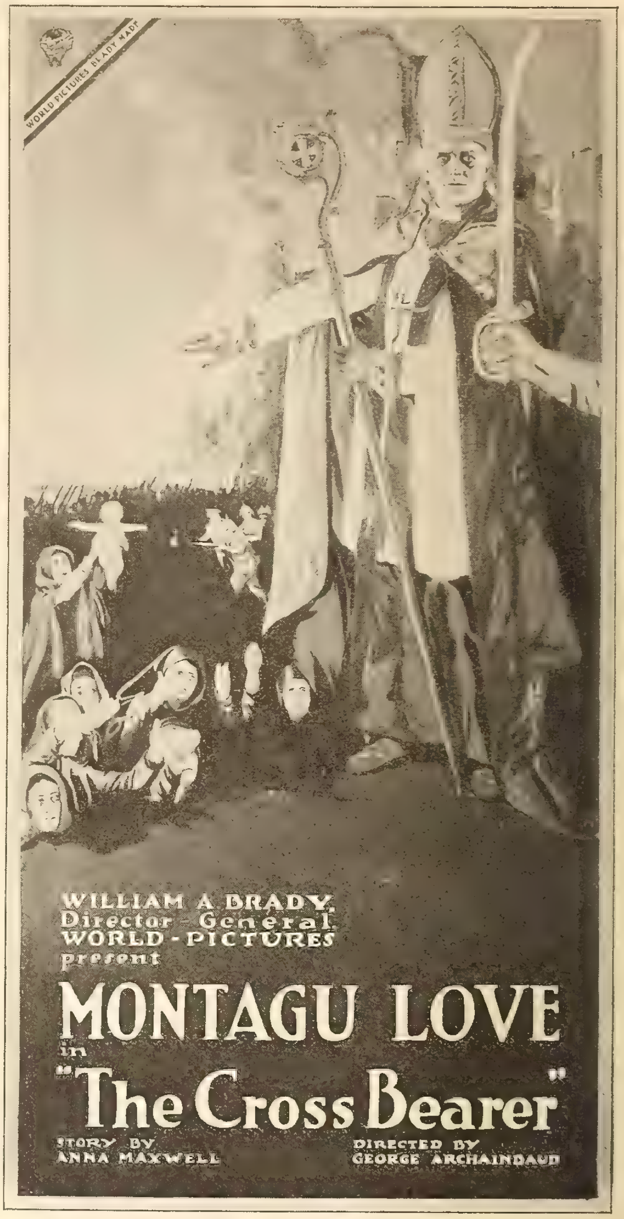
WORLD-PICTURES



His Eminence
JAMES CARDINAL GIBBONS

Said to a World Picture representative:

"I saw it and was much pleased."

"I wish to thank you in my own name—in that of the Faculty of Church and College, and also, in the name of our friends, for the splendid projection of 'The Cross Bearer It was an artistic and historical treat. Its gripping reality of Cardinal Mercier's heroism and the patriotism of his dear Belgians were soul-stirring, and I congratulate the company that will release this picture to the public—teaching more favorably than words what low depths have been sounded by Teuton militarism."

WM. J. ENNIS, S.J., Prest.

"I have seen the picture entitled 'The Cross Bearer,' and I take pleasure in saying that it pleased me very much. It is artistically executed; the character of Cardinal Mercier is particularly attractive. The film deserves to be a great success from more than one point of view."

Yours sincerely,
(Signed) F. M. CONNELL, S.J.
Loyola College,
Baltimore.

"Your production, 'The Cross Bearer,' strongly expressive of Catholic patriotism, was viewed here on March 14th, 1918, and we as representatives of the Jesuit Order in Baltimore, heartily approve."

Rev. WILLIAM J. ENNIS, S.J., Rector.
Saint Ignatius Church,
Baltimore.

"The picture was a treat. It shows the religion and patriotism of a nation that has won the sympathy and admiration of the world. And that will surely recommend it to the people."

Yours sincerely,
JOHN A. SMITH,
Corpus Christi Rectory,
Baltimore.

"I want to thank you for the real pleasure you afforded me by inviting me to the private representation of 'The Cross Bearer.' I have no hesitation to state that it is such as to do good."

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) ALBERT WRIGIN.
St. Mary's Seminary,
Baltimore.

"In the heroic character it, 'The Cross Bearer,' attributes to the Belgian Cardinal it does not exaggerate the bravery displayed by Cardinal Mercier in his correspondence and interviews with the invaders and his sermons to his people. It is not unjust in its pictured charges of disgraceful conduct on the part of the Germans. I shall be glad to advise others to see the picture when it is exhibited to the public."

Respectfully,
W. T. McKENNA.
St. Elizabeth's Church,
Baltimore.

"The motion picture production, 'The Cross Bearer, which was given a private showing to the Catholic clergy of Baltimore at this theatre, is a splendid picture and is INTENSELY STRONG TO HAVE HELD SUCH AN AUDIENCE TO A MAN AND HAVE THEM APPLAUD SO SPONTANEOUSLY AT THE ENDING.

"You have a very valuable piece of material and it will be a big success."

LEONARD B. McCAUGHLIN,
Business Manager.
Auditorium Theatre,
Baltimore.

THE MASTER BUILDER

THIS MAN, W. W. Hodkinson, has done more to benefit the exhibitor than any other individual in the industry. And his newest development—the "Hodkinson Co-partnership"—will prove to be a most wonderful profit-producer for the exhibitor who is fortunate enough to be able to avail himself of Hodkinson Service.

The exhibitor has W. W. Hodkinson to thank for the passing of the "Nickelodeon"—for it was he who opened the first ten-cent theatre. That was in 1907.

It was W. W. Hodkinson who insisted that better pictures must accompany better prices of admission and better theatres. And longer runs followed as a natural result.

In 1913 W. W. Hodkinson began his fight aginst "Producer Dominance." In 1914 he organized a national distributing organization as a direct result of the expansion of his efforts. He retired from the Presidency of that Corporation when he found that the methods of the producers did not accord with his broad-visioned plans to benefit the exhibitor.

To-day W. W. Hodkinson, Master Builder, is taking up his building just where he left off. What he plans to do—and is doing—is interestingly told in a Folder just published. As you value your future, you should read it. It tells you how Mr. Hodkinson can help you—how he can increase your prosperity!

This is not idle talk. Send for the Folder and be convinced. It will tell you a story that will amaze you with its breadth, fascinate you with its possibilities and convince you with its sincerity.

TRIANGLE

Still More Proof

We have told you from week to week of the new Triangle policy—better pictures, better service, fair and square business methods, every possible effort to help the exhibitor make money.

Whether or not this new Triangle policy has been a success can best be judged by what exhibitors have to say. The following are excerpts from just a few of the letters that we have recently received. Read them over.

"The pictures have always been good and far above the standard of anything I could have bought of any other company."

Ideal Theatre,
Centralia, Wash.

"I think Triangle is the only distributing concern that is backing the exhibitor with REAL assistance instead of hot air and high-sounding phrases. I am boosting Triangle and it brings results. You have the best program service on the market today."

W. C. Sellmer,
Bandon, Oregon.

"You seem to be one of the very few film companies who act as though there might be an honest exhibitor once in a great while. You are to be congratulated on your stand on the war tax and the exhibitors over the country should long remember you."

J. R. Thompson,
The Sequoyah Theatre,
Tahlequah, Okla.

"I must say that the last two months have been good for me. I have had a remarkable success with the Triangle. My Sunday business has doubled what it used to be."

M. Nielson,
Colonial Theatre,
Eureka, Calif.

"I am a new Triangler and proud to be. Program is the real sure thing, and certainly does help when you do not have to pay the war tax."

John Shirk,
Pictureland Theatre,
Kokomo, Ind.

"We have been using your program two a week for the last five months with great success and our treatment by your Philadelphia branch during that time has been very satisfactory."

W. V. Massey,
Masonic Theatre,
Beverley, N. J.

"It is a pleasure to recommend Triangle picures as well as your service."

A. B. Cook,
Majestic Theatre,
Jackson,
Miss.

TRIANGLE

"We are running Triangle features five nights a week and also all your comedies. I have nothing but praise for the all-round square deal treatment that Triangle is giving us."

Edward Walz,
Majestic Theatre,
Easthampton, Mass.

"I have fooled away a lot of money trying to get something better, but the truth is that Triangle is the one that brings in profit and pleases our people."

W. S. Patterson,
Swetland Opera House,
Mayville, N. Y.

"I wish to add that I cannot see how any exhibitor can possibly get on these hard times without Triangles and Keystones on his program."

J. D. Snively, Mgr.,
Gem Theatre,
Oilton, Okla.

"Have been showing Triangle current releases and Hart and Fairbanks reissues exclusive seven days service for several months with tremendous success. Triangle program made it possible for us to raise the regular prices. Excellent service—fine lobbies."

Dreamland Theatre,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

"For consistency and general all-round excellence, Triangle has been our one best bet. Triangle productions are steadily increasing in quality and trade-mark strength, and the story values are such to offset the drawing powers of any particular star."

Majestic Theatre,
Tulsa, Okla.

"I find that Triangle film is one of the cheapest in the long run and best all-round pictures that I have ever used since taking over the management of the Majestic Theatre."

Majestic Theatre,
Wellington, Kans.

"We have always found the Triangle pictures a drawing card and our patrons have always been highly pleased with all your films as well as your treatment of us as exhibitors."

Orpheum Theatre,
Wimbledon, N. D.

"While business was very dull about six months ago, your company graciously made me a reduction in the film rentals; and for this reason I raised the film rentals voluntarily because I am now making good money."

Xydias Theatres Co.,
Hattiesburg, Miss.

Put your Business on a Sound Basis by Joining

United Picture Theatres of America, Inc.

You face rising war costs—uncertainty of supply—cut-throat competition—burdens of film waste and of unscientific distribution—the ups and downs of a market in which YOU, playing a lone hand, may be caught in a squeeze and pinched severely.

WE INVITE YOU TO POOL YOUR BUYING POWER FOR THE COMMON GOOD

Buy reasonably, cooperatively, wisely. Demand excellence in the pictures, moderation in the price—as wholesale purchasers you can secure both. Cut costly overhead, expensive exchanges, superfluous prints—get down to WAR-TIME ECONOMY in the distribution of films, just as in the operation of your houses.

THAT IS UNITED THEATRES INSURANCE, AND IT WILL REDUCE YOUR RENTALS FROM 30 TO 50 PER CENT

"Little Talks with Foreign Buyers"—No. 6

"PARALTALK"

By

Paul H. Cromelin

President

PARALTA PLAYS are the "pick of the pictures." They are the "guaranteed program"—their quality and drawing power is guaranteed under a unique plan that we will be mighty glad to tell you about on inquiry. The result is that in picking Paralta Plays for its foreign customers, the Inter-Ocean is giving them a chance for big profits. For there is no greater mistake than the assumption that the foreign picture patron fails to discriminate. You, the FOREIGN BUYER, know how little ground there is for such a feeling. The foreign picturegoer, as YOU know, is every bit as particular about what he sees on the screen as the American picture patron. He believes in the best! A mediocre cinema show leaves him disappointed, and tends to lose that cinema his patronage. Inter-Ocean is so "close" to the foreign field that it knows the tastes of audiences in all sections of the globe, and how to cater to that taste. IT CAN BE DONE THROUGH STARS LIKE BARRISCALE, KERRIGAN, WALTHALL AND GLAUM IN GUARANTEED PARALTA PLAYS. Paralta is just another reason why Inter-Ocean are the "largest distributors of films in foreign fields." All the leading foreign buyers are doing business with us, because they have found it pays to have an American representative who can pick winners like Paralta Plays and the others on our list.

FOREGONE CONCLUSIONS!!

That the International Film Service Co., Inc., would pick the "Specialists in One-Reel Features" to release and distribute their new comedies in black and white.

THE KATZENJAMMER KIDS and HAPPY HOOLIGAN

That the Educational Films Corporation of America would snap at the opportunity to present these famous cartoon characters in conjunction with Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature" and Bruce's "Scenics Beautiful."

FOR THE FOLLOWING AND MANY OTHER EXCELLENT REASONS

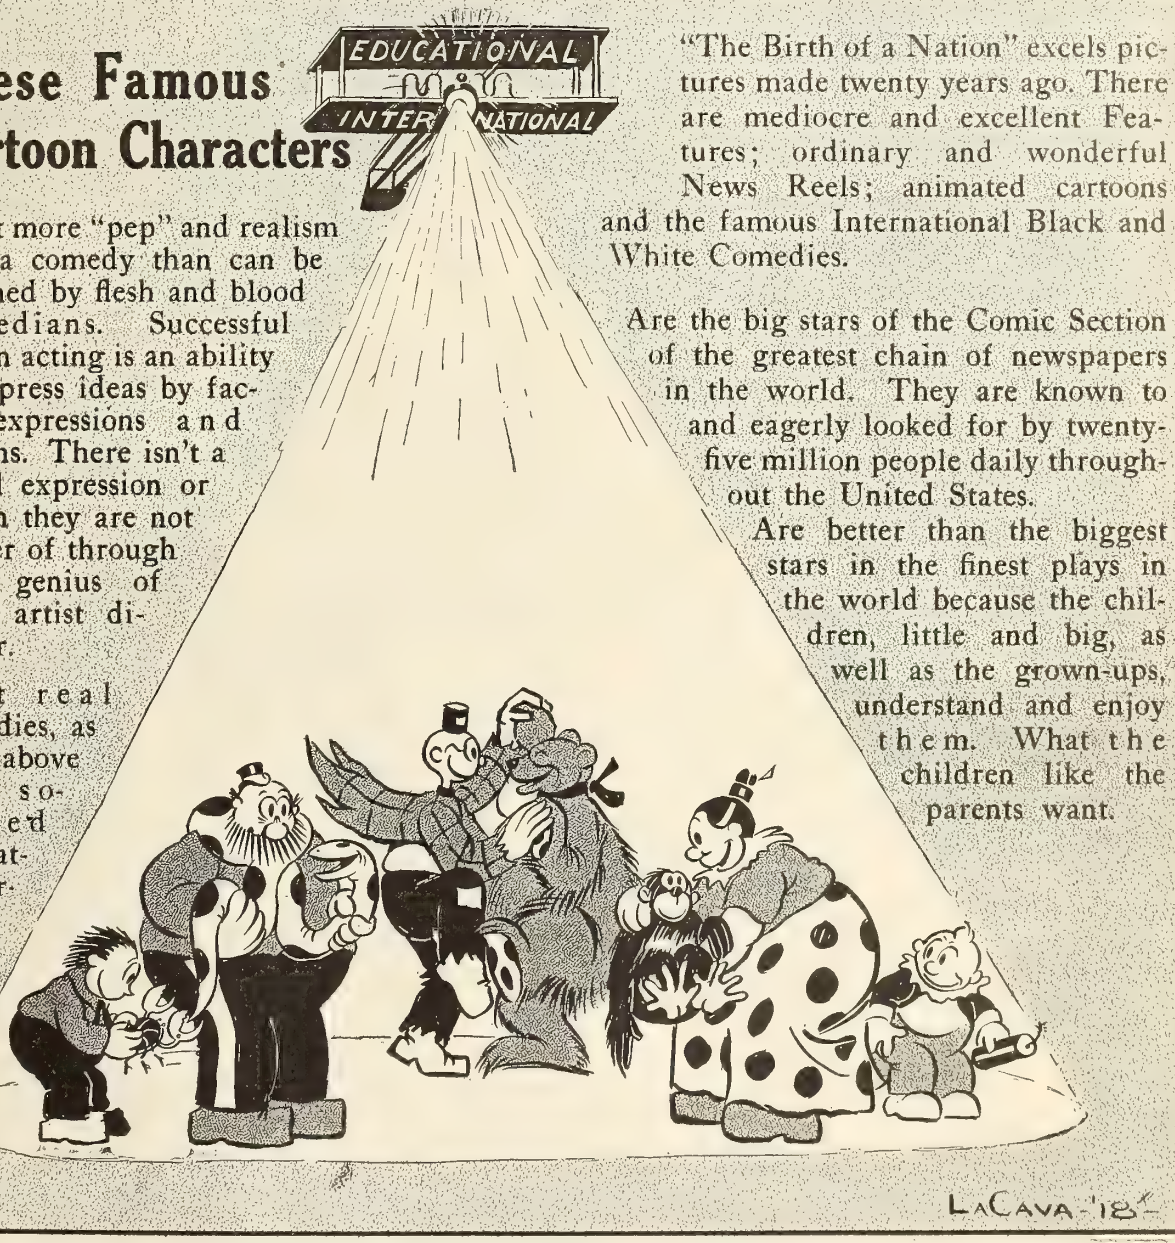
inject more "pep" and realism into a comedy than can be attained by flesh and blood comedians. Successful screen acting is an ability to express ideas by facial expressions and actions. There isn't a facial expression or action they are not master of through the genius of their artist director.

Enact real comedies, as far above the so-called animated cartoons as "The Birth of a Nation" excels pictures made twenty years ago. There are mediocre and excellent Features; ordinary and wonderful News Reels; animated cartoons and the famous International Black and White Comedies.

Are the big stars of the Comic Section of the greatest chain of newspapers in the world. They are known to and eagerly looked for by twenty-five million people daily throughout the United States.

Are better than the biggest stars in the finest plays in the world because the children, little and big, as well as the grown-ups, understand and enjoy them. What the children like the parents want.



S. L. Rothapfel, the most astute judge of picture values in the world, in answer to an exhibitors question as to what constitutes a good programme said in the Motion Picture News of March 30th.

"Use about 600 or 700 feet of good topical film, 300 feet of Scenic and a Good Cartoon Comedy."

"Get on the band wagon," Mr. Exhibitor and establish a Katzenjammer Kids' Day and a Happy Hooligan Day weekly at your theatre.

EDUCATIONAL FILMS CORPORATION OF AMERICA
729 7th AVENUE NEW YORK, N.Y.

And S. L. Rothapfel has booked the "Katzenjammer" and "Hooligan" cartoon comedies for first run in New York at his Rialto and Rivoli Theatres.

This famous pair, and their more famous parent, are known to millions through their appearance in the 200 newspapers of the N. Y. Evening Mail Syndicate. Now they will be known to millions more, for Goldberg will have a page every Sunday in the Hearst Newspapers—insuring country-wide publicity of the most profitable sort for exhibitors who contract for these new animated cartoons shortly to be released.

They're coming out—Mike and Ike—once a week in a one-reel production—coming to draw crowds of fun seekers. There's money in every laugh—and you get the benefit of a colossal advertising campaign in hundreds of daily newspapers.

Screen Opinions says:

"'A Pair of Sixes' is the best thing, by all odds, that Taylor Holmes has done. Those who see it, if there is a drop of humor in their blood, will chuckle continuously—and every now and then the chuckles will be interrupted by a good, big, roaring laugh. Nothing has been skimped to make it a rattling good play—and it shows it."

Speaking Of—And For—the Masses

MR. METCALFE, of Life, says that he would like to review photoplays if he could ever catch one standing still long enough.

He has evidently found one—in Revelation; and he gives the picture high praise—for Mr. Metcalfe. He even acknowledges that it fulfills dramatic values. Nazimova's acting, he says, accomplishes artistic heights.

In the same review the Life critic takes his customary slams at motion pictures in general. They don't express art, he says. He puts them to one side as a different medium intended for a different public—different than the public which patronizes the stage, good books, etc.

Previously Mr. Metcalfe stated that motion pictures, as now made, are only up to the intelligence of a twelve year old child.

We sympathize with Mr. Metcalfe over his unsuccessful attempts to catch photoplays at theatres—even, as he says, with the aid of a detective, a divination rod and a seventh sense.

But this, obviously, makes him a very incompetent critic of motion pictures; he doesn't see enough of them to be able to make anything like a true criticism.

Secondly, his statements are weakened by his evident rancor and his ill-concealed wonderment over the picture's extraordinary popularity.

He evidently believes that pictures are intended only for the masses.

Fine! We believe so.

But we disagree flatly with the contention that the masses do not want art. As one member of them and speaking for them we believe they do and furthermore that their taste for art is fundamentally sound.

They delight for instance in the correct expression of life's realities; and, surely, this is art.

IN one of the best little essays we have ever read on motion pictures—in the current issue of "Independent Advertising," Mr. Leroy Fairman says:

"As to whether or not the motion picture is artistically satisfying there is naturally a difference of opinion, due to individual conception of what is artistic and what is not. If a picture represents and expresses life and is mechanically satisfactory, it is good art. Otherwise not. If the majority of pictures distort and misrepresent life they are bad art."

This is just the trouble with too many motion pictures today, Mr. Fairman; and if herein is contained Mr. Metcalfe's complaint he is largely right.

Too many motion pictures do "distort and misrepresent life."

Mechanically—or technically—they are highly "satisfactory."

But in subject and appeal they fall far short of their great range.

The masses are yearning for "good art." They want, just as we stated in last week's editorial: "Pictures with whimsy and love—and tears and laughter—and action and heart throb—and over and under and through the motions and emotions a knowledge of and love of 'folks.'"

And this means—simply—the true expression of life's realities. And this is art. And this is what the masses—meaning, happily, most all of us—want.

They are not getting it in motion pictures today because there is a large insufficiency of good writers and their best efforts. Just that and nothing else!

You will never get the true expression of life from immature writers—from men whose written words never have and never will be printed by the best makers of books and magazines—or made into good stage plays.

You will get it only from those who know and can tell of life—our best story writers, and novelists.

* * * *

SAYS Mr. Fairman, again: "For a time they (the masses) are pleased and satisfied by the novel, the spectacular and the meretricious: in the end they will turn inevitably toward the artistically correct and satisfying things."

Truth—Simple and undeniable!

Here's a big problem—we know of no greater—for the makers of motion pictures. The handwriting is on the wall—now.

Let us put it in a commercial way.

* * * *

WE have at least sixty millions of people—probably many more—in this country who go to motion pictures, if only, in many cases, once a month.

This, let us say, is our potential audience.

Of these the picture theatres received a bare eight million a day.

The Advisory Board Speaks

OUR advisory board of exhibitors makes its first expression of opinion this week on what pictures the public wants.

The results are interesting and of value. The producers' attention is especially directed to them.

Attention is also called to the fact that this and last week's releases include some prominent features which, while excellent otherwise, are anything but war-time pictures.

The people of New York awakened Sunday morning to very serious and depressing war news. Citizens who walked Broadway noticed the grave expression on everyone's face. Laughter was a rarity; smiles were few.

In such situations people naturally turn to motion picture theatres for amusement. In London today they are packing the theatres which house musical shows and farces. Serious drama is not wanted—especially those dramas which leave the audience tired, strained and unhappy.

It so happened that on this very Sunday pictures were featured at two of New York's biggest photoplay houses which were not suited to the people and the day.

Of course the management of these theatres had booked the pictures some time ahead, and on Sunday morning, with the receipt of the news, they could not change. They were not to blame, nor were the manufacturers, because they started the making of the pictures months ago.

Just the same, the lesson of this war, from an amusement standpoint, must be keenly realized by the makers of amusement. The screen has a most important place to fill right now, and it must fill it.

War Figures and War Pictures

PERHAPS figures will drive home more forcefully the amusement demands of the war period.

There are now two and a half million young Americans either under the colors or about to be called.

This means that some one or more persons at home—several million in all—are strained with worry and dread. Daily this depression deepens as the titantic struggle reaps an increasing harvest of human lives.

These worried ones are turning to the theatres for surcease of sorrow. Picture theatres are the natural places for them to go to.

But they won't go more than once if they are greeted with unhappiness, with the morbid depressing, with the very kind of sorrow they are fleeing from.

An Incident with a Point

THE following incident is interesting from several angles:

The other day a picture house in the heart of a district called "Little Germany" in New York's upper East Side booked "The Eagle's Eye." A crowded house viewed the picture without demonstration, and without waiting for the rest of the program filed out in a quiet, orderly fashion to admit another crowd waiting outside. The proprietor heard no complaints whatsoever.

One conclusion to be drawn, evidently, is this: Fact pictures, or pictures so largely fact either in setting or theme as to be convincing, accomplish their purposes. They don't antagonize needlessly; they do drive home the essential lessons of the great war.

Parcel Post and Censorship

IF the Government takes over the Express Companies—and it is quite probable that this will happen—an interesting situation will arise.

Having two avenues of distribution, namely the mails and the express facilities, the Government will naturally consider and decide which avenue is best and most economical.

Thanks to the activities of several prominent postmasters the parcel post zones have been advanved to one hundred and fifty miles and the weight limit has been increased to seventy pounds.

This weight limit would include eight reels of films and the distance limit would suit our present exchange zones.

Hence why not film by parcel post—at a much less expense and a decrease in delays and damage?

Also a doing away of much of the reprehensible stealing of films now going on after the reels leave the exchange. The thieves won't relish Federal prosecution.

And last, but best of all by far, when films are admitted to the mails, why not a simple Federal enactment putting them under the restrictions of other mail matter and thus doing away forever with the outrageous bugaboo of Federal Censorhsip?

Joseph A. McKinney

THE very sad and shocking news has just reached us of the sudden death from pneumonia of Joseph A. McKinney.

The sorrow we feel will be felt in many an executive office in the New York film district by every one who was favored with the friendship of this modest, able, straightforward business man and gentleman.

Does anyone doubt that the number could easily be doubled—if pictures were truer to life, more satisfying—if they were patterned closer to the hearts and minds of the sixty millions?

We hear a great deal about the economic wastes of the industry.

But what of the waste for which lack of art is responsible?

Doubling the attendance at picture theatres—narrowing the wide gap between those who would go and those who do—would yield the industry upwards of three hundred millions of dollars a year.

We are fully aware of the motion pictures' economic handicaps—the daily change, uneconomic and ineffective distribution, inefficient exhibition and theatre advertising.

But these handicaps are lessening; and once national advertising gets its true grip upon this wonderful commodity, the masses will guide their steps in great numbers and straight away to the pictures that tell of life and satisfy.

In these days, inevitably to come, that producer will be great whose pictures portray the stories that only good writers can tell. And he will, in all probability, be the producer who is mostly doing that now.

W A Johnston

Serving It with Speed and Ginger

JUST when we get ready to bang out some excited adjectives on the typewriter about Rothapfel's securing of the Metropolitan Opera House for motion pictures we get a later bulletin declaring that the project is off.

It appears from the daily-paper versions that the high priests of the operatic temple only consented to throw their doors open to motion pictures with the presentation of Griffith's war spectacle in mind. And since the New York opening of "Hearts of the World" can't wait until the Metropolitan directors are ready—to our peculiar sense of humor there seems to be irony in that statement—the Metropolitan will be as dark as ever this Summer.

Now it is said that the Griffith production will be seen in New York within two weeks—perhaps at the Lyric.

We are sorry, not so much because a screen won't rest on the Metropolitan's stage—blamed if we can bend a knee to the Horseshoe's diamond display—but we are sorry for the Metropolitan's directors, who may never appreciate what they have missed. "Rothapfel and Griffith"—what a combination!

One of the dailies hints that some of the Metropolitan subscribers protested against allowing pictures within its sanctified walls.

Protested! Ye gods!

"Rothapfel and Griffith!" That gets more awe from us than all the poseurs who ever sat—or snored—through the arias of Farrar, Garden or Cavalieri. Page 2027

SPEAKING of Hoover—there were two dinners on the cards last week for New York film men.

One, the annual beefsteak affair of the New York F.I.L.M. Club; the other, a tribute by his friends and associates to Edward Earl of the Nicholas Power Company.

P. A. Powers attended both dinners—and gave a speech at each.

And never said a word about the work he is doing as chairman of the Government's film commission on Training Camp Activities, though he is giving his full energy to the job.

Which, to our mind, is the last word in modesty.

Of course, neither of the dinners had anything to do with the training camp work, but you know the way the average after-dinner speaker would have taken the opportunity to drag his hobby in for a long-winded ride.

You know—accidentally, as it were, so to speak, that reminds me, just in passing, by the way—and so on. All with the Jack Horner air of "See what a good boy am I."

P. A. Powers didn't. So we have done it here.

FRANK REMBUSCH is trying to start something. We don't know what he has up his sleeve—perhaps we shouldn't even hint that he has anything concealed there—but we are going to watch with much interest that Hotel Astor meeting of producers and exhibitors which he is promoting.

Brother Rembusch has long been a booster for some sort of co-operative "producer-exhibitor" movement. Now that there is a plenitude and a surplus of them in the field, Frank evidently would like to see everybody—including the various co-operative promoters—get together and talk it over.

Don't know just what it means.

If Frank were from Kilkenny we'd think he desired an old home week, with a county fair and a wake thrown in.

But Frank is a Hoosier.

A Hoosier—h'm—maybe that means something.

Anyway, the meeting is scheduled for the week of Monday, April 8th. Meanwhile other interesting things have been happening in the co-operative arena. You'll find the story on page 2025.

* * * * *

WE start a new series of feature articles this week—"Letters of a Self-Made Exhibitor to His Son." All due apologies are here tendered to George Horace Lorimer and his "Letters of a Self-Made Business Man."

The self-made man's son has purchased a picture theater—which provides the starting point for the letters. According to father's epistles the head of the family would sooner have had his son buy the green cheese rights on the moon. And we can't blame him, judging from some of the troubles that Friend Son runs up against in the course of his exhibiting career.

There will be five letters in the series—appearing about every other week. Page 2022

* * * * *

WE have been waiting for this week's instalment in Wm. A. Johnston's series of imaginary interviews.

We have wanted to know the answer to the question "What Kind of a Fellow is—Collins?"

Half of our interest has been because of the things he has done in the picture field—the same reason for your interest.

The other half—because of what he has done in the publishing field, because of the importance of the McClure publishing organization, because of its "Win the War" magazine, because——

Oh, well, for all the reasons a combination " motion picture-newspaper man " would feel. Page 2229

* * * * *

EVERY now and then you hear someone say, "Why haven't we more scenario writers who really know production, who can work shoulder to shoulder with a producer, who turn out continuity that is ready for the screen?"

The oft-repeated phrase came to our mind last week when we heard that Phil Lang was winding up his affairs with Kalem, since that company has temporarily suspended production work.

Seven years with one company in this picture game—that's almost a record. Seven years—scenario editor, production managing, supervising film editing, everything in the game from A to Z—from the time the game was "A" until the present. (We're not brave enough to hazard a guess as to what letter of the alphabet the present represents.) Page 2026

William Kalem Wright, by the way, while not producing (we have our own private suspicion that he is merely sitting like a wary cat, ready to jump back any time the game looks interesting) is a very busy person managing one of the busiest commercial laboratories in the business, the Kalem plant.

Letters from a Self-Made Exhibitor to His Son

[Written by Bill Grimm to his son Cuthbert. Bill is the owner of a chain of theatres showing pictures and vaudeville. Cuthbert has invested a legacy of ten thousand in a theatre in Skowhegan, New York, and has just announced this fact in a long letter to his father]

Dear Cuthbert:

I think "matriculated" was the word your mother used the other day in describing to Mrs. Smythe what happened to you at college and I hope it covers the case. Anyway it sounds silly enough to be correct. And I guess that what has just happened to you in Skowhegan will amount to about the same thing eventually. My little dictionary says that "matriculate" means to "learn, acquire, gain, receive education," and, old son, that just hits your immediate future to a "T." You are going to LEARN a lot and you are certainly going to GET yours.

Now I don't want you to get the idea that I am nursing an eighteen caret grouch over this thing. Not at all. For a time it had me fighting for air and I didn't dare to register my burning thought on the dictaphone for fear of melting the wax record and perhaps losing a perfectly respectable stenographer, but I feel better now. The money was yours to do as you would with. My only thought is that I would have liked to have seen you take a whirl at Wall Street, play the ponies or buck a crooked roulette wheel where you had some chance of a run for your money.

Some smart guy, years ago, delivered the wisest saying of his time when he opined that there was "one born every minute," but that was in the days before the motion picture came in and took a front seat. Now the average has been raised to about four a minute and it gives me some satisfaction to assure you that you own a quarter of the honors for that particular minute which celebrated your entrance into this vale of tears and sorrows.

When I advised you against investing in a theatre, I spoke out of a long and bitter experience as I have been in the business since the time when the words "star," "feature," "studio," "director," and "publicity," were unknown. In those days they just MADE a picture. And the star was greatly hampered in her characterizations because she was worried for fear that the boss wouldn't be able to dig up her fifteen dollars at the end of the week.

But I had a man's size hunch that my advice to you would have the effect that good advice usually does, and that was to send you flying into the business. Why you should pick on Skowhegan I don't know, but it's all one; you'll get yours as quickly there as anywhere else. I expect to open a new house in about three months and I'll hold open a position as operator or head usher for you. I understand from your mother that your exit from college left you with the right to add several letters after your name. Your investment in a motion picture theatre entitles you to two more, "F.E." degrees I think they call 'em. Well, you might call this the third degree and the letters stand for "Fool Exhibitor." You may never hear yourself called that but you will learn in time that it is the pet name for every theatre manager who signs on the dotted line for service. In polite parlance you are termed an account and assigned a key number (without extra charge), but the first time you make a holler about punk service you automatically join that rapidly growing order of "F.E.'s" which now boasts a membership of about 18,000. What you will call the exchange managers has no place on a written page which must travel through the mails.

"Don't you forget it, Son, egotism is the middle name of every exchangeman. They think the exhibitor is a pin-headed simp."

As you are undoubtedly aware the old man has quite a respectable bundle of the "necessary" tucked away in bomb-proof vaults, but I want to remind you that I didn't make it in the picture business, I got it IN SPITE of my theatres. The picture business is my one vice and it is more expensive than any other bad habit I could have acquired after the most careful deliberation. I have eleven houses now and will soon have twelve but that means something akin to adding ten more grains of dope a day to the hophead.

"Keep your eagle eye open against the tricks of the trade! This business is where they grow thickest, and each side has got to look out for his watch and chain."

I know from sad experience that advice means nothing in your young life, but I want to caution you on one point. Whenever fillum salesmen or exchange managers ask you if you are any relative of old Bill Grimm you deny your parentage profanely and vehemently because if that gang down there in New York find out that you are my pride and joy, they'll set right out to do all the things to you they have tried to do to me in the past seven years. In comparison to the average hard boiled egg I am, in the estimations of those birds, petrified hen fruit. In the old days of the "trust" when I was a little feller, the things they pulled on me would bring tears to the eyes of a German strafer. Then I got wise and began to acquire theatres and control my territories and you may take it from me, in my sweet and jovial way, I got back at them, playing one against the other as they had played my oppositions against me. Some of that old pirate crew are still in the game and they would enjoy mightily taking you by the heels and shaking you down for your entire wad.

You assure me that you have sunk nine thousand beautiful round iron men in that showshop you have acquired in Skowhegan and I say to you that for that amount you ought to have secured a theatre which cost at least forty thousand dollars to open, as that is about the way to estimate present values in theatre properties. I am just as patriotic as the next fellow but I can't get away from the fact that what your Uncle Sammie is doing to theatres in the matter of taxes is something woeful. Old John Barleycorn is about the only guy who can give us a run for our money when it comes to individual industrial contributions to the sinews of war. Understand I'm not kicking I'm just trying to cheer you up.

You have lived with me long enough to have some few ideas on theatre management and I won't confuse you with any gratuitous advice. As soon as things begin to happen to you write me and I'll try and tell you what to do. Naturally, your opposition is a pup. Every exhibitor in the business is a pup to his opposition and that means you too. He probably is no better nor no worse than the rest. The town isn't big enough for both of you and he is going to try his darnedest to put you under the hammer and you are going to entertain the same cheerful intentions toward him.

In closing I want to say one thing more to you. I don't want you to think that exchange managers and fillum salesmen are any worse than they average. They honestly believe that the average exhibitor is a pin headed simp who would be half-witted if he had just a little more brains. They also incline to the idea that the exhibition of motion pictures just naturally turns a man into a yeggman and that they must be ever on the alert when doing business with exhibitors or they will be minus their watches and scarf pins at the end of the deal. And exhibitors all believe that exchangemen have taken a post graduate course in the gentle art of "gypping." And from some of the artistic work I have see them turn out I am almost ready to second the motion.

Write me when things begin to warm up and I'll do what I can for you. Mother sends her love and sympathy.

Affectionately,

DAD.

P. S.—In making out your questionnaire state that you have a theatre and twenty-two film exchanges dependent on you. It ought to win exemption for you.

Sunday Shows Bill Is Introduced

New York Upstate Exhibitors Now Expected to Heed Battle Call and Join Balance of State in Campaign to Pass Measure—Clause Added

On Thursday, March 21, the Motion Picture Option Bill was introduced into the New York State Legislature by Senator George F. Thompson of Niagara and Assemblyman Clarence F. Welsh of Albany. The bill will have a hearing before the joint codes committees of the Senate and Assembly on April 3.

The fate of the bill in reality, according to the Allied Committee of the Motion Picture Industry, now depends upon the organized campaign of the Upstate exhibitors. The exhibitors of the lower part of New York have been working shoulder to shoulder for weeks, and the campaign is well organized and developed. It remains for the Upstate body, it is declared, to say whether the bill shall become a law or not.

New Clause Added

The bill is the same as recently approved, with the exception of an added clause suggested by the Conference of Mayors of the State of New York, which has been inserted into the bill as introduced.

This clause reads: "Nothing herein contained, however, shall prohibit these Common Council or other local governing body from authorizing motion picture exhibitions at any hour after 2 o'clock in the afternoon on such day."

This measure was approved by the State Conference of Mayors and it is also announced that it has the endorsement of the New York State Federation of Labor. The People's Institute, through its head, John Collier, has emphatically approved of the bill and declared it a public necessity.

The introduction of the bill was in charge of a committee representing the motion picture interests and composed of Max Spiegel, secretary of the Mitchel H. Mark Realty Corporation, controlling the Strand chain of theatres; Henry C. Price, representing the exhibitors of Buffalo, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Buffalo Does Its Share

The Buffalo exhibitors' committee on Sunday opening of moving picture shows throughout the State advocated the passage of the law in the Legislature to legalize shows on the Sabbath, at the weekly Legislative hearing at Republican headquarters March 18. Henry C. Price, attorney for the committee, made a strong argument for the bill and urged local Assemblymen and Senators to favor it.

Mr. Price pointed out to the committee that the bill would afford amusement for thousands who otherwise would be unable to see a moving picture show. He credited the moving picture houses with doing a great patriotic work in the issuance of propaganda for the Liberty Bonds, War Stamps and other Governmental announcements. He declared that the moving picture houses have been co-operating in every way with the Government, in food conservation, by publishing the bulletins of the food administrator. He said the Government got publicity and reached thousands who otherwise would not have been communicated with.

Outside of the patriotic work done by the moving picture houses, Mr. Price showed the educational feature as well as the entertainment provided in the films. He said the Sunday shows were wanted by the people, and if they had their say there would be one in every city in the State. The bill provides that the shows shall be legal from 2 P. M. Sunday wherever there is not a local ordinance to the contrary.

A committee of the local exhibitors consists of the following: Harold B. Franklin, chairman; Joseph A. Schuchert, treasurer; Thomas E. Sullivan, executive secretary; Earl L. Crabb, George C. Hall, Edward L. Hyman, Jules H. Michael and Ira Mosher. It was brought out at the hearing that the bill is the same as introduced last year, which was approved by the conference of mayors. The bill does not force anything on a community. It is a matter of local option. The present law which the bill amends is obsolete in that it was framed 130 years ago, when conditions were far different than at the present time. This was when moving picture shows were unheard of and no specified mention is made of the movies. Statistics show that in the State there are 1,200 show houses, with a total capacity of 750,000. The daily attendance is 1,000,000, with 1,500,000 as the Sunday attendance.

During the administration of Mayor Adam an attempt was made to prevent the moving picture houses in Buffalo operating Sunday. The police were enjoined from closing the theatres. An appeal was taken, but was not carried to the highest court.

Conference in Albany

Work on the Motion Picture Option Bill started on March 19 at the Hotel Ten Eyck in Albany with a two-day conference between the exhibitor captains, appointed at the previous Albany session, and the Allied Committee of the Motion Picture Industry. At this previous meeting an exhibitor captain was appointed for each of the fifty-one senatorial districts of the State, the exhibitor captain in turn being given the authority of appointing three associate exhibitors as aides to cover the assembly divisions of his district.

These exhibitor captains were appointed to sound out the sentiment of their districts, get in touch with the big men of their communities, see and talk with their legislators, in fact to do everything in their power to organize public opinion behind the bill. This, in reality, was going to the bottom of the ladder and starting the real fight there. Thus the campaign was organized in exactly the way the State and national political parties conduct their own work.

These exhibitor captains got together at the Ten Eyck on Tuesday and presented detailed reports of the work accomplished in their individual districts. These reports indicate a general change in the sentiment of legislators toward the exhibition of motion pictures on Sunday since the subject was agitated at the legislative session a year ago.

The State situation was carefully examined. Exhibitor captains who had failed to respond were immediately succeeded by live wires, so that at the present moment the motion picture people have an active and aggressive fighter for their interests in every State district.

The fruits of the campaign are already manifesting themselves. In Buffalo, for instance, an exhibitors' committee for Sunday opening is conducting a strenuous campaign. In the past week this organization has secured the unanimous support of all Buffalo daily and Sunday newspapers. These publications are running big news articles and half column editorials backing the campaign for the exhibition of Sunday motion pictures.

In Schenectady the exhibitors have organized and are pooling their advertising, buying half pages in the Schenectady newspapers to tell the public their reasons for wanting Sunday motion pictures. Exhibitors in other cities are doing this, following out a campaign carefully mapped out.

Texas Also in Same Boat

While the New York theatres are behind the universal movement for shows in picture theatres on Sunday, the State of Texas is passing through somewhat the same experience. In the case of the Southern state, however, a general move was made to close the houses tight on the Sabbath. This was advocated early in March; when the proposal came before the Texas State Legislature, and the proposal is still up.

It is said the Texas picture show was referred to by some legislators and newspapers in the same breath with the saloon, but in the Fort Worth Record motion pictures had, and have, a champion. It is probable this is the only large Texas newspaper that did come out flat-footed for the Sunday show, but thanks to its vigorous defense of a clean and wholesome amusement, which came in the shape of three-column editorials hailing the picture theatres as the "Social Center of Democracy," the soft pedal was put on the movement to close the theatres on the first day of each week.

Meanwhile, in New York State, the issue remains somewhat in doubt, but exhibitors hold forth much hope that their desires, as well as those of the public, for Sunday shows will be granted.

Battle Looming in Cooperative Field

Rembusch Wants New York Meeting to Talk It All Over—Ochs Finds Interest at Meetings—Pettijohn Likes His Own and Hodkinson's Plan Best

AFTER preliminary skirmishing extending over the past few weeks, the promoters of the various cooperative "producer to exhibitor" movements seemed in the past week to be drawing their battle lines tighter for what may develop into a hot "Spring drive."

Indianapolis has been the scene of the outpost engagements. But Frank Rembusch has discovered something better than a "seventy-four mile gun," and seems anxious to bring the final clash of battle into New York. In a long telegram to Motion Picture News received on Saturday he calls on all producers and exhibitors to meet in New York on April 6 to talk over the co-operative schemes.

Interesting Developments in Indiana

Mr. Rembusch's telegram followed an interesting few weeks in Indianapolis. First W. W. Hodkinson had explained his co-operate movement. Then last week Lee Ochs arrived to tell a meeting of exhibitors why the United Theatres plan was the only one. And then into his home bailiwick drifted Charles Pettijohn with lot of good words for his own "Producers-Exhibitors Affiliated" scheme, and as many more for the merits of the Hodkinson plan—but not a crumb for Lee Ochs.

On top of this comes the statement that C. E. Shurtleff, the Hodkinson sales manager, is expected in Indianapolis within a few days.

There are the cards as they have been dealt. That the next play will bring some real action is certain—but the reader's guess, piecing all the above facts together, is as good as ours. So go to it.

The Rembusch Telegram

Following is the text of the telegram sent by Frank Rembusch calling for the New York meeting:

"The question of close co-ordination between producers and exhibitors through some co-operative plan of distribution or booking agreements, or both, is now receiving the the earnest consideration of the entire industry. Many conflicting propositions are being offered, consequently neither producer nor exhibitors can benefit even though all may favor the general principles. Therefore to obtain the best thought and crystallize general sentiment a general conference of all exhibitors and producers will be held at the Hotel Astor in New York beginning Monday noon, April 8. All exhibitors and producers without regard to affiliations are invited to attend. No special invitations are being issued. All plans for better protection, greater economy and closer affiliation between producers and exhibitors can be presented and will be considered. Every state and large city is requested to send a representative, and all individual exhibitors and heads of producing companies are requested to be present, as there has never before been held a general meeting between producers and exhibitors, we believe much good can be obtained in a general conference.

FOR BETTER PICTURES

THIS week the Advisory Board of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau gets into action and the first of the answers to the questions, "What is the matter with pictures to-day and how can they be made better?" are printed. This is to be the greatest symposium in the history of the industry.

S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto and Rivoli, and Harold B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, both declare that the features should be made only as long as the story merits and that there should not be any number of reels fixed. There are some other mighty interesting points brought out.

Edward L. Hyman of the Victoria, Buffalo, and manager of one of the biggest neighborhood houses in the country, tells what audiences like his want.

Turn to page 2044 and read the first ones now.

From the Firing Line

The reports of Motion Picture News correspondents on the various activities of the co-operative promoters during the week follow:

Indianapolis, March 19.—In an address here yesterday before members of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League at the Hotel Severin, Lee A. Ochs, president of the United Picture Theatres of America, said that the exhibitor was the biggest factor in the motion picture industry and that this branch of the industry had more money invested, in dollars and cents, than the biggest men engaged in the producing end.

While the meeting was not largely attended, and was more or less of a failure in not getting a bigger hearing for Mr. Ochs, those that did attend expressed themselves enthusiastically for the idea of co-operative buying. Mr. Ochs visited Indianapolis to explain the merits of the United Picture Theatres of America with a view to doing a little missionary work in advance of C. R. Seelye, formerly business manager for Pathe, but now hooked up with the United, who will visit the city to dispose of the stock.

Mr. Ochs, in discussing the merits of the United, said that if he could get together 4200 days in the United States, the United was assured of success, and that he would be able to start buying film the minute he had 2000 days arranged for.

"Under our plan we have classified all the houses so that each house pays its share of the cost of producing the films we are to release for distribution. The little fellow will not have to pay as much for his time as the man who has a much bigger house. And, since the little fellow is the backbone of the industry, I confidently believe he will be the strongest element in the United."

In outlining his plan for the sale of stock he said that a one-day house would have to buy one share, a two-day house two shares, a three-day house three shares, and so on. He also said that every bit of the money invested in the stock would be used for the purchase of film with the exception of 10 per cent, which would be used for organization expenses.

"The entire 10 per cent, however," said Mr. Ochs, "does not go into the hands of any one man. Five per cent will go into the home office, to cover the cost of engaging branch managers, advertising and other expenses, hence the only possible loss you could suffer would be $25 on each share you buy."

He also told the exhibitors, after stating the stock was to sell at $250 a share, that all paper, slides, photos and other supplies would be sold to the exhibitors at cost. In concluding his talk he said that every exhibitor would have a say in the choice of the stars bought by the United.

General Pettijohn's Barrage

Indianapolis, March 20.—Charles C. Pettijohn is back in Indianapolis after an extended trip through the Middle West States in the interests of the newly formed Producers and Exhibitors—Affiliated, and reports a number of very interesting news-nubs. Just how long he will be in Indianapolis is problematical, he says, for he has pressing engagements in New York City following local conferences.

Coming, as he does, fresh from exhibitor camps in Detroit, Cleveland, Grand Rapids and Chicago, it is interesting to note the good words he has for the Hodkinson plan, which, he says, is meeting with favor everywhere he visited, while the United Picture Theatres, headed by Lee A. Ochs, is being questioned on every hand.

"Exhibitors generally feel the Hodkinson plan has some merits," said Mr. Pettijohn in discussing his trip with a representative of the News, "but that its advantages are all to the first run houses. They feel that if it can be broadened out to take care of the eighty per centers, as well as

Friends Banquet Edward Earl

One Hundred Honor President of Nicholas Power Company at McAlpin—Speeches, Dancing, Jazz Band and Everythin'

AS an expression of their esteem and affection about one hundred business associates and friends of Edward Earl, president of the Nicholas Power Company, tendered him a testimonial dinner in the Green Room of the McAlpin on Thursday evening, March 21. The dinner, which was elaborate and perfect in every detail, was followed by a number of speeches, after which dancing was enjoyed until a late hour.

G. Warren Landon officiated as toastmaster and introduced the various speakers with characteristic wit. Those who responded, all paying fitting tribute to the genius of the guest of the evening, were John A. Morrison, Frank H. Richardson, P. A. Powers, J. S. MacDonald, Will C. Smith and J. Robert Rubin.

Mr. Earl's turn to speak came when, upon being presented with a large basket of American Beauty roses and an engraved bronze plaque, he told how happy he was to receive the tokens of good-will.

The selections and songs, both new and old, by a negro jazz band, helped to make the evening a lively one.

Arthur Lang was chairman of the committee in charge, the other members being Alfred D. Bell, Louis Fendrick, C. W. Pearce, F. H. Richardson, G. Warren Landon, W. B. Morton and H. T. Edwards. The following were present:

At the head table—Mr. Earl, John A. Morrison, J. S. MacDonald, Arthur J. Lang, P. A. Powers, Richard T. Greene, G. Warren Landon, Selden Bacon, J. H. Hallberg, Will C. Smith, H. T. Edwards, Frank H. Richardson and George V. Tucker.

Table No. 1—F. Lowenstein, Max Greenbaum, Louis Fendrick, Franklin Johnston, Edwin C. Johnston, William McConnell, Clifford F. Taylor, E. T. Landon.

Table No. 2—James F. Stillman and guest, Bennett Goldsmith and guest, Theodore Uhlemann, F. O. Becker, V. M. Yates, R. P. Burrows.

Table No. 3—E. E. De Hart and guest, G. J. Fink and guest, Miss B. Knauer, S. S. Cassard, Charles J. Kohlbecker and one guest.

Table No. 4—A. D. Bell and guest, J. C. Bell and guest, S. B. Emmert and guest, C. W. Pierce and guest.

Table No. 5—W. B. Morton, C. G. Bourne, J. R. O'Neill, C. A. Bobst, T. R. Gautier, E. L. Doolittle, F. W. Swett, Arthur Knapp.

Table No. 6—George Vedder, William A. Johnston, E. K. Gillette, Robert Welsh, Fred Beecroft, R. G. George, William H. Bird, H. Van B. Valentine.

Table No. 7—Carlos Crombé, C. W. Crooks, George A. Coffin, William Bidwell, Juan Kunzler, Russell Phillipps, H. G. Croley, John J. Dalton.

Table No. 8—G. L. Thomas, S. R. Burns, Miss Elaine Sterne, Mrs. M. L. Sterne, A. S. Carter, A. C. Carruthers, Sidney B. Bowman, J. H. Garrison.

Table No. 9—F. G. Ortega, John Chalmers and guest, James Hoff, George Blaisdell, R. W. White and guest, James A. Milligan.

Table No. 10—Mrs. F. H. Richardson, Miss Freida DuBach, James S. McDonogh, A. L. Raven and guest, James Beecroft, J. R. Rubin, Louis Brock.

Table No. 11—William D. Reeder, Fred R. Keller, William J. Harber, Harold G. Elliott, Lesley Mason, Lawrence F. Unbach, T. O. Eltonhead, F. J. Bird.

Powers Committee Is Active

Confers in Washington and New York on Pictures for Training Camps—About 1,000 Pictures Are Available for Distribution

P. A. POWERS, chairman, and W. D. McGuire, Jr., secretary, of the War Camp Motion Picture Committee, were in Washington recently conferring with different officials regarding the plans for introducing at the camps the selected pictures now made available through the committee at small cost to the various welfare agencies. Conferences were held at the headquarters of the Knights of Columbus camp athletics, and with officials of the Red Cross and the Navy War departments.

The question of furnishing an adequate service to the battleships of the Navy is being examined in all its details by the Navy Department Commission and the committee of the industry. The chaplains have charge of the recreational work on shipboard. Motion pictures are particularly valuable on shipboard, as the facilities for recreation are much more limited than in the camps on shore. They have long been used on our warships in order to keep officers and men in closer contact with the normal forms of shore life. In war time they are even more valuable as a means of preserving and developing morale. The chaplains, when their ships are in port, could make use of the lists of suitable pictures prepared by the National Board of Review for the Army and Navy Commissions and the War Camp Motion Picture Committee in selecting films for use on the battleships and secure the special rates.

At a conference in New York on the following day with Malcolm L. McBride, of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, the plan for motion picture entertainments in the Liberty theatres in the camps rivaling in quality of pictures those given at the Rialto and Strand has been completed by the War Camp Motion Picture Committee co-operating with the War Department Training Camp Commission.

Phil Lang

Phil Lang Winds Up Affairs with Kalem

Phil Lang, one of the pioneer scenario editors in the picture field, last week completed his connection with the Kalem Company, since that organization has temporarily suspended producing activities.

Mr. Lang's plans for the future contemplate the giving of his time solely to feature continuity writing, a work he is unusually well adapted to due to his close connection with all branches of picture production work with the Kalem Company.

In his seven years' connection with the Kalem organization is credited with contributing much to the creation of the present type of picture continuity. In addition to his scenario work and the supervision of the Kalem film editing, Mr. Lang spent several months on the West Coast as production manager of the organization. Following the death of Samuel Long, Mr. Lang was chosen vice-president of the Kalem Company.

Vitagraph Wins Anita Stewart Suit

Supreme Court Justice Cohalan on Saturday handed down his decision in the court action between Vitagraph and Louis Mayer over Anita Stewart's contract, the verdict resulting in a victory for the Vitagraph.

The court has issued an order restraining Miss Stewart from acting for Mayer or anyone else pending the conclusion of a period alleged to be covered by the contract which she made with Vitagraph.

This period, according to the terms of the Vitagraph contract, expired on January 31st last, but as it is claimed that Miss Stewart for twenty-nine weeks prior to that time failed to act for Vitagraph, the court decreed that she be enjoined for acting for twenty-nine weeks thereafter, except under the Vitagraph management.

Goldwyn Pictures to Carry Food Saving "Trailers"

In accordance with the request of the U. S. Food Administration, future Goldwyn Pictures will carry trailers urging the public to save foodstuffs. This is in line with previous Goldwyn efforts to further the Government's program in its campaign of war savings education.

Warren Looks Over Coast Conditions

F. B. Warren, of Goldwyn Pictures, which company has been making its pictures at Fort Lee, N. J., has been in Los Angeles for the past two weeks looking the field over. It is said he has had his eye open for a studio, with the intention of bringing part of the Goldwyn organization to the Coast.

If plans materialize for Goldwyn in this respect, it is thought Mabel Normand, and probably Mae Marsh, will be the first of the stars sent from the East to the West.

Kennedy to Manage New N. Y. Theatre

Announcement was made this week that Aubrey M. Kennedy, long prominent in the motion picture industry, has entered the exhibition field as president of the Kennedy Theatres, Inc., which will open a theatre de luxe, to be called the Symphony, at the corner of Broadway and 95th street about May 1.

With the exception of the mezzanine boxes, taking care of 300, the seats will be limited to the lower floor, where 1200 can be accommodated. The orchestra will be of the amphitheatre arrangement. Some innovations are promised in the arrangement of the house.

Music will be one of the features of the new house and a fifty-piece orchestra, under the direction of a famous leader, is promised. The Symphony will furnish its own news reel, compiled from all available sources. There will be educationals, comedies and the best of features. In addition to this Mr. Kennedy plans to produce at least two big features.

Mr. Kennedy has been with American and Universal, and then created "The Yellow Peril." Afterwards he became associated with Goldwyn as manager of productions, and after a year decided to enter the joint producing and exhibiting field.

Battle Looms in Cooperative Field

the first run houses, it will offer manifold attractions that cannot be lightly turned down.

"I found absolutely no sentiment in favor of the Ochs proposition," he continued, "but I did find the exhibitor greatly interested in the Producers and Exihibtors—Affiliated, which is a proposition which does not contemplate the buying of stock. They are also strong for the idea of units organizing and controlling their buying power to do business with producers who want to market their productions with a fair and assured profit on some sort of uniform terms.

"With conditions as they are today, it looks like a shame that personal ambition and personal profit cannot be laid aside and the good points of all co-operative plans be shaped into one big practical, business like plan, and the united efforts of everybody who wants to bring about the greatest possible good for this great industry cannot be put behind the movement in one big drive for its success."

Griffith Film Goes to Lyric

Management of Metropolitan Opera House Announces No Pictures Will Be Presented There—Feature Couldn't Wait

It was definitely announced on Sunday, March 24, by the management of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York that the huge playhouse will not be the home of motion pictures this summer, as was previously announced. This latter move is said to be the result of a disagreement between the Metropolitan Opera Company and the Metropolitan Real Estate Company, but this is denied by Edward Ziegler, representing the management.

The real cause, it is declared, for the decision to keep the Metropolitan dark throughout the summer months is the fact that "Hearts of the World," D. W. Griffith's newest masterpiece, could not wait until May 15, the closing date of the opera season, to be presented in New York. The picture is considered of such import that other arrangements were deemed necessary when it became known the opera house would not be available before the middle of May. The management claims that this production was the only motion picture that was considered for presentation at the Metropolitan, and now that it must find a home elsewhere the decision to reserve the house for opera exclusively was made.

It was announced early last week that S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto and Rivoli, had closed a lease for the Metropolitan, with the intention of presenting pictures there this summer. This announcement appears now to have been premature, in view of the fact the management claims only "Hearts of the World" was considered. Officials of the Metropolitan, in connection with the change of plans, said:

"The only motion picture the Metropolitan Opera House conditionally and informally considered to be shown was D. W. Griffith's great war film, "Hearts of the World," which is to be given in London under the auspices of the British Government, and which is of such importance as propaganda that it is believed it would have the official support of the United States Government. As this film is of such great importance, Mr. Griffith cannot delay its presentation in New York until May 15, the earliest date on which the Metropolitan Opera House is available. Therefore all arrangements for its presentation have been withdrawn, and no motion pictures will be shown at the Metropolitan this summer."

Coincidental with this announcement, it was made known that present plans call for the presentation of "Hearts of the World" in New York at the Lyric theatre in Forty-second street, beginning Monday, April 1.

To Fight Operators' Demands

Action of Chicago Local No. 110 Arouses Ire of Exhibitors Who Raise Fund of $20,000 to Combat the Union

A score of alleged radical and unjust demands by Operators' Union, No. 110, of Chicago, during the past fortnight, aroused the exhibitors and exchangemen of the city to such an extent last week that they have combined their forces more completely than ever before, laid plans and already collected a fund totaling $20,000 to fight the promised aggression on the part of the operators.

For two weeks previous to March 19 exhibitors in Chicago through their operators and both exhibitor leagues, have been receiving ultimatums and demands from Local No. 110. Every exchange in the city was also presented with demands from the operators, and early last week exhibitors and exchange managers began putting their heads together to fight what they term is nothing but persecution and an attempt at graft. The first big meeting was held on Wednesday, March 20, in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League headquarters in the Masonic Temple building. Attorney Louis F. Jacobson presided. Mr. Jacobson is the head of the body of attorneys representing the motion picture interests in Chicago. A record-breaking attendance of exhibitors was represented, together with every exchange in the city. Speeches made in each case denounced the various demands of the operators as unreasonable and beyond consideration.

Chief among the demands, and one one which has aroused the ire of the exhibitors and exchangemen, relates to the use of leaders, trailers and advertising slides. The officers of Local No. 110 insist that no slides or commercial film is to be run in theatres without a union label. They demand that all theatres using such slides and commercial film go to union headquarters and secure them through the union with a label placed upon them. All operators, according to the demands of the union, are forbidden to run slides and film of this sort without the label. It is further stipulated that all such advertising used must come through the National Side Company, and another newly named organization called "The National Advertising Association," whose headquarters are in the offices of Local No. 110. According to the reports of the exhibitors it is also stipulated that a portion of the returns from commercial advertising at all theatres go to the operator.

The meeting, held Wednesday, was followed by another one held March 22. It is the plan of the exhibitors and exchangemen to form themselves into an organization to be called "The Allied Amusements Association." Both meetings of last week were called under the joint auspices of the Chicago Film Exchange Managers' Association, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association, and representatives from the Chicago Vaudeville Managers' Association as well as various slide manufacturers.

Infection Fatal to M. H. Mark

Pioneer Exhibitor Dies at Home in Buffalo, Following Illness of Two Days — Had Built Many Theatres

MITCHEL H. MARK, president of the Strand Theatre Corporation in New York, died at his home in Buffalo March 20 following a brief illness. Cerebral hemorrhages, thought to have developed from an infected finger, caused death, it was announced. He had been ill but two days.

Mr. Mark is credited with having opened in Buffalo the first motion picture theatre in the United States. This was at Ellicott Square, and had less than one hundred seats in it. From this beginning Mr. Mark developed his holdings, until, at the time of his death, he controlled three houses in Buffalo in addition to his New York interests, the total number of theatres in which he was interested being about thirty. Mr. Mark was also the originator of the penny arcades in this and other states.

Mr. Mark was born in Greenville, S. C., in 1862. As a youth of 15 he came to New York, and at once procured a position with Young Brothers, the hatters, with which concern he stayed for quite some time. Later he opened his own hat store in Buffalo, and it was there that he became interested in the presentation of motion pictures.

He has built numerous theatres in United States and Canada, the Strand theatre in this city being the largest of these. Shortly before his death, Mr. Mark closed negotiations and made all arrangements for the new Strand, which is to be built in Brooklyn at the corner of Fulton street and Rockwell Place.

Mr. Mark is survived by a wife, two daughters, Miss Winifred Mark and Mrs. Max Spiegel, also a brother, Moe Mark, and a sister, Mrs. W. Rosenthal.

Zukor Announces Loan Plans

Thousands of Trailers and Posters to Be Distributed Among Theatres in Big Drive to Help Industry Do War Bit

ADOLPH ZUKOR, Chairman of the Committee appointed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to co-operate with the Treasury Department of the government, at his office in the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters on Fifth avenue, last Friday, announced the details concerning the activities of the motion picture industry in connection with the third Liberty Loan drive.

"In the third Liberty Loan campaign," said Mr. Zukor, "the motion picture industry will play a more important part than it has evidenced in previous drives. Careful preparation of plans in collaboration with Secretary of the Treasury William G. McAdoo has made this possible. Every motion picture theatre in the country regardless of size or locality, is involved in this new campaign.

"Seventeen thousand five hundred trailers have been prepared. These films will be sent to every motion picture theatre throughout the land. The trailer runs fifty feet and opens with the new Liberty loan flag, followed by a view of Secretary McAdoo at his desk writing a message to the people on the new loan. Next comes a close-up of the message followed by a close-up of the Liberty loan button, which concludes the film. The message which will be flashed on the screens by this film reads:

"'We must support our gallant sailors and soldiers. We must make them swift victors in their fight with the Kaiser. We can do it if we at home do our duty with the same quality of patriotism that animates our men in the trenches. The least duty we can perform—and we should be eager and happy to perform it—is to lend our money, every available dollar we have and can save, to our government in order that our gallant sons may be supplied with all they need to save America. No true patriot will fail to buy United States Liberty Bonds.

"With this film there will be distributed 100,000 posters, five to each theatre and twenty to each exchange. These posters have been prepared under the supervision of our committee in collaboration with the Government and present striking illustrations of great patriotic appeal. They are the creations of such artists as Howard Chandler Christy, Louis J. Dresser, Franklin Booth, H. H. Green and Harry S. Bressler.

"In making this announcement, I personally wish to urge exhibitors everywhere to put this material to the best possible use, running the film at every show, not merely as a trailer, but separate and apart from any other film, thus giving it added distinction. These films are presented to exhibitors gratis. They are not to be returned, but may be kept by those who receive them. Both film and paper will be mailed direct to the theatre by the Government, and it is urged, should be used throughout the entire duration of the forthcoming campaign.

"As a result of this concerted action on the part of exhibitors everywhere in the United States, the power of the screen will be evidenced in one gigantic thrust. 'The Big Push' on the other side is now underway and it is up to every person at home to put his shoulder to the 'Big Push' which starts here on April 6th, and which will mean new muscle behind that wallop which must lay the Kaiser low. The motion picture industry is fortunate in having such a wide scope in which to help Uncle Sam, and every person connected with it should realize the particular opportunity afforded.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Capital Seeks Location for Studio

A suitable location for the erection of a studio will be selected this week it is announced by Ike Schlank, president of the Capital Film Company, recently incorporated in Indianapolis. The company has offices on the thirteenth floor of the Merchants' National Bank Building, and the numerous details of getting matters in shape to begin work are fast being attended to. Locations near practically all of the Indianapolis parks have been given consideration. The company will require about twenty acres for the erection of its plant, and preference will be given to a site near a river or creek.

Meanwhile architects are now in Denver to make note of the advantages and disadvantages, if any, of what is regarded as the last word in a complete and modern plant, situated at that place. Mr. Schlank states the cost of the Indianapolis studio will approximate $150,000, and will be complete in every detail. Besides the studio where the photography will be done there will be a huge laboratory where films will be developed and printed.

Sunday Opening Movement in Atlanta

A movement has been launched at Atlanta, Ga., to re-open the motion picture theatres on Sundays with the express object of providing "legitimate forms of clean amusement and recreation" for the soldiers from Camp Gordon and Fort McPherson who visit the city on the Sabbath. Victor Kriegshaber, president of the Atlanta branch of the Commission on Training Camp Activities, is said to have received a communication from a Government representative, whose name is withheld at his request, suggesting that the members use their influence with the City Council in the interest of Sunday opening.

Although the movement has the endorsement of many of Atlanta's most prominent and public-spirited citizens, it has drawn the fire of the leading pastors of the city, and numerous resolutions have been passed in protest. Two prominent ministers, however, have expressed themselves favorably.

Indianapolis Orchestra Leader in Army

Charles W. Worthy, orchestra leader at the Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis, has joined the new national army and is preparing to leave for Camp Taylor at Louisville some time in the near future. His successor has not yet been selected by Barton and Olson, managers of the house.

Joins Government Film Service

John Bov, formerly connected with the technical department of the American Film Company at the laboratory at Chicago, has been selected for the Government staff of motion picture men and will soon join the film service of the Government at New York.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Collins?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

A SHORT time ago a film man—a pretty good guesser he is, too—said to us:

"Watch this fellow Collins. He'll do big things one of these days."

So we went over the other day to "watch Collins."

You know who Collins is—Collins of McClure's—McClure's Magazine, McClure publications, McClure pictures—Frederick L. Collins.

Perhaps you've already met him and didn't know it.

He may have slipped into your theatre—in St. Louis, Dubuque, Dallas, Bangor—any time within the past six years and talked to you about pictures, without introducing himself.

For he's a fan, a genuine picture fan. Even now he goes to see pictures every chance he gets.

We believe we've made a remarkable discovery here. A producer who actually goes to picture theatres and really sees the other fellow's pictures! A producer who sees pictures and all!

Well, we went over to "watch" Mr. Collins.

He's well flanked by big offices, we found. You go through one room in which you could do a 100 yard dash and thence into a private office so large that you feel like a Ford car in a Rolls-Royce garage.

If Mr. Collins is to do big things, he's certainly ready with the offices.

He threw a lot of distinguished men out of his room to let us in. Afterward he told us he had entirely forgotten that he was to appear in this series. We had difficulty in reconciling these two statements—but, may be so.

Mr. Collins is a clean-desk man. He swivels between a large mahogany desk and a director's table about half a mile long. And not a scrap of paper on each!

He gives you first-hand an impression of strength — physical and mental —and plenty of it. He has a large firm grip and a resonant voice — stands squarely on his feet, has a large, well set-up body and a large well-shaped head with his eyes set deeply back. He's alert mentally and adroit and thinks broadly and deeply. He's a young man—and optimistic.

Withal he's got a ready and engaging smile. We imagine he could borrow a large wad of money from a banker, and we do admire and wonder over this rare type of individual.

He certainly gave us a good interview.

We entered on one mental cylinder and left with twelve working.

Mr. Collins says that there will be a great period of business readjustment after the world war is over.

Pictures will be hurt little—probably helped largely—and big business and big capital will see in them a commodity of extraordinary development.

Just now there are many wrinkles to be ironed out.

They are mighty baffling—so much so that there's no certainty of getting production money back.

Mr. Collins doesn't contemplate anything revolutionary right now. But he's going to stick.

It's worth while putting things through even if you lose money on them. The future opportunities in pictures are worth waiting—and, if necessary, suffering for.

Mr. Collins is a great believer in advertising.

By a coincidence he had just finished a little essay on motion pictures by Leroy Fairman which the writer had also read just before calling upon Mr. Collins.

It is one of the best works on pictures we have ever read; and we are quoting from it in this week's editorial.

Mr. Fairman says ten years

Goldwyn Sees Prosperity Ahead

Publicity Man Takes Trip to Catch Up with It, and Writes of What He Discovered—Depression Declared Off

EXHIBITORS all over the country are smiling again, is the opinion handed down by Goldwyn's publicity department following a recent trip made by one of its staff. "No better proof is needed," reads the report, "that the motion picture industry has fully recovered from the recent slump."

Times are now good, according to the Goldwyn traveling publicity representative, recently returned from a tour that brought him into close contact with showmen in every section of the East and Northwest and a part of the Southwest. Boston, he found, was the first big Eastern city to outlive the slump.

"We're not coming back—we're back," replied Jacob Lourie, an exhibitor in the Hub, to the publicity man's query.

Similar conditions were noted at Providence, Lowell, Springfield and Brockton. Lynn and Portland are just convalescing, their full recovery being retarded by labor troubles.

Buffalo is at its theatrical best now, the new Curtiss plant and several other new war plants bringing thousands of young men and women to the upstate metropolis. "Business was never better," said Michael Shea, of Shea's Hippodrome, where Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million" did a record business recently.

It was in the Northwest that the Goldwyn representative found the greatest wave of motion picture prosperity, conditions in Minneapolis making some of the large exhibitors forget there ever was depression. There, as in many other large cities, the slump was not without its compensations. It drove a lot of fly-by-night exhibitors out of business and removed their cheap store shows which had long been eyesores.

Finkelstein & Rubin, owners of a chain of theatres in the Twin Cities, reported prosperity for all their houses. Their statement was borne out in part at their New Garrick theatre, St. Paul, where "The Auction Block" played to good business the week the Goldwyn man spent in the Twin Cities.

A trip to Rochester, Minn., revealed that prosperity did not pass up the smaller places in its sweep. Mary Garden in "Thais" drew big audiences to the Lawler theatre.

Of all Northwestern states, Wisconsin had the hardest time in wrestling itself from the grasp of the slump. It was not until the middle of February that the motion picture boom made its appearance there. La Crosse and Oshkosh, which suffered most, were the first cities in Wisconsin to note a change for the better. The Goldwyn exhibitors there reported excellent business with Mae Marsh in "The Beloved Traitor" and on other productions.

Theatres in St. Louis had worn an air of prosperity weeks before the Goldwyn man put in an appearance. Here, too, a number of padlocked store shows revealed where the slump had put in its good work. Further evidence of the cinema boom the Mound City is enjoying is the recent decision of the management of the New Grand Central theatre to run continuously instead of giving four shows a day as heretofore.

Repeal of Zone Postage Law Interests A. M. P. A.

The first practical step in the campaign to co-operate with the trade papers and magazines that are allied with the motion picture industry to repeal the new zone postal law on second-class postal matter that goes into effect July 1 was taken by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., at its last meeting, held March 21, at Keen's Chop House.

Charles Johnson Post, director of the Publishers' Advisory Board, which represents parctically every publishers' association in the United States, as well as the Allied Printing Trades Council and the Authors' League, spoke at some length upon the evil effects of the law, and urged immediate action to prevent the strangulation of the periodicals of this country. In his official capacity, Mr. Post represents publications having a combined circulation of 40,000,000 copies.

C. W. Barrell of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit was asked by Chairman Arthur James to draught a resolution expressing the association's stand in the matter at the conclusion of Mr. Post's remarks. This resolution will be submitted at the next meeting of the association. As chairman of the committee having the question in charge, Mr. Barrell is also arranging a joint meeting of the trade paper and motion picture magazine interests and the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, with Mr. Post and other speakers to lead the discussion.

Kalem President Writes of Verdun

In a letter to William Wright, written from Paris February 24, Frank J. Marion, president of the Kalem Company, tells of his recent visit to the French battle lines at Verdun as follows:

"I leave here for Rome February 27. I have just returned from Verdun, where I was for three days at the front as the guest of the Maison de la Presse, which corresponds to Mr. Creel's Committee on Public Information. I was frequently under fire, wore a helmet and gas mask and saw the whole works. Don't let any one tell you the French have lost any 'pep.' They are there with the goods and their organization is wonderful—a great army with great leaders. What I saw would fill a book, but, of course, I cannot write anything of the details. It was a tremendous experience and a big opportunity which very few non-military men are given. I am enjoying splendid health and getting on first class in my work."

Information Division in New York Offices

The Film Division of the Committee on Public Information, of which Charles S. Hart is director of distribution, has opened offices in New York at 110 West Fortieth Street. The committee has a rich fund of information relating to the war and its numberless activities that can be conveyed to the public by means of the motion picture. The films picturizing this information are being made continuously by the Government, and most of them can be had through no other source. Therefore the industry, and especially the exhibitors, are vitally interested in the announcement of this new office.

In an interview, Mr. Hart said: "During the past two weeks, since becoming engaged in this work for the Government, I have found everywhere the finest spirit of co-operation by producers and exhibitors and everywhere a willingness to do anything which can possibly assist in giving the people throughout the country a better idea of what the Government is doing with their money. It is my belief that pictures can do this more effectively than any other medium.

"The plan now under way is such as to enlist the aid of all, manufacturers, distributors and, especially, the exhibitors. It is upon the exhibitors we must depend for patriotic loyalty and support in getting these films to the public, and the Government knows that it can depend upon this loyalty and co-operation from exhibitors and producers."

Chicago Red Cross Points Way to Help

The Red Cross of Chicago has pointed out a way in which exhibitors throughout the country can help the cause. In Chicago the move is being headed by Mrs. Ben Francis Whitney, who is making a round of the theatres and appealing to all of the managers to turn in their muslin and linen display banners after they have been used to their nearest Red Cross depot. Every piece of muslin or linen used in a theatre front as a sign or a mounting for posters can be turned into cloths and bandages for use in the army hospitals, according to Mrs. Whitney. The Chicago branch of the Red Cross has made a personal appeal to MOTION PICTURE NEWS to ask the exhibitors all over the country to send such banners and signs to their nearest Red Cross depot after they have served their purposes. Lettering on posters is washed off of the linen or muslin base. They are then sterilized and cut into bandages for use in hospitals.

Harry Gribbon Back with Mack Sennett

Harry Gribbon is back with Mack Sennett after an absence of eight months. His first work upon his return to the Sennett organization is with Chester Conklin in a subject being directed by Eddie Cline, and following the completion of this he will be featured in a Cline-directed comedy. Gribbon is continuing the portrayal of the character role he made famous, namely, the gentleman crook.

Al Nathan Becomes Manager of Broadway Theatre

Al Nathan, former manager of the Superba theatre in Los Angeles and the Alhambra in San Francisco, has become manager of the Broadway theatre, New York, for Carl Laemmle. In addition to his experience as a theatre manager, Mr. Nathan is also familiar with the management of theatrical companies, having been employed as manager, business manager and press agent for several of the Askin-Binger attractions and with Harry H. Frazee.

The engagement of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," has been extended through the present week.

hence motion pictures will be the most widely advertised commodity in the world.

"It will come before ten years," said Mr. Collins.

"Now its full expansion is held back by the daily change and other uneconomics."

We can't give here all the interesting things Mr. Collins said. Suffice it, that at the conclusion of the interview he and the writer had things all fixed up for the greater motion picture.

And the writer also is pretty well convinced that the film man was right who said: "Watch this fellow Collins. He'll do big things."

F. I. L. M. Club Gives Dinner

Over a Hundred Representative Picture Personages Present to Make the Affair Huge Success—Chadwick Explains the Reason

OVER one hundred people, representative respectively of producers, distributors and exhibitors, were present at the dinner given at Healy's on Wednesday, March 20, by the F. I. L. M. Club.

I. E. Chadwick, president of the club, acted as toastmaster, and in a few concise words outlined the purposes of these monthly dinners, showing the benefit that must needs come from practically open forum discussions as regards to the various needs or ills that are apparent in the progress of the industry.

P. A. Powers, president of the Universal Film Exchange, who was then introduced as the first speaker of the evening, did, while showing various waste and uneconomic processes in the business of the distributor and exhibitor, by no means spare the producer, but rather showed the multifarious leakages which go towards increasing the cost of product as well as decreasing the value of same.

Leslie Mason, the next speaker, was there after introduced. He pointed out that a $150,000 picture may be made economically, whereas a $15,000 one may be wasteful, and vice versa. It was he that showed that over production is

Other speakers of the evening were: William L. Sherrill of the Frohman Amusement Corporation: Harry L. Reichenbach, L. Lawrence Weber, Charles B. Hoy and others.

The following is a list of a few of the people present: E. H. Wells, Harry L. Lyons, C. Miller, Julius Levine, S. Kraus, Elias Meyer, Louis Schneider, Jack Levy, Mattie Radin, H. Gainsberg, Jos. Kleine, S. Kolinsky, Louis Rosenbluh, Max Westobly, Chas. B. Hoy, William Marsh, R. H. Clark, S. Eckman, Jr., C. P. Saunders, P. Meyer, G. Balsdon, Jr., J. Bowen, Wm. A. Leith, Jos. M. Mrs. Grossman Very Ill at Cleveland

Mrs. Joseph Grossman, wife of the manager of the Standard theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, and the only woman who has been appointed a member of the advisory board of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, is very ill at Mt. Sinai Hospital, where she was operated on last Monday for goitre.

While her condition is said not to be dangerous at this time, Mr. Grossman says she is in a very critical condition and will not be able to resume her usual duties for some time.

Film Stars Confer on the Next Loan Drive

Douglas Fairbanks last week held a conference with Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin to discuss matters pertaining to the Third Liberty Loan drive.

The mentioned screen stars have been asked by Secretary McAdoo to tour throughout the country to boost the new Liberty Loan, and Fairbanks called the meeting for the purpose of laying plans.

After they had finished their talk, Fairbanks invited them to a pre-view of his new picture, "Mr. Fix-It," which was followed by tea on Douglas's open air studio stage.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Tennessee League Meets April 9-10

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Tennessee will hold its first annual convention April 9 and 10 at Nashville. Matters of great importance to all exhibitors will come up for discussion and every exhibitor in Tennessee is urged to be present.

The Tennessee league has just completed a membership campaign and practically every exhibitor in the state is now enrolled as a member of the organization. The present officers of the league are: Charles H. McElravy, president; J. F. Duthie, secretary. Tony Sudekim and Bill Wasserman, of Nashville, are great boosters for this organization, as is also Frank Dowler, of Chattanooga. In East Tennessee George Keys, of Johnson City, is very enthusiastic over the organization and is boosting for the convention in that part of the state. With such livewires as these boosting the convention a record-breaking attendance is expected.

His Checks Are Bad; Look Out for Him

F. W. Foster, of the Central Film Service, Indianapolis, writes that an alleged returned Canadian soldier who is delivering lectures in that section has a habit of passing off bad checks and borrowing money. His name is said to be A. L. Scanby, although he sometimes bills himself as "Gunner A. L. Scanly." A warrant is out for him and anybody having information as to his whereabouts is requested to communicate with Mr. Foster.

Rapf Plans Wide Exploitation

Specially Prepared Book Expected to Help Small Exhibitor Map Out Campaign on "The Struggle Everlasting"

STATE rights men who buy territory on "The Struggle Everlasting" from Harry Rapf will not only receive a print or two of the picture, but paper and cuts at so much per. Mr. Rapf is said to have planned a live-wire exploitation campaign on this picture which he will carry direct to the exhibitor, through his different state rights men, and not only assist the exhibitor in properly advertising his picture, but help him get the most money possible out of the showing of "The Struggle Everlasting."

"I have issued an exploitation book," said Mr. Rapf, "that the smaller exhibitor who has to map out his own campaign will know what to do and how to do it. The exhibitor who has a staff to handle his publicity and advertising knows, in most cases, just how to handle a picture that is really an attraction. But the small exhibitor needs assistance, and this is the man I am trying to help. I want to see exhibitors make money on my pictures, because that is the only way I can come back and sell them another. I have spent a great deal of time and money in producing 'The Struggle Everlasting,' and I want to see exhibitors cash in on it, and cash heavily.

"The cast alone is well worth considering. With Florence Reed, Milton Sills, Irving Cummings, Wellington Playter and others, it can honestly be referred to as an all-star cast without stretching one's imagination. All the reviewers predicted big business for this picture, the cast being one of the best assembled, the story strong and gripping, and staged in a truly spectacular manner."

One of the advertising novelties issued by Mr. Rapf consists of a trailer to be used by exhibitors from five to six days prior to showing of the picture until day of showing, introducing the star with a scene of the picture, and calling attention to a few of its big scenes. This trailer is furnished exhibitors free of charge, and affords the latter advertising right in his own house without a cent's expense. An attention-compelling one-sheet is also issued, both being now ready for immediate shipment. With these advertising helps, Mr. Rapf feels exhibitors can derive a great deal of good and create considerable interest in the coming of "The Struggle Everlasting." There will also be a trailer attached to "The Struggle Everlasting," announcing the coming release of Mr. Rapf's other state rights picture, "The Accidental Honeymoon," with Robert Warwick and Elaine Hammerstein.

Irwin Champions the Program

Cites Example of What a Consistent Line-up Means to Exhibitors—Blue Ribbon Features Take Big Step Forward

AN example of what a consistent program is said to mean to exhibitors is supplied from the offices of Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, in connection with a recapitulation on the business done with Vitagraph Blue Ribbon features during the last year. According to the information at hand, the Blue Ribbon features are now showing on yearly contract basis in more motion picture theatres of the United States and Canada than ever before.

The Blue Ribbon Feature has been the chief unit of Vitagraph service for three years, being released in five reels weekly, with the leading stars of the company rotating in appearance. More than the usual care is given to these features by Vitagraph, one of the chief being the selection of stories. Albert E. Smith, president of the company, established a "best authors" policy in the choice of screen material.

During the period under review there have appeared on the Blue Ribbon list of releases adaptations from the works of such writers as Robert W. Chambers, O. Henry, Alfred Henry Lewis, James Oliver Curwood, Cyrus Townsend Brady, Frederick Upham Adams, Earl Derr Biggars, Edith Ellis and Mollie Elliott Seawell. It was recently shown that there are on the Vitagraph list of contributing authors almost two score names notable in literary circles.

The recapitulation by General Manager Irwin is the result of a survey conducted by the Vitagraph distributing organization which embraced every theatre in the United States and Canada. Special charts were prepared for each branch manager and in addition a general chart covering the entire country was maintained at the company's home office in New York and the returns from each district were tabulated for a given period of time. At the end of the survey, which took almost six weeks, the tally sheet showed the results announced by Mr. Irwin. All of the theatres listed are running Blue Ribbon features at least one day a week, and in many cases the exhibitors run two or more in the seven-day period.

A reason for this is found in the consistency with which Vitagraph has turned out high class product and the care with which subjects are adapted to the suitability of the stars.

National Association Calls Meeting

F. H. Elliott, executive secretary of the N. A. M. P. I., last week issued a notice to the effect that the regular quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the Association would be held at the offices in the Times Building March 30. Routine business will be transacted, it is announced.

Cusack Co. Specializes in Film Advertising

The Thomas Cusack Company, which owns and controls outdoor advertising companies in more than four hundred cities in the United States and has affiliations in every city in this country and Canada, has announced a new department for handling bill posting and painted and electric sign advertising for motion picture companies.

Edward Hardin, who originated the idea of exploiting big films through the use of bill posting, will be the Cusack Company's exclusive motion picture representative. He has handled all of the largest campaigns in outdoor advertising put out by film producers since he demonstrated that this method of publicity brought quick and sure returns. Known throughout the trade as "Eddy" Hardin, he has the reputation of always working and giving his clients the enthusiastic service which assures the success of a campaign through intelligent handling and clever follow-up.

Producers who realize the far-reaching value of bill posting to reach and influence the great moving picture loving public will no doubt appreciate the service which is placed at their disposal by the Cusack Company, under Mr. Hardin's direction.

The Thomas Cusack Company's headquarters are in Chicago. Their present New York offices are in the Flatiron Building, pending the completion of their own new building at Broadway, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-fifth Street.

Spy May Have Been After Metro's Rifles

Two days before the Federal authorities in Los Angeles recently arrested a German reservist on the charge of being a master spy for the Kaiser, an attempt was made to steal thirty-six magazine rifles and two dozen boxes of ammunition from Metro's studio at Hollywood. The arrested reservist is alleged to have plotted an anti-American movement in Lower California. Whether or not he was the party who made the attempted haul at the Metro studio, the intruder in that case nearly got away with the "swag," being frightened off by the night watchman after stacking the guns up against the fence near the gates.

The rifles, Winchester repeaters, were obtained for use in "Treasure," a Metro picture starring Edith Storey.

Anderson Returns from the Coast

Carl Anderson, president of Paralta Plays, Inc., returned to New York last week from Los Angeles, where he spent several months on business connected with the construction of the new Paralta studios.

During his stay on the Coast Mr. Anderson was responsible for many important developments in the Paralta organization, among them the engagement of Louise Glaum as a star of Paralta Plays and the completion of her first production, "An Alien Enemy," under the direction of Wallace Worsley.

Sol Berman Sales Manager of Jewel's N. Y. Office

From the executive offices of Jewel Productions, Inc., comes the announcement that Sol J. Berman, widely known throughout the New York territory, has been appointed sales manager of its New York office.

It was with the World Film organization that Mr. Berman made his bow as a metropolitan exchange manager. After a considerable period with that company, he was induced to become sales manager of Branch A, Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., and Lewis J. Selznick next availed himself of his services.

A special campaign on "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," now playing at the Broadway theatre, is receiving the immediate attention of the newest addition to the Jewel organization. Already plans have been mapped out for the use of twenty-four prints in the New York territory, so that exhibitors may be able to get the immediate benefit of the billboard and newspaper advertising now being done.

Nehls Is Pleased with Prospects

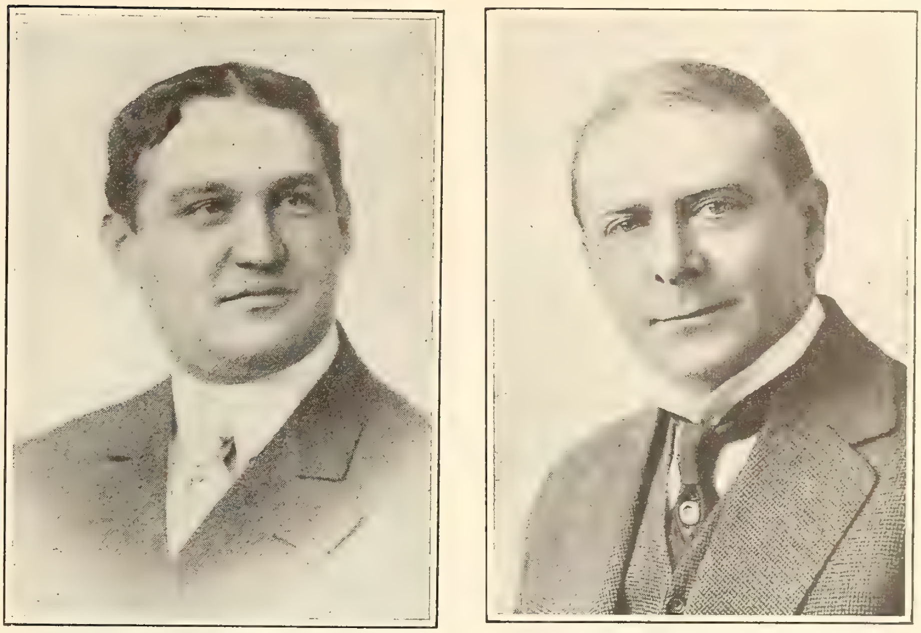
Richard R. Nehls, manager of the American Film Company, whose general offices are in Chicago, is confident that prospects in the film industry were never better than for the coming year.

"Our president, Samuel H. Hutchinson, will soon leave for his customary trip of inspection through our studios in Santa Barbara, where studio activities have been greatly augmented since the first of the year," said Mr. Nehls. "It has invariably been the policy of the American Film Company to have all possible picture construction far enough in advance of requirements to meet any readjustment that could possibly arise. We make it our business to feel the pulse of the public—to watch for just the thing the public wants and to have it ready when the public discovers that it really has been waiting for it. The success of any corporation must be measured by its ability to match the public's desire."

Localized Trade Showings for "U" Serial

Universal is going to try the English system of localized trade showings in its exploitation of its new serial, "The Lion's Claws." This consists of dividing each territory into a number of sections, the largest town in each section being made a trade showing center. A salesman, equipped with the picture to be presented and samples of all advertising matter that goes with it, is sent to each center and invitations to attend the showing are issued to exhibitors in the surrounding communities.

A whirlwind campaign has already been carefully mapped out by the sales and advertising departments of Universal and goes into effect within the next few days. The first six episodes of this serial have already gone forward to all Universal exchanges, together with minute instructions as to the method of procedure to be followed.



Max Spiegel and Moe Mark, of the Mark Strand Theatre Corporation

First Nationals at the Strand

Big Broadway House Secures First-Run Rights in New York City on All Features, Including Chaplin Comedies

LAST week a deal was consummated between the members of the Mark Realty Company, owners of the Strand theatre, New York, and the executives of the First National Exihibitors' Circuit, whereby the associates of the late Mitchell H. Mark secured an interest in the New York franchise, giving them the first-run rights on all features released by the First National, including the Charlie Chaplin comedies.

The Strand, with a seating capacity of 3,000, is considered an ideal theatre in which to give First National attractions their initial showing, not only from the aesthetic point of view, but for the practical reason that the greatest number of patrons can be released in the shortest space of time.

The negotiations leading up to this deal were carried on quietly for some time between the First National chiefs and Messrs. Moe Mark, Walter Hays, Max Spiegel and Eugene Falk, executives of the Mark Realty Company. Mitchell H. Mark, prior to his death, had expressed his approval of the arrangement, but was too ill to take active part in the negotiations.

Under the provisions of its charter, the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is obliged to lease its New York franchise to exhibiting interests of the highest standing. In closing with the Mark corporation, it is believed that most desirable ends have been achieved. Judging from the many congratulatory messages that have reached First National headquarters, this opinion is general throughout the circuit.

The Mark Realty Company of Buffalo and New York is a monument to the sagacity and foresight of the late Mitchell H. Mark, who was one of the first American exhibitors of motion pictures to win national prominence. After successful pioneer work in Buffalo and Boston, he and his associates built the Strand in New York as the highest type of theatre devoted to the showing of motion pictures with musical accompaniment.

Since its opening, on April 11, 1914, the Strand has maintained a uniformly high level of motion picture entertainment, allied with musical art, and has represented an ideal in the field of exhibition toward which hundreds of other owners and managers have striven. The Strand was the first high class house in the world to feature Charlie Chaplin, and in securing first-run rights for the new series of $1,000,000 comedies the same progressive policy that has built up the huge clientele of the big theatre is in evidence. The rental figure that the Strand management has agreed to pay for the Chaplin product has not been divulged as yet, but it is said to top anything on record in the field of comedy.

In addition to the Strand, the Mark Realty Company owns and operates a dozen or more prosperous theatrical properties through the East, including the Strand, Academy and Victoria theatres of Buffalo, the Strand of Syracuse and the Strand of Lynn, Mass.

Florida Beckoning to Max Linder

Max Linder, now in Switzerland, has set May 20 as the date of his expected arrival in the United States. Since the announcement by T. E. Letendre, his American representative, of his intended return to America, many Chambers of Commerce have been making strenuous proposals to have him locate in their respective cities. It is probable, however, that some live Chamber of Commerce in Florida will land him.

Educational Gets Hearst Comics

"Happy Hooligan" and "Katzenjammer Kids" to Be Made by Superior Process of Animation, General Manager Hammons Announces

E. W. HAMMONS, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation, this week makes one of the most important announcements in months so far as short-reel subjects are concerned, with the authorization of the statement that Educational had secured the full release and distribution rights to the famous comic cartoons appearing in the Hearst newspapers. Release will start April 15 with "Happy Hooligan" and "The Katzenjammer Kids" as the first characters featured in the laugh films. Releases will be weekly thereafter.

Addition of these great funmakers gives Educational Film Corporation a wonderful array of short subjects. There are the Bruce Scenics Beautiful which have been featured by Samuel L. Rothapfel at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, each being given a special musical setting and so presented as to readily be called features of the bill; the Ditmars nature pictures which have been shown regularly at the Strand, and the newly released Newman travelogues, which have been shown before in the past at prices ranging up to $2, the first of which have been presented at the Rivoli theatre.

Importance of the arrangement between Educational and the estimation in which Mr. Rothapfel holds these comic subjects is proven by the fact that he booked these comic features immediately after the announcement of the new arrangement was made and these will be shown at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres. That rounds up the full product of the Educational, all of which is being given first run at one of the three Broadway houses mentioned.

One of the big things behind these comic subjects aside from their own merits is the big newspaper campaign that the Hearst papers will carry on for them. There will be display advertising in the Hearst string of newspapers that is bound to put dollar after dollar in the hands of the exhibitors. In addition to this there is the advertising that comes from the comics which appear in the Sunday papers for there is hardly a city of any size in the country where one of the newspapers does not carry these cartoons. These two characters are declared to be already the two most widely known of comic creations, but the intensive advertising campaign to be put behind them will increase this and bring the benefit direct to the exhibitor.

General Manager Hammons declares that Educational has the benefit of a new animating process that will make this new product far superior to all that have been tried in the past. Those who have seen the work of the process have expressed themselves as amazed at the results achieved. This was one of the reasons why Mr. Hammons feels so enthusiastic over the new arrangement.

E. W. Hammons

"It seemed exactly the natural thing that International Film Company would pick the 'specialties in one reel' to release its comedies in black and white, and it is equally natural that the Educational Films Corporation would be delighted with the opportunity to present the famous cartoon characters along with the Bruce Scenics Beautiful and the Ditmars 'Living Book of Nature,'" said Mr. Hammons.

"These characters can inject more realism into comedy than can mere flesh and blood characters, and the new process of animation that we have will make them so clear and so swift-moving that theatregoers will recognize them as just as far ahead of the comic with which they are familiar as was 'The Birth of a Nation' to a film made twenty years ago.

"We feel very sure that we could sell these creations on their merits and that the theatres could make money out of them, even had 'Happy Hooligan' and the 'Katz. Kids' never been heard of before. But you can imagine the power that is behind them when you know that these Hearst comics are read by 25,000,000 people every Sunday and that the characters are familiar to nearly every human being in the nation. That fact, and the exploitation campaign that is behind them through the Hearst string of newspapers, makes this the most attractive proposition in short subjects that has ever been made to the exhibitor.

"The wonderful reception that has been accorded the Bruce and Ditmars pictures, and that which has greeted the first of the Newman pictures has well established the quality of Educational product. In spite of all the other attractive reasons we would not have booked these comic features—for they will really be features—had I not known that they would meet our absolute demand for the very best."

Mr. Hammons is one of the livest and most successful men in the film industry and one who keeps a close hand on the public touch. He knows every little thing that goes on in the industry and nothing escapes him. That is evidenced in his this week advertisement in which he reproduces one of the questions asked Mr. Rothapfel in the issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for March 30 in which Mr. Rothapfel advises his inquirer to "use 600 or 700 feet of good topical, 300 feet of scenic AND A GOOD COMIC," and after that Mr. Hammons points out that Mr. Rothapfel has booked the "Happy Hooligans" and "Katz. Kids."

Hart Case Decided in Artcraft's Favor

ARTCRAFT PICTURES CORPORATION has been awarded a final decision by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, in the suit brought against that organization by the Triangle Film Corporation in the William S. Hart case.

The initial decision won by Artcraft in the matter, was given out by Judge Martin T. Manton, in the United States District Court, New York City, last August, when the application of the Triangle Film Corporation for a preliminary injunction restraining the defendent from making or distributing motion pictures featuring Mr. Hart, was refused. Mr. Hart's contract with Triangle called for Thomas H. Ince's supervision of productions, in which the star appeared, and when Mr. Ince severed his connections with Triangle, the star's contract was no longer binding, which decision was verified by the Court of Appeals last week.

In the early part of December, Artcraft again won out, when Supreme Court Judge Goff handed down a decision which denied the application of the New York Motion Picture Company for an injunction pendente lite, restraining the defendant from distributing its first William S. Hart production entitled, "The Narrow Trail" and vacated the temporary stay granted pending the argument of the injunction. This second suit was a local action and temporarily held up the showing of "The Narrow Trail" at the Rialto theatre.

The final appeal was brought before Circuit Judges Rogers and Hough and District Judge Learned Hand. Elek John Ludvigh represented Artcraft, and Alfred S. Barnard, Triangle.

William Fox Guest of Theatre Club

William Fox and Virginia Pearson, Fox screen star, were the guests of honor at a meeting of the New York Theatre Club, of which Mrs. Belle de Riviera is president, in the Hotel Astor last Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Fox was the principal speaker.

Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox "Baby Grands," presented an original skit. Miss Ainee Abbott, exponent of Oriental art, talked on obtaining a position in photoplays and Baby Love Simmons sang and danced. Mrs. J. W. Loeb presided as chairman.

Former Associates Honor Lieut. Kaufman

The esteem with which Albert Kaufman, now a lieutenant in the United States Army, is held by the employees of the Eastern studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, of which he was the general manager previous to his enlistment was evidenced last week by the presentation of a gold tablet 4½ inches wide and 3½ inches high, appropriately illustrated, and on which was engraved on one side: "To Albert A. Kaufman from his associates of the Famous Players as an expression of their sincere and enduring esteem."

On the back of the tablet were engraved the names of the persons joining in the gift, including Hugh Ford, Searle Dawley, Joseph Kaufman, Charles Giblyn, William Reilly, George Yohalem, Hugh Gray, Sr., William Scully, Frank Walton, George Odell, John C. Epping, H. Lyman Broening, Ned Van Buren, Lawrence Williams, Frank Meyer, Robert Vignola, Edward Jose, Frank Losee, Richard Murphy, August Kramer, Virtus R. Scott, Daniel Pennell, Joseph Boyle, Edwin Sturgis, William H. Bomb, Albert E. Davies, William Marshall, Lewis Physioc and Hal Young.

Regarding another member of the Famous Players-Lasky organization who is now in the army, word comes to the effect that First Lieut. Walter Long has been transferred from Fort MacArthur to Fortress Monroe, Va. Prior to his enlistment Long was one of the most successful "heavies" before the camera.

Cleveland League Collects for Anti-Tax Fund

At the meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Cleveland, held last week, the committee which has been working on the war tax repeal bill announced that it had collected $60 from local exhibitors, to be used by the standing committee in Washington, which has sent out a call for support from that branch of the industry which is most vitally affected by the withdrawal of the fifteen cent per reel footage tax. A motion was made and carried to forward this sum immediately to Frank Rembusch, who has charge of all such contributions.

Kornicker Establishes Frame Factory

Arnold Kornicker, formerly salesman for Menger, Ring & Weinstein, Inc., has established a complete and modern lobby display frame factory at 440-442 West Forty-second Street, under the name of Stanley Frame Co.

Mr. Kornicker is now in a position to submit estimates and sketches on any new proposition in theatrical displays.

Bates in New Quarters

Wilbur Bates, special correspondent, announces that he is now settled in his new office, room 403, Times Building.

Lasky Praises Griffith Film

"Absolutely the Most Wonderful Production Ever Known," He Characterizes "Hearts of the World"

JUST arrived in New York from California, where he bas been supervising the production of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is the first motion picture man to reach the metropolis from the Coast since the initial showing of D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" at Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles. That he is a bit enthusiastic over the Griffith spectacle may be deduced from the following statement which he gave out for publication:

"'Hearts of the World' is absolutely the most wonderful photo production the world's history of the motion picture has ever known. The film is positively gripping. You sit for three hours leaning forward, alternately holding your breath, heaving sighs of relief, gritting your teeth, smiling through tears, cursing, praying, cheering and choking back sobs.

"In describing the wonders of this marvelous cinema, words are positively inadequate. I delayed my trip East just to attend the premiere and I want to say it proved one of the greatest evenings of my life.

"The most stirring battle scenes—actual views of war—ever screened appear in this picture. We are taken from the quiet simplicity of a French village on to the great battlefields; we see miles of batteries, fleets of tanks and air craft; rushing lines of soldiers; we are taken into the French and German trenches, and America's duty is impressed upon us in a way which will never be forgotten."

Speaking of the film industry at large, Mr. Lasky expressed confidence and complete satisfaction, stating that the interests with which he is allied have experienced none of the much talked of vicissitudes said to be besetting the business. Never was there a more consistent demand for good pictures than at present, he says.

"As to the productional activities in California," he continued, "I am pleased with the advance that is being made along the line. At the time of my leaving a number of companies were at work in our Hollywood studios, including those headed by Mary Pickford, who is engaged under William D. Taylor's direction of 'How Could You, Jean?', an Artcraft picture; Douglas Fairbanks, who has just completed 'Mr. Fix-It' and is already at work on a new one as yet unnamed; Wallace Reid and Ann Little, who are doing 'Believe Me, Xantippe,' with Donald Crisp directing; Sessue Hayakawa, who is making a film temporarily titled 'The Desire of Tamura,' directed by George Melford; while Cecil De Mille is engaged in producing another of the Artcraft specials, 'Old Wives for New,' with a number of prominent people in the cast. The Reid and Hayakawa pictures are, of course, to be Paramount pictures.

"At the Morosco studio, Vivian Martin is just starting the production of 'Vivianette,' by William J. Locke, directed by Walter Edwards. The Thomas H. Ince studios are busy with Dorothy Dalton in a Secret Service play; Charles Ray is doing a picture as yet without a title, having just completed another; Enid Bennett will shortly return from her honeymoon to engage upon a Paramount picture. William S. Hart is finishing up a new Artcraft film, preparatory to a brief excursion in the interests of the Third Liberty Loan Drive."

Philadelphia Exhibitors Get Behind Loan

A meeting of the Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia was held at the headquarters of the local on Tuesday, March 19. Lawrence Beggs and Frank W. Buehler, respectively president and general manager of the Central Market Street company, were appointed members of the Liberty Loan committee for the motion picture branch. Mr. Beggs brought it forcibly to the attention of those present that they must lend every effort to make the loan a success, and stated that the Government looks upon the motion picture industry as a great aid in any of its undertakings. A number of trailers are being made for distribution through the local exchanges so that every exhibitor in the territory will have an equal opportunity to show them during the Liberty Loan drive, which begins April 6.

It was decided at the meeting to hold business sessions every two weeks instead of weekly during the summer months. The state convention to be held in June was also discussed.

Kridel Changes Policy of Newark Theatre

Moe L. Kridel, who recently assumed control of the Goodwin theatre at Newark, N. J., inaugurated his induction into the management by changing the policy of the theatre. He has booked the Graphic Film Company's production of Ivan Abramson's story "Moral Suicide" for a two weeks' showing at his theatre, starting March 17. Under the management of Mrs. Lilly K. Webbe, the former proprietor, the bills were changed bi-weekly, or at least once a week. Mr. Kridel establishes a precedent by his action in booking a film for a two weeks' run.

EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

[Ed. Note.—As announced last week, these reviews are conducted by Mr. P. S. Harrison, for ten years active in exchange and exhibiting circles. Mr. Harrison is looking at pictures for you—backed by his own experience as an exhihitor on the Pacific Coast and the Northwest since 1907.]

These reviews are based solely on the entertaining qualities of the picture. All other factors are considered of secondary importance.]

Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird"

THE News is ready to go to press as I am writing these lines, therefore it is impossible for me to go into details. I shall try, however, to give a general outline of the picture.

The first thing I want to tell the exhibitor is that this is a wonderful production, not as much for its photography or the ability of the director to grasp the spirit of Maeterlinck, as for the construction of the story itself. This is not a fairy story of the kind that has been "peddled" to you in the past, but it is one with heart interest, the kind that will bring cheerfulness and happiness to young and old, the kind that will bring tears of joy to your eyes no matter how hard you are trying to suppress them. It is the kind that will make ninety-nine out of a hundred of your patrons stop and tell you how much they enjoyed it, and make them go out of their way to talk about it.

You cannot handle this picture in the usual way. You have got to advertise strong, you have got to play it longer than any other picture you ever had, as, the longer you play it, the bigger the crowds will grow.

See detailed review in next week's issue.

"My Own United States"

(Special in Eight Reels. Distribution Plans Will Be Announced in Next Issue)

THIS is an offering that will create such a deep impression in you that you will remember long afterwards. It certainly keeps your "emotion pump" working overtime. The structure is built on what I consider the only solid foundation—heart interest.

It is a patriotic subject, the story starting in the present epoch and flashing back to the after-revolutionary period and up to the Civil War, and it has been designed to arouse the ardor of the indifferent American. It certainly fulfills its mission. The impersonation of the different characters, especially that of Aaron Burr and Alexander Hamilton, is so realistic that you almost forget it is a picture.

It is a fine offering from whatever angle you look at it, and aside from its historical value, it is bound to please any patronage.

It is the duty of every American exhibitor to book this picture as it indirectly helps our Government win the war.

Synopsis will be published next week.

"Outing"—Chester Pictures

Three Reels from a Collection of Fifty-two Are Reviewed and Pronounced Winners

(Offered to State Rights Market by Jesse J. Goldberg)

"KAIETEUR, THE PERFECT CATARACT," is one of the best scenics I have even seen. This spot is situated in British Guiana, east southeast of Venezuela. It shows a magnificent water fall five times as high as Niagara, which roars over a mountain wall. The camera was apparently placed at the brink of the great chasm, as it shows the foaming depths several hundred feet below where a great volume of water reaches there in a fine spray. It is a sight of great grandeur.

To reach this cataract it is necessary to take a very dangerous trip, the difficulties of which are amply explained by the camera.

"A Jungle Joy Ride" has also been photographed in British Guiana, but on the Pataro River. It shows a peculiar kind of a boat that rides over the turbulent waters, making your hair stand on ends. It is said that only Patamonans have learned how to safely navigate these waters, and they certainly create some real thrills.

This reel also shows some of the queer habits of the Patamonan Indian, including the manufacture of hammocks from yarn obtained by cotton growing in the jungles.

"A Coorial in the Orinico" is also very interesting. It was taken in Venezuela showing the Orinoco River, near El Callao, where the Spanish Buccaneers filled their treasure chest with gold some three centuries ago.

These are three reels among a group of fifty-two that I have seen, and if the balance are anywhere near the quality of these they are certainly worth considering by state rights buyers.

"La Tosca"

Strongly Dramatic—With Pauline Frederick in a Role That Fits

(Paramount—March 25th)

THE story of "La Tosca" has been adapted to the screen before—but this time it has been done very successfully.

Pauline Frederick, possessing the vivacity and impetuosity of the Italian girl, is in a role that fits her like a glove. The result is a production that holds your interest to the end.

Without detracting any from the realism, one or two of the close-ups showing too much blood could be eliminated to advantage.

The theme of the play is, of course, strong—but exhibitors will balance this against the fact that it is a well known subject with which the majority of people are familiar.

"The Hillcrest Mystery"

Irene Castle in a Swiftly-Moving Entertainment

(Pathe—March 24th)

IRENE CASTLE makes her next bow in a rapid-action melodrama that will entertain. It is a clean story, ending happily.

The plot has the timely basis of the German spy system, which fact, however, is not developed until the last reel. The first four reels deal with a love story.

The direction, photography and lighting are very good.

THE CAST

Marion Sterling	Irene Castle
Her father	J. H. Gilmour
Gordon Brett	Ralph Kellard
Hugo Smith	Wyndham Standing
Director	George Fitzmaurice

THE STORY

Thomas Sterling donates his ship plant to the U. S. Government to help win the war. Hugo Smith, his partner, who lives with him at Hillcrest, is favored as a prospective son-in-law, but Marion loves her father's private secretary—Gordon Brett. For that reason he is discharged. The same night Sterling is found murdered and Brett is arrested on suspicion. Marion, believing in his innocence, starts to unravel the mystery. Eventually she discovers in her house the hiding place of German agents, headed by Hugo Smith. Thus the mystery is explained—Brett is exonerated and Marion and he are engaged.

"Breakers Ahead"

Possess "Human Interest" as Editors Say—Which Means They'll Like It

(Metro—March 25th)

"HUMAN interest"—that factor which means so much in creating sympathy on the part of an audience—is strong in "Breakers Ahead." It's a story of seafaring life—that helps; and Viola Dana is seen in the leading role—that completes a sum total certain to entertain.

Though the part given to Miss Dana is that of an illegitimate child, her sympathetic personality and the extremely careful handling of the subject by Director Brabin puts it over without leaving any bad effects. However, we suggest that cleaner stories be furnished this fine actress who is gaining quite some popularity.

THE CAST

Ruth Bowman	Viola Dana
Eric Pixley	Clifford Bruce
Captain Scudd	Russell Simpson
Jim Hawley	Eugene Pallette
Aunt Agatha Pixley	Mabel Van Buren
Agnes Bowman	Helen Jerome Eddy
Director	Charles J. Brabin

THE STORY

Captain Jabez Scudd, a seafaring man, learns that Agnes Bowman, his sweetheart, has married, therefore he never returns home. This was a misprint, her sister Agatha being the one that married. A child is born to Agnes. When Ruth is ten years old Agnes dies, and the child goes to her Aunt Agatha in Sandwich. Eric, her son, and Ruth, love each other and become engaged.

Captain Scudd now returns, and Agatha tells him Ruth is his child. He does not dare disclose himself to Ruth. Scudd is hired by the Hawleys to command "The Wasp," and Eric ships as first mate.

The Hawleys induce Captain Scudd to run her on the rocks, but while out at sea as they were just about succeeding, Eric saves her. When the owners see "The Wasp" return they are incensed. While Eric was on the trip Jim Hawley, who was under the clutches of Eliza, proposes to Ruth, but she repulses them. Eliza, who attended Ruth's mother when she was born, is angered at Jim's neglect, and tells him of Ruth's past. He now threatens Ruth with disclosure unless she marry him, and for the first time she learns of her past. Ruth refuses to marry Eric because of this, but Scudd confesses to her that he is her father. That night Jim Hawley burns "The Wasp" to collect the insurance. Ruth sees this, and, thinking Eric is on it in danger, she goes to the rescue but is overcome. Eric hears of this, and arrives on board in time to save Ruth. She no longer holds out against his entreaties to marry her.

"For Husbands Only"

Lois Weber Scores Again—Mildred Harris Scores Again—Jewel Scores Again

(Lois Weber Production Released Through Jewel)

"FOR HUSBANDS ONLY" is in a class by itself. Lois Weber has branched out into the broad highway in staging these six reels—and produced a picture along new lines and without a borrowed idea.

The story is so original you are unable to guess the action ten feet ahead. There isn't one slow moment—it certainly keeps you up in the air. And to top it all—there is a surprise ending entirely different from what you expected.

"For Husbands Only" is a clean play and as an entertainment will appeal to all classes. However, it best fits high-class houses.

Mildred Harris is at her best in the principal role, while the support has been most successfully selected. The direction is flawless, the photography and lighting up to the best standard.

SUGGESTIONS.—The title offers unlimited opportunities for advertising. Besides, you have the picture back of you, but don't sit down and expect the people to come in.

Double up your efforts, use double and triple the amount of space you usually get in the papers. Work twice and thrice as hard, yell all you can, use your brains and muscle.

At least you will have the satisfaction of knowing you can back your talk with the goods.

THE CAST

Toni Wylde	Mildred Harris
Rolin Van D'Arcy	Lewis J. Cody
Samuel Dodge	Fred Goodwins

THE STORY

Rolin Van D'Arcy, in flirting with convent-bred Toni Wylde, tells her that he is not a marrying man. Toni, her pride wounded, as a solace marries Samuel Dodge. She is bent on revenge for the insult and starts flirting with D'Arcy in order to humiliate him. Then when he finds out she is playing with him he resolves to force her hand. It is now a game of wits.

He prepares to produce a play at his private theatre, in which the principal characters represent Toni, Samuel and himself. The action of the play parallels the game she is playing with him, only placing the worst construction on it, the title being, "For Husband Only," with only men allowed to be present. D'Arcy leaves during the performance to call on Toni and tells her about his trick, also that her husband is in a front seat where he wouldn't miss any of the play. She now realizes the desperate situation she has forced herself into, but when Samuel returns after the play he tells her he was so tired from overwork that day that he slept through the play. She now realizes how much she loves him.

NOTE: "For Husbands Only" was not scheduled for release till early Fall, but after seeing the picture became so enthused over it that I spoke to R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, and Mr. Laemmle about the injustice of allowing such a good picture to lie on the shelf at a time like this. I believe there is now a possibility of the release date being advanced—but will yet you know more definitely next week.

"Innocent's Progress"

Pauline Starke in a Sympathetic Role—Holds the Interest Well

TAKEN as a whole this is a good picture with plenty of heart interest—one that will hold the attention to the end. One point, however, might just as well have been omitted—the death of a good woman.

We wish to impress here, upon scenario writers and directors, that the incorporation of death in a picture, even if the actual scene be not shown, is by no means entertaining. It seems strange that, in eight cases out of ten, the story will "kill" somebody who has won a place in your heart, particularly so where such death is not necessary and coulld have been left out of the story. There are a thousand other ways to bring a story to a satisfactory conclusion—why stick to this feature?

Of course, this incident in this particular case will not actually harm the picture, but I am taking this opportunity to tell the producers to leave it alone.

THE CAST

Tessa Fayne	Pauline Starke
Madeline Carson	Lillian West
Carey Larned	Jack Livingston
Director	Frank Burzage

THE STORY

Tessa Fayne, an eighteen-year-old orphan, lives with her crabbed aunt in a small New England town. She obtains employment in the village candy shop, meets an itinerant actor, who tells her he loves her, and leaves his card with his New York address.

Tessa rebels at her slavery, and goes to New York, but finds her actor friend is married. Caught in a heavy rain she seeks shelter in a restaurant. With only a few cents in her pocket she faces starvation. Fleeing from night harpies she is saved by Carey Larned, a rich clubman, who takes her under his protective wing, placing her in the care of an old friend, Mrs. Madeline Carson. He goes West to recover his health, and Tessa becomes a woman of culture and refinement. When Larned returns home on receiving word that Mrs. Carson was killed in an accident he falls in love with Tessa and marries her.

"Paid in Advance"

The Canadian Woods and the Klondike—A Sure-Fire Combination

(Jewel Special—Six Reels)

A PICTURE that will grip and hold you nailed to your seat. One that will make you feel you have got your money's worth. It's a Canadian woods story, shifting to the Klondike—the kind that never fails to take well with the public.

The acting is true to life; the types, excellent.

Director Holubar thoroughly understood the subject he was handling and has secured the proper atmosphere throughout.

This is a good, strong picture that needs—and deserves—special advertising and plenty of it.

THE CAST

Joan, the girl	Dorothy Phillips
John Gray, her father	Joseph Girard
Bateese Le Blanc	Lon Chaney
Jim Blood, "The Cur"	William Stowell
Gold Dust Barker	Frank Brown Lee

THE STORY

"Gold Dust Barker," of the Yukon, proposes to John Gray that he come to that country as head trapper and offers his daughter Joan a position as nurse. Gray accepts, but en route he dies, Joan arriving alone. She finds that it was a trick to get possession of her, and that Barker's is a place of ill repute. She scorns the advances of "Gold Dust," and other men who finally cut her off because she is "straight."

Finding herself driven to the wall she dons a fancy dance costume, and, rushing into the dance hall, offers herself in marriage to the highest bidders. The men go wild—bid like mad animals, when drunken Jim, pitying Joan, offers his claim worth $100,000. They are married by a Justice of the Peace. Regan and Barker forge an I. O. U. of Jim's amounting to $100 into $100,000, and going to Jim's cabin demand Joan, and take her away since Jim couldn't pay. His manhood is aroused to fury, and he rushes into the dance hall, killing Barker and Regan. He tells Joan he loves her, then disappears. She realizes his bravery, and what it has meant. Waiting in vain for his return she goes home to Montreal. Later she is called to Dawson on business, and is startled to find there Jim Blood, the man she loves. Another moment and Jim realizes he has come into his own at last.

The "Bride's Awakening"

NOTE: The "Bride's Awakening" is a special Universal production, released May 20, and not a Blue Bird, as was stated in the last issue.

"Nancy Comes Back"

A Light Comedy Drama That Is Exceedingly Light

(Triangle—March 24th)

THIS is supposed to be a light comedy drama, and certainly the impression it gives is that neither the director nor any of the cast took their work very seriously.

It is apparent from the very beginning that everything in this picture is mechanical, every incident being made to fit in like a piece of machinery. As a result, no one will give it much more than a passing thought.

Star, miscast; supporting cast, fair.

However it is a clean picture.

THE CAST

Mr. Mortimer Worthing	George Pearce
Mrs. Mortimer Worthing	Myrtle Rishell
Nancy Worthing	Myrtle Lind
Mrs. Jerry Ballou	Ann Dodge
Mr. Jerry Ballou	Percy Challenger
Phil Ballou	Jack Gilbert
Director	Jack Dillon

THE STORY

Nancy Worthing returns from a seminary filled with visions of social delights, but finds her parents have no time to devote to her because of their own social engagements.

With money obtained by pawning her mother's sable coat and jewels she outfits herself in regal fashion. She goes to Garibaldi's cabaret with her father's chauffeur as escort that evening. While the gayety is at its height a shooting affray takes place. Her escort wrests a pistol from the assailant but is mistaken for the gunman and is arrested. Nancy flees home.

The chauffeur, arraigned on the shooting charge, is found to have a girl's bag in which are pawn tickets in his pocket. He refuses to reveal how he came into possession of the bag and is held as a robbery suspect.

Discovery of the robbery at the Worthing home sets the police in action and they connect the chauffeur with the crime, whereupon Nancy breaks down and confesses that she is the thief.

It then develops that the chauffeur is the son of a socially prominent family. The dilemma in which the two have been placed starts a romance which leads to happiness.

"The Danger Within"

Little Zoe Rae Successfully Plays on an Old Man's Heartstrings—And Also on Those of the Audience

(Bluebird—May 5th)

THERE must be something wrong with any person who fails to like this picture. He had better see a doctor. Zoe Rae certainly can set your heartstrings vibrating if anybody can, and she does it effectively in "The Danger Within."

It's a clean and sweet story. The softening of the hardened old man, will appeal to any age and any audience. Of course the skeptical will find some faults, as, for instance, the fact that little Zoe Rae is much too young for such a part. Nevertheless, your audience will overlook this, because the entertainment is there and worth the time and money spent.

THE CAST

Tom Paulton	Wm. Carroll
Grace Paulton	Winifred Greenwood
Dolly Paulton	Zoe Rae
Matthew Wedgestone	C. H. Mailes
Dr. Trevick	H. Dunkinson
Gilbert Bolton	True Boardman

THE STORY

Tom Paulton, a bookkeeper, unable to make both ends meet, asks his employer, Matthew Wedgestone, for a raise, but is refused. Gilbert Bolton, Wedgestone's manager plots with Dr. Trevick to raid Wedgestone's stocks. Dr. Trevick declares the latter's butler has smallpox, reports it to the Board of Health, which quarantine the house. Prior to this, Dolly, Paulton's little daughter, applies for position as housekeeper at the rich man's home. Just then the guard arrives, and she is included in the quarantine. Dolly and Wedgestone become pals. She discovers the butler's duplicity, and tells Wedgestone, who on finding the telephone wires cut, suspects a plot to ruin him. He gives Dolly a note, authorizing her father to assume charge of his affairs, and asks her to sneak away and reach her father with it. She does, and her father assumes management, has the former manager arrested, and incidentally saves Wedgestone from ruin. In appreciation, Wedgestone makes Paulton manager, and gives him a deed to the house he lives in.

Three Triangle Films in Editing Room

TWO comedies, both two-reelers, and one five-reel feature picture have been completed by Triangle during the week past and are now in the film editing department awaiting shipment. One comedy, "Mr. Briggs Closes the House," was written by Mrs. Kate Corbaley. Working with Director William Beaudine in this picture were Edwin Brady, Myrtle Rishell and Anna Dodge. "First Aid" is the other comedy, with William Franey, Maude Wayne, Myrtle Reeves and Burwell Hamrick. Herman Raymaker handled the megaphone on this new funmaker, which shows various Keystone beauties in bathing regalia, in beach scenes. "Society for Sale," an English society romance, is the feature picture above referred to, with William Desmond in the leading role, supported by Gloria Swanson. A fashion show in a London modiste's shop was staged for this production.

Triangle Director Cliff Smith and his Western company, headed by the "cowboy star," Roy Stewart, are working on one of the glass stages for the finishing scenes of their latest picture, the title of which has been changed from "The Derelict" to "Paying His Debt." During the last days of work at the big Triangle Ranch Studio, the entire company was given a real thrill when Abe Farra, Triangle cowboy and former champion bucking horse rider of Oklahoma, proved himself to be a real stage coach driver. Farra was called on to put a stage coach drawn by four bronchos over the side of a mountain in a holdup scene. When the journey was started there were seven passengers on the top of the stage as human ballast. In the first wild plunge Farra's mustangs went into a ditch and only a superhuman feat by Farra kept the stage right side up. However, he broke his brakes in the crash and there was nothing left to do but keep the horses on the dead run down the mountainside. When Farra reached the tableland at the foot of the mountain and finally brought his coach to a stop he looked back and saw one lone passenger, Earnie Johnstone, the company property man. The other six passengers had been pitched from the stage in the furious ride.

Director Thomas N. Heffron and company have been working in the little village of Norwalk, Cal., for several days doing location work for "The Lonely Woman," a new Morosco play, with Belle Bennett in the title role.

St. Louis Columbia Uses "Judge Brown"

According to General Film, one indication of the approval won by the Judge Brown stories, the series of two-reel boy comedy-dramas being distributed by General Film Company, is the attention given them by a St. Louis exhibitor. The Columbia theatre, playing continuous vaudeville with pictures, advertises the Judge Brown stories as the feature of its picture program. According to H. E. Elder, General's branch manager in St. Louis, this theatre has booked the Judge Brown stories for twenty consecutive weeks, each release being given a week's run.

Theatre Men Meet Bunco Artists?

An exhibitor of Iowa, along with others of his brothers in business, has sent out a warning broadcast against a representative who, he says, had a new scheme of distributing films—and incidentally collecting some ready money.

In his letter of warning, the Iowa exhibitor said: "There was a man here last night from Minneapolis representing a company who he said would open an office in Des Moines and handle all kinds of subjects, and by so doing be able to furnish exhibitors with any kind of service now used at one-half of prices paid now for the reason that this arrangement would eliminate the overhead expenses of so many separate exchanges—all paper at one-half of present cost—no reel tax or deposits, etc. In short, a revolution in the business. He had a scheme for membership in the concern and he seemed to have caught several exhibitors near here as he had their checks, etc. He claimed that all the producing companies were in it and had a large list of them. I did not see fit to invest, and I would like to know if there is anything of this kind in progress. Kindly advise."

Waters Manages Army City House

Exhibitor J. L. Waters of the Lyric theatre, Sioux City, Ia., has gone to assume charge of a theatre at Army City, just outside Camp Funston, Kan., a national army camp. The Lyric theatre building is being torn down to make a place for a big store building.

Newark Gives "Co-op" Lesson

What One Newspaper There Has Done for the Theatres and How It Benefits

BECAUSE it is so close to New York City and because so many of its people work in the metropolis the ordinary observer is liable to look upon Newark as one of the smaller cities, though it is one of the principal centers of the country with a population in 1910 of 389,000 and much larger now. Still, to a considerable extent it is affected by New York. Possibly five per cent of the people are employed in the metropolis while the circulation of the various Newark newspapers as given in the latest newspaper directory appear rather low for a city of the size. This is explained by the large circulation of the New York papers. All of these things have to be taken into consideration in considering co-operation between the newspapers and the motion picture theatres.

In many ways Newark is not an ideal motion picture city. Double bills are almost the rule there and only last week we told of one of the leading theatres giving three important features for one price of admission. One must remember that the motion picture started out as a novelty and that it had its principal drawing from that fact. In most cities, when the newness began to wear off most exhibitors did not realize that the way in which to build business was to advertise, and it required many years to induce even the majority of the leading theatres to use newspaper space. Finally a considerable majority did this. Others turned to the "bargain" style of exhibition, trying to get the patronage by larger bill, the mere mass of matter offered. This is where the double feature bill originated.

But although the average Newark theatre is still giving the double bill, they are showing a desire to use newspaper space and to use it intelligently and that is a most hopeful sign, for intelligent exploitation enables a manager to drop mere length of matter and to give the people a really balanced show, with greater net profits to his house, though he may be spending in the newspapers an amount a year ago he would have believed the height of folly.

Advertising is a cure for many evils. It is the greatest tonic in the world for run-down houses, and it will put new pep in those houses that need to get out of the rut and accomplish more. The manager of the successful theatre already knows that it is a NECESSITY.

Newark's story shows what can be done in a city where the motion picture interests have suffered because of the lack of co-operation, because either the exhibitor element or the newspapers have not made the proper effort to co-operate. It especially furnished a lesson to newspapers in those cities where it has been found very difficult to persuade the theatre manager that he should advertise. This article will prove that if the newspaper goes about the problem in the right way he can get this advertising in a measure that will make it pay.

If you are the one manager in your city that really believes in advertising, and if you wanted to get the fullest amount of co-operation from your newspaper, take this story to the editor or the advertising manager and it will help you to convince him that there is profit to all parties. That is the object of these articles, to secure greater co-operation, to convince the newspaper that it ought to go more than half way with the motion picture manager, and to insist that the theatre proprietor then meet the newspaper publisher more than beyond the middle point with a volume of advertising that will make the newspaper more than break even and still build volumes of business for the theatre.

Until recently there was no Newark newspaper that was doing anything unusual for the motion picture theatre though just as much as the patronage of the theatres deserved. There is now one, and its record is a splendid one and worth remembering.

Because we want to discuss conditions that may obtain in other cities, we are omitting from consideration the paper that is published only on Sunday. Its existence is largely caused by the invasion of the New York dailies during the week and the fact that the people will buy a home paper more liberally on Sunday. The other papers are:

Ledger, Morning Daily and Sunday.
News, Afternoon Daily.
Star-Eagle, Afternoon Daily.

Now in the case of the two latter papers the Saturday afternoon edition takes the place of the Sunday edition, so let us see what they are doing on Saturdays.

Last Saturday's issue of the Star-Eagle devoted a page to legitimate, vaudeville and motion picture theatres all together. It carries single column cuts of various players belonging to the three branches of the industry and short stores about the production, under separate headings, but with no attempt to classify them. It carries advertisements of the Fox Terminal, Newark, Goodwin and Loew's theatre, a total of twenty-one inches or a little more than the average newspaper column—certainly not much of a showing to expect a paper to turn itself over trying to do things for the motion picture house.

The News separates the motion picture from the theatre department, printing them on opposite pages, devoting an attractive three-column layout to motion pictures and then reading notices for each theatre, a total of about 2½ columns of space. It carries the advertising of the Goodwin, Fox, Terminal, Newark, Strand, Paramount, Fox's Carlton and Loew's for a total of 45 inches of display, or more than two columns of paid matter. Without knowing the inside rules of the office we would say that the paper's policy is to devote as much reading matter to free matter as to paid matter—that is the amusement rule on many papers. As we have said, this reading matter is devoted to notices about the various bills.

Now let us take the Sunday Ledger, which compared to the two Saturday afternoon papers, seems a revelation of what can be done and of the advertising that can be secured from the motion picture theatres. True, the Ledger is the only daily paper with a Sunday edition and this is a big advantage, but we happen to know that one of the reasons for this splendid advertising showing is the policy that is pursued by the newspaper and the co-operation that is given by the photoplay editor. For instance, all of the large displays are designed by the Ledger's own artists and the appearance of them shows that they have been given careful attention. The photoplay editor familiarizes himself with the character of the productions before they come to Newark, outlines his ideas to the artist and then the sketches are taken to the theatre manager—and in most cases they are sold for big space.

We are convinced that the average newspaper publisher does not realize that the general run of motion picture theatre manager is not a trained advertising manager. It is mighty difficult for the advertising solicitor to sell that man a half page or a quarter page of space when the man who is buying it does not know what to do with the space that he buys. It is mistaken policy for any newspaper merely to sell space; be sure that your advertiser is going to get returns. In fact, you have got to see that he gets them if you are going to hold a former non-advertiser. They should have a man on their staff who is familiar enough with motion pictures to outline the advertisements for exhibitor. Even if the newspaper cannot afford to supply an artist for that special purpose hundreds of good ideas can be secured from the manufacturers' displays in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and from a half dozen selected newspapers of other cities.

But few newspaper men will read this for this is a publication

What Is The Matter With Pictures?

EVERYBODY wants better pictures. The patron wants those that will send him away from the theatre satisfied with the evening's amusement. The exhibitor wants those that will bring him more patronage. The manufacturers want to make those that will have the greatest bookings. Everyone who is seriously interested in the industry wants to know the answer to the question: "What is the matter with pictures?"

We do not believe that there is any body of men in the world so well fitted to answer this question as the members of our Advisory Board, so with an introductory article last week, we have asked the various members to tell the industry through the NEWS what sort of pictures are in demand, how the manufacturer can improve his product and how everyone will benefit. Some of the first answers are printed here. These come from New York state alone, but the whole country will be covered in coming issues. It is the greatest symposium ever printed. The man who fails to read every word of it will miss a great chance to get at the source of many picture troubles.

SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL, of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, and who has long been a contributor to this department, pleads that length is one thing to be tabooed in pictures and appeals to the producers to make them the footage that the subject really requires, without reference to the footage that will result:

The kind of pictures that are necessary for the advancement of the motion picture industry are those that are primarily produced in good taste. This, in my opinion, is one of the great drawbacks to the present day production. Good taste throughout is eminently superior to the picture with the one punch, which punch is some dramatic moment not too well done. Careful attention to detail, subtlety, thought and imagination and, above all, good stories (not stories built to fit any particular star but rather have the star fit the story) is true artistry.

There has been too much of this going on of late years, that is, stories being made and chopped to pieces so as to suit the star. We want good stars and they can make themselves an institution which will be their biggest asset, but they must also be generous and broadminded enough that when another part of the story has equal prominence as theirs they should not obliterate that part of the story. If they are true artists they will also be generous artists and they will be thought of more kindly for their generosity than if they tried to hog the picture which unfortunately is the case too often.

It appears to me that great strides can be made in the technical part of the motion picture. Surely photography has not as yet reached its height as is proven by some of the work done by the Lasky Corporation. Precedent should not be followed too closely and I am sure that a little thought would do a great deal toward the betterment of motion pictures as a whole.

Titling also, in my opinion, is due for great improvement. Florid titles, hypersensational titles are the greatest offenders against good taste. Another great important thing is that when a spoken title is flashed it should be as near as possible to the height of the lips in which it is spoken, thereby not drawing the eyes down to the center of the screen simply because it is the center. It causes a break in the continuity which is just as bad as though the picture broke.

Length is another thing to be tabood. Pictures should be made according to their respective subject, the length making no difference whatever. If a picture needs seven thousand feet to tell a story why then that is absolutely all right, but a great many stories could be told in three thousand feet that now take up more than five thousand.

Casting is also a very important thing that might be looked into and will bear great improvement if watched a little more carefully. The one thing that at this time is so important and that, in my opinion, is more valuable than anything else is the nature of the subject.

I have found through actual experience that the public does not want to be thrown into the depths of gloom. They want a smile and they don't mind a little tear once in a while if the contrast will give them a smile afterwards. This is especially important at this time. It appears to me that comedies by popular American writers like Whitcomb Riley and many others could be filmed to excellent advantage and this humor that has laid dormant so many years can now be brought out to excellent advantage. I have in mind the Tom Sawyer series and Taylor Holmes in "Ruggles of Red Gap."

These pictures were very much liked and producers will do well to take heed of this trend. I don't believe that the spectacular massive production will be necessary for a year or two at least, and I look forward to the day when the producer will make subjects of all lengths so that a program can be arranged that will be varied, entertaining and uplifting, and in good taste.

UNQUESTIONABLY one of the finest neighborhood houses in the country is the Victoria, Buffalo, and its successful manager, Edward L. Hyman, shows some of the reasons for that success in his criticism of present day pictures. His outline of the pictures that draw best at his theatre is illuminating and should furnish a good basis for production:

What DO they want?

The question begins with the producer, the scenario writer, the exchange man, the film salesman and ends up with the exhibitor.

We all know that; there is nothing new in that finding.

Yet when the manager has "plugged" a picture in every conceivable advertising way, the weather is good, his music is the best he can get, his house is a beauty and his prices are moderate—and his receipts aren't enough to pay expenses—the buck must be passed to those who create and build the pictures.

What DO they want?

arithmetic. I have turned them over and analyzed them from every angle. I have petitioned them to tell me their major likes and dislikes, and I have time and time again met them at the door and asked them how they liked the show.

Other exhibitors have done the same, and it is in these assembled findings that the scenario writer and the producer is going to find the rudder that will steer them the nearest to safety.

My findings are from observation and experience. Mine is a community house, my patrons are like those of all other cities. They want the biggest stars and the most entertainment they can get for their money, and they want it consistently. With the help of the producer every minute the exhibitor can meet the demand.

The scenario writer and the producer must remember that the great mass of picture fans are not composed of highbrows, and that is why certain wonderful productions have gone astray—because they have been over the heads of the wayfaring man and woman. I have ceased buying pictures that my patrons do not understand.

But this is only a minor complaint, as I find it. However, I believe that there are many exhibitors who will agree with me when I tell you frankly and as one exhibitor to another, that these pictures cited below are the pictures that always draw crowds.

> Productions that contain a high note of clean romance, plenty of sunshine, thrills to keep the men awake and gowns to meet the hunger of women who love to look upon such creations but who cannot afford them.
> Plays that star the foremost players; a wonderfully constructed film with unknown and mediocre players often do not seem to be adequate.
> Plays that move swiftly, wherein the padding process is conspicuous by its elimination.
> Films that introduce pretty and winsome children, for the parent heart seems to have a place in man, woman and even the youngsters.
> Plays that are not depressing and ones that move so smoothly and coherent that it is not difficult to tie the ends together and to assimilate the story with the least mental exertion.
> Comedies that do not disgust, but bring out the laughs without forcing them. There is nothing more pitiful than a comedy that falls flat.
> Better stories by better authors and above all a decreased production of film and the building of better ones.

There has been a lack of showmanship too. Exhibitors have not given the producer the support they should. Many a picture can be strengthened by the manner of presentation. The mere projection ofttimes won't suffice. Accentuate the plot if necessary. It can be done by effects and novelties that won't cost much and after the producer reads how you bolstered up his play he will learn wherein he and his players must centralize the most attention.

The producer must see to it that he keeps the fans glad. Give them pictures of the great outdoors and don't rely upon an overestimated star too much.

I have found that society dramas please the women mightily, and the men as well. Remember, that women are our greatest allies and femininity is vain and loves to look upon the beautiful in wearables, while man loves a pretty face and figure.

Too many producers have capitalized Trouble. I find my patrons come to the theatre to forget theirs. Why pour more trials and tribulations upon the screen?

Comedy dramas, stories of the lighter vein, elaborate titles and artistically done, and plenty of country life films for the men and women who always hanker for the rural life and whose hankering gets its materialization only in the picture theatre.

More productions like "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," good comedies of the Fairbanks type.

Comedies with themes that are usual in the lives of your patrons; action that is fast and furious in these comicalities.

The picturization of those novels and stories that have pleased the multitudes, the producer sticking in so far as possible to the book version, just allowing the production men enough license to inject the necessary thrill material. Too many novels that are picturized can prove no relation to the original story and the film fans are disappointed.

AMERICAN stories, with their foundation American optimism and enthusiasm, are the sort of picture that is most wanted, declares Harold B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, and one of the most successful and most enterprising of the managers of the country. He believes that there should be a purpose behind every photoplay produced:

What does the public want!

Primarily they want good entertainment—stories with a gripping heart interest that appeals to their intelligence. Comedy that will make them laugh and yet be clean. There should be a purpose—a reason—a message in every photoplay; not merely a dressing for same favored star. In some instances too much effort is made to fit the story to the star, rather than have the star fit the story. The producer ought to take as much care in selecting stories as he does stars. Both are essential!

The box office shows that the public will support stars when they appear in good vehicles. A good many pictures are measured by footage rather than merit by the manufacturer. Better to give the public thirty-five hundred feet of good story rather than drag it out to the customary five thousand feet.

The motion picture has developed a comedy all its own. It is often referred to as "slap-stick." It is difficult to find the equal in any branch of the theatre that provokes as much laughter. It is an art that should be highly developed. There is a tendency, however, to become suggestive which should be discouraged by producers. It must be remembered that pictures must appeal to every one in the family. Its appeal to family patronage has been its staunchest support.

The American public naturally prefer American stories. The foundation of the success of one of the biggest movie stars is American optimism and enthusiasm. Stories of the great West always appear to please the public. Costume or period plays are not favored.

A great day for the motion picture is coming—when the producer will not hesitate to shelve at his own expense those pictures that do not meet with public approval—the same way as a Broadway failure finds its way to the storehouse. His reward, however, with successful pictures will be greater, and in that way he will be enabled to stand the financial loss of those pictures that have not made good. It is not right to force a poor picture on the exhibitor and the public—and its practice is not a healthy one for the future of the industry.

J. A. PARTINGTON, manager of the Imperial theatre, San Francisco, this week becomes one of the members of the Advisory Board. It is not our fault or his that the announcement has been so much delayed, but it is entirely due to the irregularity of mails that has interfered with the prompt receipt by him of our letter and the delay of his in reaching us. Mr. Partington is known from coast to coast. He is manager of one of the finest theatres in the country and a leader in the Pacific colony, and when he comes to New York he always makes them "sit up and take notice," with the ideas that he advances.

So when he says: "I will be glad to cooperate with you along the lines you have suggested," you know that this means he is likely to start something without any warning.

Your Idea---and Ours

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY are making an unusual drive on behalf of the exhibitors who will show "The Blue Bird," Maeterlinck's masterpiece, which has just been made into a picture. On Sunday, March 24, this full page ad in colors appeared in all of the Hearst newspapers. It is probably the most artistic creation that has yet been done in behalf of a picture and the black and white reproduction here shown fails to reveal the beauty of it.

In addition to this there have been two special press books issued, one giving scenes from the production and telling about it, and the other a comprehensive guide for putting over the pictures. Display advertisements are furnished from two columns up to a half page and the exhibitors are advised to use plenty of space on the production. All of the advertising is designed in full sympathy with the story and ought to attract unusual attention wherever it is shown.

You work in the land of make believe is making the public believe in you.

CRITERION THEATRE, Atlanta, Ga., is uniformly one of the best advertised theatres in the country and it certainly stands out in its own city where most of the houses do not do the best class of work. Whoever is responsible for these displays does the only safe thing to do and that is to get one big gripping idea before he starts to work. There is always one idea that dominates his displays and when such a course is followed they are bound to attract attention.

MADAM WHO

In this case the reproduction does not show the full effectiveness, for with "Madam Who" the background is a Confederate flag flying from a mast. The scenes of the story are laid in the South during the war, and Atlanta being a Southern city the appropriateness of this is evident. However, just a caution. Don't try to do this with the American flag. It is against the law to use it in connection with advertising.

Some exhibitors when they announce that they are showing a "feature and a comedy" tell the truth—that's just about all they are showing.

The successful exhibitor is he who has taken the "im" out of impossible and put in an IMmeasurably better show.

HUNDRED PER CENT FULLERTON, who designs advertising for the Coliseum and Liberty theatres, Seattle, Wash., always tries to look for the central idea in putting over a picture and to drive home that one idea. All of you are probably familiar with his style of work by this time, and know that he nearly always uses either a large halftone or cut as the main smash of his display. Then the minimum amount of reading matter follows.

A couple of weeks ago the Coliseum played "Eve's Daughter," and so the central point to illustrate was the fig leaf which Eve is recorded as having worn. Fullerton did not want to take any chance of being called about the sort of a leaf that he used, so he hunted up the record to get just the correct design and now he defies us to find anything wrong with the leaf. We are not going to try, for Fullerton is usually right.

And while we are talking about the "central idea," remember that Fullerton always gathers some descriptive phrase to use with the picture. Look at the one he picked this time.

Don't worry about the fellow that is imitating. Worry about doing things that will imitate you the more.

YES, this is a page advertisement. It appears in the Minneapolis papers and represents the exploitation of one string of houses. We cannot imagine a worse use of space than this, the announcements of six theatres all jumbled together so that the eye catches nothing on opening the page. It is always well to avoid the freak in advertising unless you are mighty sure of your ground.

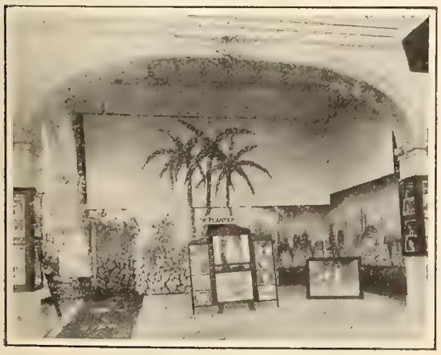
dicate houses should be avoided where possible, and we strongly recommend the use of separate space for each theatre under the same management. That is one thing, and another is setting the appeals against each other. Now note that in describing the bill at the New Grand the writer of the display declares it "The biggest and best show in many moons." Then, if that is true why shouldn't every reader of the display be convinced that this is the show that he wants to see? We certainly do hate to see a beautiful picture like "Amarilly" and a splendidly designed display lined up against "Cheyenne Days."

No, no one sent this in. We simply couldn't miss it in looking over a copy of the paper.

The fish that got away is the fellow that you want to seine deep for—with a vigorous advertising campaign.

RECENTLY we printed a display used by Manager S. P. Totten of the Star theatre, Everett, Wash., on "The Honor System." Here is another one that he used with "The Planter." The Star has a large lobby that lends itself well to displays and Mr. Totten believes in making his displays simple and striking. Notice that the whole effect is that of a stage setting. He has used cut outs from the three sheets furnished by Mutual for the figures and then brought out the palm trees as his main feature with the walls of rock and the country scene in the background. One thing that strikes us very forcibly about this display is the fact that he made the display itself attract the attention and did not plaster the name of the picture in big letters all over it. The name appears but one place, over the center display frame, and it doubtless attracted much more attention than had it been heralded in the usual style.



The showman who is content to do the same today as a year ago is apt to find that Father Time has double-crossed him and bound him permanently to yesterday.

HERE is a clever display that was used on St. Patrick's Sunday by Thomas D. Soriero, of the Park theatre, Boston, and it was very simple, merely the reproduction of a shamrock, done in Ben Day, with the announcement of the bill lettered over it. Mr. Soriero always used plenty of white space around his displays, which sets them off and in this case the sign was so distinctive that it stood out clearly amidst the mass of others.

And that brings up a little warning. Many exhibitors are able to design displays which are attractive in themselves, but they fail to figure on the position that it will occupy in the newspapers. Unless you make them so big that they will dominate the page, you have to count on how effective they will appear with other displays alongside. In cities where there are so many newspapers as Boston one theatre could not afford to dominate every paper by the amount of space used and so the Park has solved this problem with original designs and by leaving enough white space around these so that they will stand out. His is far and away the best advertising in Boston.

One blast of the big cannon now and then doesn't do nearly as much damage as the steady fire of the machine gun. That's a good thing to remember in your advertising.

IN Madge Kennedy pictures from Goldwyn, the line, "Her eyes and her smile," are good for the exhibitor to use in exploiting the picture and most of them realize the value of it, but Managing Director S. Barrett McCormick, of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, has gone still further with the idea in this clever display by having a special cut made, one showing just the forehead and the eyes and the other the mouth—with, of course, the smile on it. It is so different from the ordinary display that it will attract attention anywhere and we recommend to exhibitors that they try the idea the next time they play a Madge Kennedy picture. In these war days the public likes characters with a smile around them and when you exploit pictures of this sort in a human way you build for better business.

All of the advertising done by Mr. McCormick on this picture, which ran four days, was of the chatty, intimate sort that fitted in well with the character of the picture.

Before you pass something good by because you "can't afford it" figure up how much more you'll have to spend a year from now when you are forced to do it, and figure, too, where the other fellow will be by that time.

A NOVEL idea recently launched in Buffalo is the munition workers' matinee given in the New Victoria theatre at West Ferry street and Grant. Here Manager Edward L. Hyman gives a special program every Tuesday and Thursday afternoon for the entertainment of the thousands of war workers who reside in this district and who work on the night shifts in the great Curtiss airplane and Pierce-Arrow plants. Most of these workers live in the vicinity.

Using Every Angle of Exploitation

This is the twelfth of our series of articles, "The Diary of a Successful Exhibitor," by an exhibitor who tells each week what he is doing to develop his house, the lessons that he learns and the errors that he discovers. It is a frank discussion of the pleasures and evils of exhibition in a town of 15,000, and the tips contained here will probably be of value to managers in all sections.

By a Successful Exhibitor

MY success with this one publication was so great that I decided to include several other periodicals which circulated to a considerable extent in my territory and stories from which were often made into pictures. I decided to write direct to the publishers for the list of subscribers in my territory and to my surprise I got them, probably because of the way that I framed the letter each one of them replied. I pointed out to them that my plan would increase the interest in their magazine, by giving the readers and the photoplay patrons a common interest. However, while this idea of mine succeeded once I would not advise others to try it because it has probably been worked to death by this time and the publisher will probably refuse. However, I had really expected them to refuse and had planned to go to the extent of having a couple of solicitors go over the country and gather information about what magazine each family was taking, I figured that the new subscriptions that they would get would pay the expenses of the canvass, and in another year I tried that plan with success.

Now while this periodical proposition is important in itself, I have cited it chiefly to show that the exhibitor can build his business by paying attention to the little things and leaving none of the fields untouched. After a few months in any town you can tell pretty well who are the patrons who are coming to your house. Then the problem is for you to get those who are not coming to your theatre, but going to another and to get those that are not attending any theatre. Between the two things it has been my experience that better pictures and better presentation of them and better surroundings are the proper means to draw the patronage from the other fellow, but once drawn away he is not nearly as sure to stay as is the new patrons that you have developed. Any man or woman who has not been a lover of pictures and whom you convert is pretty apt to be your exclusive patron so long as you do not disgust him with mediocre entertainment.

Last week I rapped the circular letter proposition as recommended for constant use by some of the producers, but there are instances when this plan can be followed and will get some new patrons to the theatre. But in every case that you use these for this purpose be sure that you know the picture is an unusually good one—select something that will please the supercritical. Make up your mind that at the same time that you are getting this non-patron to your theatre, you are going to give him such a finished presentation that he will go away delighted.

I disagree with those theatre managers who seek to let the public select the pictures that they want to see. In the first place the most of these do not know anything about pictures except what they see about them in the newspapers. Of course, they have their favorite stars and the stories that they have already read they are generally anxious to see on the screen. Naturally I have always tried to pick the stars that were the most popular and to get the most exploitation out of the stories from books. But further than that I do not believe that the exhibitor ought to go. The exhibitor who is really thinking can build up the popularity of other stars in his neighborhood even if they are not world beaters in popular favor over the whole country. I found that the photograph system was one of the best of these. Sometimes it is too expensive to give these pictures to every patron who asks for them, but in the majority of cases the expense is worth while. But don't hand these pictures out at the door. You may think that it is a good plan to proceed on the principle of rewarding those who attend your theatre, but if you will give close attention to this you will find many of these thrown on the floor or handed to children or in some other way disposed of so that they do not serve the purpose that you seek. Make the people write for them or request them at the box-office and then you are pretty sure of eliminating the waste.

Now keep a record of all those who ask for these pictures, and you are going to have a mighty good index as to the popularity of the players; in fact, you are going to know pretty closely which of your patrons want to see different stars and you can then work the mailing lists with better results. Don't go into a long letter about it. Simply say that "Mary Jones will be seen at the Blank theatre May 4 in her newest play, 'The Adventures of Stella.'" Now why do I advise you to use only a brief statement in these notes. In the first place they are more apt to be read. For the second reason take five or ten press sheets on the last five or ten of most any of the stars and see if these press sheets in great majority of cases do not assure you that "this is the greatest picture in which Mary Jones has ever appeared" or something similar. I have never been able to understand what the men who are responsible for many of these press books think of the exhibitors, and neither can I understand why so many of the exhibitors follow this advice blindly, when they know that they are deliberately fooling the public.

Many of the companies are giving intelligent aids. More are not. My experience has been that they should be followed with caution. Then you will soon learn to the degree that you can depend on the statements made in each of them. No exploitation scheme of any producer is good that is based on the idea that he is going to do all the thinking for the exhibitor is a good one. Of course, the manufacturer cannot be blamed if there are exhibitors who do not think for themselves, but let me say now that the exhibitor who fails to do this is not going to succeed. And I feel very sure that if I had blindly followed the advice offered me by various film companies that I would have still been one of the four exhibitors in my town and probably not even that.

Now I do believe in star pictures to a great extent, but I also believe, as I proved to my own satisfaction, that you can build up the popularity of those who are not well known. One of the features of my lobby displays had come to be not only stills on the present production and as many different pictures of the star as I could get which I used on the first day of the showing. On the second day I added the still on my to-morrow's production. I made it a point to collect every picture of the stars that I was playing that I could get and by taking several of the larger daily papers, the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and some of the "fan" magazines I was able to keep in touch with the new pictures of my stars and I would sit down and write for these. Part of the time I had to pay for these, sometimes my interest got them for me free. Within a year I had as many as a hundred poses of some of the players. Now not all of these by any means were actual photos of the star herself, but I used scene pictures that I had already employed and made cut outs for them, and mounted them attractively on cardboard and then framed them in glass, constantly adding to them. Under each one of these cut-outs I gave the name of the picture, the large letters at the top of the frame giving the name of the player. Now some of these stars were seen at my theatre as often as once a month, but you ought to see the interest that they created every time they were displayed. This veteran patron and that would stop to recall that they had seen Mary Jones in such and such a role and then there would follow discussions of her various pictures—all the best sort of stuff for advertising the theatre.

Yes, in a way this is "lots of trouble" and it costs a little more money to buy the set of stills on each production outright, instead of renting them and probably getting clean or torn copies, and it takes a little trouble to cut them out and mount them, but when you see the enjoyment that it gives your patrons you will see that it is worth while, that it is the permanent sort of interest builder for your house.

Next week I am going to tell you the instance of a practically unknown star that I made popular with my patrons, and how easily it can be done.

I have been working on the theory that there are probably a lot of people who want to see only the feature, and for that reason I have been running the comedies and short reels first. I would like to know your reason, for there must be some good one.—OHIO BEGINNER.

THE reason we run the comedy last is because we want to send our patrons away smiling. This is a great help.

It's a good thing to send the people out feeling pleasant. If possible—that is, if you have sufficient latitude and scope—inject good, clean comedy into every possible number of your program. It will help you.

LVII—I have been reading "Seeing the Rialto With Rothapfel" ever since these splendid articles started and have followed accounts of the Rivoli closely since the opening of that theatre and have been meaning to ask you a question that has been on my mind. I remember that one article about the Christmas week show referred to the lighted tree that you used. I haven't noted that you have paid much attention to other holidays or anniversaries and the like. Personally, I believe that is much overdone by many of the smaller houses that cannot really afford to do anything worth while. But I have three special bills that I am thinking of putting on, the first being Spring planting, or something of the sort; the other, anniversary week, which comes in July, and the other, Fall festival week, or something of the sort. I change my bill twice a week. Would you suggest that I run the special shows for the full week or just for the time of the feature, and what suggestions can you give me, especially as to the anniversary? The house will then be starting on its fourth year.—M. N. I.

YOUR plan to make festival weeks is a corking good idea, but unless you think that you can handle your show a full week I would advise you not to try because a good thing can be overdone.

The very fact that you are trying to make "Festival weeks" out of different bills is a sign that you are using your head and this will lead into other things—so, go to it.

A little suggestion for your fourth anniversary would be to give a special performance for every child in your neighborhood who is four years of age. Have a cake baked by your local baker and put four candles in it and use this to the limit. There are a thousand other things to do. Just use your head and think. So you see I extol thought as well as optimism.

LVIII—What do you consider the proper balance between pictures and musical numbers. I have a very good orchestra of eight pieces, and have tried the plan of playing an overture, and then another number between two of the pictures. My experience has been that the audience appreciates the overture, but that it becomes restlss during the second number. I have watched the people carefully, and all during this second number I note that they are either turning over their programs to see what is next or talking. I have been a careful reader of "Seeing the Rialto With Rothapfel," and I have seen that formerly you always had an overture and then a second orchestra number between the feature and the comedy. Now, I see that this second number is generally a soloist or chorus, and that you often introduce a chorus in the overture itself. Of course, it is impossible for me to give a show on the same scale as you, but I am interested in knowing whether you had any special reason to make these changes and how I can make my music more attractive.

Just a few words more. When I began my orchestral numbers I found that they were really unpopular. A considerable portion of my patronage is the working class, and as at that time I had no program printed I found that a great portion of the appreciation was lost by their not knowing what was being played. I have found that the program has increased the appreciation a hundred per cent. In the light of this would you advise me to go still further in the increase of the musical portion of the program, or would you wait until the patrons got "caught up" into the spirit of the second orchestral number, or would you rearrange the program and how?—HOOSIER.

YOUR trouble seems to be that your selection of the second orchestral number is not in keeping with your performance. I would suggest that you take little novelty numbers or a pretty number like "Meditation" from "Thais" or "Souvenir," by Drdla.

Make it a slow number. Don't play an overture or any big number, because the people will become restless. Your overture also must be more carefully handled.

See that it is not too long, and if it is, make cuts which of course will be in good taste. Use your head a little bit. The very fact that you yourself note the appreciation of your audience should be an inspiration to you. Of course go further, never stop, keep right on going. You have the right idea and I wish there were more exhibitors like you. Use your head, my boy, you are on the right road.

ASK WHOM YOU WISH

Any Member of the Advisory Board You Select Will Answer You

ALTHOUGH Mr. Rothapfel will continue to conduct this invaluable department, there may be cases where, because of local condition or because you know that some certain manager has had similar experiences to your own that you want to have some other member of the Advisory Board answer your question.

Any member will do that. The only requirements are that these questions must not refer to the merit of individual films or film services and that all of these questions must come through the NEWS. Use the name of the member of the board you want to answer in your address as: "McCormick Inquiry, Exhibitors Service Bureau, Motion Picture News."

There is no charge in the address for the Rothapfel inquiries, as given at the top of this page.

Don't give them the high sounding classical stuff but use the folk songs of this country such as the "Swanee River," "My Old Kentucky Home" and play it in a way that will touch the heart.

LVIX—I have a neighborhood house. The features that I show are some six weeks after they have been shown at the downtown houses. Now there are but two of the downtown houses at present that have an orchestra regularly. There are several that have pipe organs and various mechanical players. Considering the fact that I change my bill daily, and that is a necessity in my neighborhood, for I have tried longer runs without success and on big pictures, I show only at night, giving two shows, and I find that I can get a five-piece orchestra for eighty dollars a week for the evenings. This orchestra plays at a restaurant during the day, and has little time to rehearse the music, though I consider the leader quite competent. Under such circumstances would you advise me to employ the orchestra? The big point about this is that most of the downtown houses do not show the pictures with orchestral music, and that I could appeal to a still larger clientele if I added this.—LOUISIANA.

IF your theatre is in the outskirts and you run your shows only in the evening it would not make any difference how many weeks you run your pictures after they are shown at the downtown houses provided you present them just a little better than the other fellow.

To have an orchestra is all right, but if it is simply to play music regardless of whether it interprets the pictures, I say by all means, don't do it. Rather have an organist or a pianist who will interpret the pictures and you will have a much finer effect and your patrons will be just as well, if not more satisfied.

I would also suggest that you make your theatre a little more comfy and homelike with an air of refinement and you will notice a great improvement.

LX—I have noticed many remarks about the lightning and storm effects at your theatres. Could you give me briefly an idea of how they may be secured. I have a shadow box for my pictures which is located on a regular stage, the theatre having formerly been a legitimate house—N. O. L.

THE very fact that your house has been a legitimate theatre leads me to believe that you have a stage.

Eliminate your shadow box and build a stage set such as an interior, for instance, your picture being a window which the audience would look through into the realm of the motion picture. A storm can be created by flashing lights and a rain effect. You will have to experiment with this of course to get the best results.

It is difficult for me to tell you in detail how to do this for I might just as well start a stagecraft school which I have not the time to do.

Seeing the Rialto and the Rivoli with Rothapfel

SUNDAY, about 9:30 p. m., we dropped back by the Rivoli to get a small portion of the new presentation that we had missed earlier in the day. We had left Mr. Rothapfel a couple of hours before, and after three days almost entirely spent in preparing the programs at the Rialto and the Rivoli he was worn to a frazzle and announced that he was going home. So, with ordinary people we would have been surprised when he came up behind us; we are never surprised at anything that Rothapfel does.

"Thought you were going home?" we asked. Then he told us that he had started but that some one had told him that there was something wrong at a certain part of the show and he waited to see. In the first place Rothapfel is wholly just to his employes and never hears one side of a case whether the complaint refers to an error in the presentation or some fault in the conduct of one of the staff. He goes to see for himself. And this is the reason that he got later to bed Sunday night than he expected. He did wait to see and he found things right.

But that is the secret of his success. "You have to keep your organization built up," he explained to us as his reason for his appearance. "Almost all of the time you will find 99 per cent. of your organization loyal and efficient, but you have to keep a close grip on the lines or they will slacken. Don't let any one get the idea that you are not on the job yourself, or some one will put something over on you."

At the Rivoli this week there is one of the splendidly balanced bills that might be called a study in contrasts. Here is a case where they has been no attempt to couple up numbers, but where the spirit of them alone carries one into the other, though one jumps from solo into war pictures.

Seldom has an overture received as much applause as "Second Hungarian Rhapsody" is getting this week. It played with a czimbalom solo. It is played with gold lights only over the stage, and just at the end comes first a flash of gold and then the full lights all through the house.

Rivoli Animated opens with Universal pictures of recruiting books for the soldiers, played first with "Semper Fidelis," and then as the scene shows two old Irish women contributing their "widow's mite," and some of their brogue is used, the orchestra changes effectively to "Tipperary." Coming up very timely with the presence of the Old Sixty-ninth, Universal pictures of them marching away from New York brings prolonged applause.

First of the new Gaumont news pictorial are being shown this week, two subjects being included in the Rivoli bill. These pictures are remarkably clear and splendidly titled, while the men that have made them appear to have the proper knowledge of the effects to be secured. The addition of Gaumont gives the Rialto and Rivoli four news sources in addition to the special pictures.

Launching of the concrete ship at San Francisco is the first of these and "America Prepare" is used with it. Then follow other Gaumont pictures of the soldiers at drill at Camp Geordon. In this there are some of the best shots of massed formations that we have seen, and when it is shown with "Over There" the audience is stirred to great enthusiasm. It makes a splendid ending to the weekly.

A most beautiful number is given with Mlle. D'Espinoy singing "Agnus Dei." The stage is darkened and the big dome in the center of the house, with red flooded on the orchestra and blue and red at the side panels when the singer, accompanied by four other girls comes on the stage. One of the girls carries palms and the other lilies, according to Palm Sunday effect. Here the setting is unusually beautiful, showing a star-lit sky with the rolling, desolate country in the background. It gets prolonged applause and leaves a big impression.

Second of the wonderful new Italian official war pictures shows work of the navy and the hydroplanes. There is nothing of the "faky" about these pictures and every one of the scenes are actual war occurrences. As this picture was shown and the special musical accompaniment played, it drew an almost continuous storm of applause. One may see the Italian warships shelling an Austrian port, battles in the air between Austrian airship and Italian hydroplanes, with the Austrian forced to descend a captive, and then the Austrians dropping bombs and barely missing the warships of King Victor. Battle effects are used throughout the rat-tat of the machine gune fire, and the roar of the heavier cannot being reproduced with a perfection that takes one right to the fighting zone. There is a clever touch of the musician added just as the Austrian airplane is taken when the orchestra turns into the splendid "La Patrie." Its effect upon the audience is electrical.

Greek Evans, barytone, is shown seated at a table in a bachelor's room as the stage curtains part, and then with a flood of red light from the proscenium, he sings "Give a Man a Horse He Can Ride." Here there follows into the feature. Dorothy Dalton in "Love Me," the story a girl who marries the younger son, and who is viewed with disdain by her husband's family only to prove the true one of the whole lot.

"Norwegian Dance" executed by two girls of the Albertieri school adds a light little touch and then comes one of the funny, human Drew comedies, "Gas Logic," and everyone leaves fully satisfied, fully delighted with the day's bill and with the feeling that one has rested from the realities of life outside.

But not so throughout at the Rialto. Of course no manager could know the news that New York would awake to read on Sunday morning and that every face would be without a smile. It was a day when those who went to a motion picture house wanted to be relieved of the strain and "The Whispering Chorus," while a feature of unusual worth is depressing under such circumstances. A splendid feature of the picture as shown at the Rialto is the music used. Violin effects counterpoint the good and bad influences as they are shown on the screen on the tense situations.

With all of the lights red except the center of the dome in blue, "Zampa" is the splendid overture at the Rialto, and then follows one of the most interesting magazines that we have ever seen. It is devoted to America's preparation for war and brings us back with a zing at the end of it to Gen. Haig and the British who are bearing the brunt of the fighting as this is written.

It opens with a brief editorial on sending books to the soldiers and then come Universal pictures of launching ships every twenty minutes at San Francisco to overcome the U-boat menace. The music is "Admirals All," and this continues through other scenes of launching the "Coyote," at Kearny, N. J., and Hearst Pathe Pictures of the launching of the first concrete ship, and then another Universal of the "Commack" taking to the water, "so anxious to get at the Germans that she runs ashore." As Pathe pictures of the seizure of the Dutch ships are thrown on the screen the music shifts to "Go to Sea," and this follows through H-P pictures of the apprentice seamen at drill at Yerba Buena, Cal. With Universal pictures of boxing scenes in the Navy the orchestra shifts to "Giddy 'Ap." Universal shows pictures of Sammies learning to deal with chlorine gas attacks, with "Come Across" as the music, and then Screen telegram pictures present pigeons for war with "Queen of the Air," and the same service adds another contribution with tractors being rushed to Europe, while "The Man Behind the Hammer and the Plow" is played. Now comes the big punch with Pathe pictures of men of the hour. First are shown Gen. Bliss and Secretary Baker, and then Congress, and finally Gen. Haig is flashed on the screen. There is a big hand to that, but out of another part of the Pathe weekly, Mr. Rothapfel has taken a few feet of Haig reviewing his troops and the effect of this on such an occasion can be imagined. The music for this smashing ending is "Diplomats March."

Helen A. March sings "The Lost Chord" just before the feature, and after it comes "Perpetual Motion," played by the first violins. "Those Athletic Girls" is the closing number, a Mack Sennett comedy that relieves the strain that the feature has brought and sends them away humming and whistling the catchy music and talking about the bathing beauties.

TWO thousand dollars a minute for a stage setting in a motion picture! It sounds unbelievable, imaginative, almost beyond the realm of possibilities in cinema exhibition, but it is just one instance of the daring and initiative that have marked Sid Grauman's direction of the new million dollar theatre, Los Angeles. When the Grauman projecting room gave the management a preliminary view of "Flare-Up Sal," the Thomas H. Ince film starring Dorothy Dalton, there flashed through Sid Grauman's mind the vision of a stage replica of the scenes in the dance hall of the days of '49, as shown in the photoplay.

The entire company which played before the camera was engaged, with the exception of Miss Dalton, and the star herself appeared in person on several occasions during the run of the picture. A special setting was constructed, new costumes ordered, and when the dance hall scene was reached in the story on the screen the day that "Flare-Up Sal" opened, the picture dissolved into the figures in the living flesh, shown under the full lights grouped around the gambling tables, before the great oaken bar, and whirling around the floor just as last seen in the film. Here were the red shirted miners, the girls in glittering costumes, the taciturn gamblers and all the motley gathering that collected in the amusement halls of the frontier.

Serial Shown Three Times Sets New Record

Universal's sales department has been advised of a plan adopted by an Oregon exhibitor (whose name has, unfortunately, been omitted) that gives a new angle to the exhibition of serials. "Peg o' the Ring" had been played by this exhibitor when it was first released, and there was a demand from patrons for its return. After the return engagement there was still a demand, and for a third time "Peg o' the Ring" was the attraction. By the time the serial had been repeated the demand for the print had lessened and the Portland Universal exchange was able to give Mr. Exhibitor the complete allotment of sixteen reels. He ran the serial four consecutive days, showing four installments at a time, and satisfied his patrons better than ever before on a chapter-story proposition.

Duluth Gives Madge Kennedy Week

Manager Thomas Furniss of the Rex theatre, Duluth, Minn., has arranged a novelty in the shape of a Madge Kennedy week during which he will show "Baby Mine," "Nearly Married" and "Our Little Wife."

Reports reaching the Goldwyn offices are that Miss Kennedy enjoys unusual popularity through Minnesota, Wisconsin and the Dakotas, and Mr. Furniss confirms this and says that he expects the week to be one of his biggest.

This Week at the Strand

IN the review of the current bill at the Rialto we have referred to the depressing effect of the feature there. The same is true at the Strand where "La Tosca" is being presented, and of course neither Mr. Rothapfel nor Mr. Edel can be blaced for neither at the time they booked the picture or before the shows were to open could then have any warning of what was about to happen on the battlefields. Yet we are dealing here with the effects upon audiences, and certainly "La Tosca" doesn't go far, with all the "horrible details" pictured, toward cheering anyone up.

"Robespierre" is the overture this week. It was omitted at the performance we attended, 7-30 p.m. Sunday was the prelude to "La Tosca," so the presentation started right off with the Strand Topical. It opens with Hearst-Pathe pictures of the Pennsylvania varsity crew starting training and then switches to the Chicago Cubs in California. Then follow pictures of the seizure of the Dutch ships. Screen Telegram supplies pictures of the statue of Germania being removed from a Chicago building, and the title pointing out that the "goddess of kultur" has a rope around her neck gets a big hand. From the same source come pictures of the armless Frenchman over here to teach the maimed to become useful and then the Hearst-Pathe pictures of men of the hour. The same service shows some interesting pictures of making lenses, sailor boys drilling at Yerba Buena, and then pictures of our boys "over there," showing the American Red Cross units. There is a fitting ending with a map of Flanders shown to point out where the Germans have been making their attack and the weekly closes with pictures of the marching British troops. You will note that different combinations have been made of the same pictures at the Rialto and the Strand. Both are effective.

Henry Miller renders a double selection, first the "Sergeant of the Line" and then on Palm Sunday he sang "The Palms" before a setting showing church windows. It delighted the audience. During the remainder of the week he sang "The Lost Chord."

Third instalment of the Ditmars "Wonders of the Sea" continues to bear out the right to be called some of the most interesting pictures ever made. This week jelly fish and their flight from the crabs, argonauts, coral and anemones are shown. In one of the scenes there are two large enemones seeking the same dead fish, only to have a giant crab break up the party. How a clam moves is interestingly shown, and then starfish seeking to capture scallops and the same crab saving the scallop by pushing the shell away. It gets appreciative applause from the audience.

After the feature Grace Hoffman, coloratura soprano, delightfully renders "Ah Fors E Lui," and then comes Smiling Bill Mason in a clever comedy, "Billy's Baby." It got plenty of the quiet little laughs that left the audience thoroughly pleased.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

"Eagle's Eye" Press Book Shows Exhibitor How to Take Advantage of Opportunity

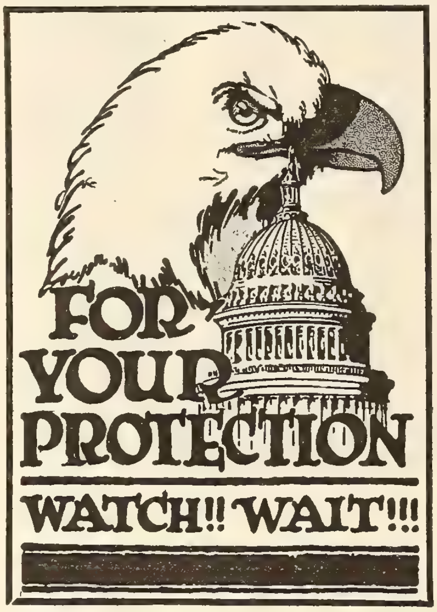
"EAGLE'S EYE," the patriotic serial exposing German intrigue which has just been issued by the Whartons through Four Square exchanges, furnishes an excellent opportunity for showmen to profit by current events and get the most possible advertising out of the chaptered story.

An intelligent advertising and publicity campaign book has been issued in connection with the serial. A survey of the newspapers of the country shows that these advertising aids are being greatly used and that especial attention is being attracted to the story.

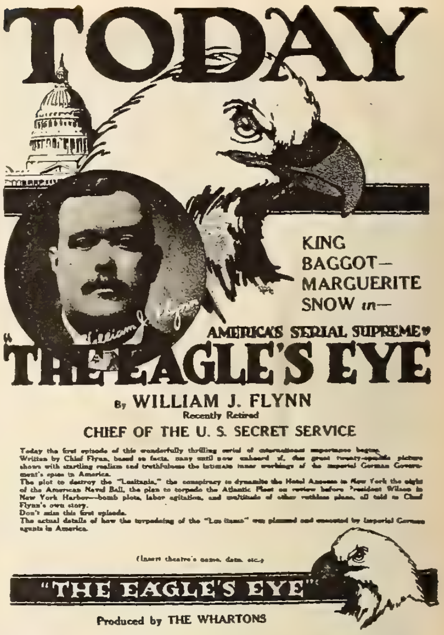
In the first place the press book talks to the exhibitor and undertakes to point out to him the opportunity that he has with this picture and the unusual character of it. And that is proper, for the exhibitor will have a chance with week after week to take advantage of some spy episode that has just come up and that nothing was known about when the picture was produced. It ought to furnish a good chance for live exhibitors to get a lot of NOW advertising.

A series of six one-column teasers advertisements, of which we have printed one here, is suggested to precede the release of the picture and then follow a series of large ads. based on each episode. There is a striking series of posters, the twenty-four sheet which represents an eagle taking into its grasp the snakes of Germany being furnished free to such exhibitors as will provide the stands. Three sheets, six sheets and one sheets are also available.

There are eight photos for display on each episode and stories of the episodes together with a considerable amount of press matter on each are furnished the exhibitor for newspaper and program use.



One of "teaser" ads on "The Eagle's Eye"



One of the two-column ads suggested by the Whartons

There is also a series of cuts of the two stars, King Baggot and Marguerite Snow, heralds for each episode and sets of slides, banners and various novelties.

While this campaign book covers the field most fully, it appears to us that the most striking thing about it is that the Whartons have understood that the exhibitor himself must know about the pictures that he is going to advertise and that they have spared no pains to see that he had full information and that he knows how to use the material furnished.

purely for the trade, but you, Mr. Exhibitor, will do well for yourself to call this to the newspaper man's attention the next time he comes around.

To the Ledger: There are five pages devoted to amusement. The first of these includes the legitimate and vaudeville, though there is little advertising from these sources and on this page appear advertisements from the following motion picture houses: Fox's Carlton (3½ inches, 2 columns, giving program for week); Paramount (2 columns by 2 inches, with week's bill); Loew's (3 inches, one column), and Court (3 inches, single, giving week's bill).

The second page shows two column cuts of Oliver Thomas and Alice Joyce and interesting news stories about them, another news story and then the half page advertisement of the Fox Terminal advertising "Woman and the Day," a striking design prepared in the Ledger office. The third page tops off with a comic on "Breaking Into the Movies" and then stories with separate heads about the attractions at the theatres, in nearly each case illustrated with thumb-nail picture of a star. The lower half of the page is occupied with another striking design display for the Strand theatre.

Four full columns on the fourth page are occupied with the display of the Goodwin theatre on "Moral Suicide," probably the most striking of all the designs. A two-column head reading, "Facts from Film Land for Film Fans," carries some interesting gossip about the players and a few answers to inquiries. We believe that the Ledger could improve its department by cutting the general reading notices a little shorter and devoting more attention to these short paragraphs and probably starting a column of "Answers to Fans." On the fifth of these pages there is a three full-column display of the Newark theatre on Mary Pickford in "Amarilly of Clothes Line Alley" and the rest of the announcements that fill out the total bill. The reading matter is devoted to announcements on the cabarets.

Now let's analyze the next result to the newspaper. There are five of these pages, but the news matter on the first page is devoted to the legitimate and vaudeville houses, and that on the fifth page to the cabarets. The total advertising is 332 inches, which figured on the basis of the Ledger's make-up, twenty-one inches to the column is slightly less than two full pages of advertising, which as compared with twelve columns of reading matter is quite some showing for the cashier's office. Show that to your newspaper man. He will understand the full meaning of it. This is not a theory; it is the proof that co-operation pays.

On Mondays and Thursdays the Ledger carries reviews of the changing bills and display ads of the average of one inch, single column from the Fox Terminal, Loew's, Fox's Carlton, Goodwin and Paramount theatres. These are in the standing card style, which we have said more than once is not the best form of advertising, but far superior to none. While the motion picture theatres are overwhelming, the reading notices of the motion picture theatres and all the other houses are carried under the different heading. We hope to see the Ledger adding a daily department and giving some news motion picture matter in addition.

The News carries during the week under a two-column heading, "News of the Theatres," reading notices, but it gives the vaudeville houses the benefit of separate heads and then groups screen attractions under a one-line head, "Picturized Drama and Comedy."

The Star-Eagle carries a three-column heading on "Stage and the Screen," but it is mainly the stage and the issue before us does not show a line of motion picture advertising.

As we said at the start the two latter papers are working under a handicap and evince a desire to help. But the Ledger really proves what can be done—it proves that it pays the newspapers to co-operate—in dollars and cents advertising yield, in addition to the enormous circulation benefit.

Omaha "Movie Inn" Brings Renewed Interest in Motion Pictures

OMAHA has a Movie Inn that serves as one of the stimulants of motion picture interest in the Nebraska city. Aside from the financial profit to the proprietors here is a plan that might be followed in other cities. It is not original so far as Omaha is concerned, there having been a Movie Inn in Chicago for several years, but the way that it was done in Omaha is of interest and gives a plan that may be followed in other cities.

When the Omaha Movie Inn was first started about a year ago in the cafe department of the Brandeis department store, the proprietor obtained various sorts of pictures from the local exchanges and placed these on the wall in a more or less scattered fashion. Naturally these became soiled and torn and though it all looked pretty cheap it still drew patrons. Then a photoplay editor offered to cooperate with him and the result was that the most of the exchanges obtained for him 22 x 28 pictures of the most noted stars and there were added some 250 of the pictures usually sent out for newspaper purposes.

So, instead of a little corner in the room, Manager Phelps had partitioned off a cozy room and had it entirely redecorated and then the pictures were mounted in an attractive fashion and arranged so that they would cover practically the whole of the walls. The head window trimmer for the department store did the work and then the manager began to advertise.

Most Unique Exploitation Marks Showing of "The Kaiser" at Broadway Theatre

ONE of the most original exploitation campaigns that the New York amusement field has ever seen has marked the showing of "The Kaiser" at the Broadway theatre. Jewel Productions is furnishing the same campaign to all other exhibitors and is pointing to the success of its use here.

THE BEAST OF BERLIN

BROADWAY THEATRE NOW

In the first place the posters showed the repulsive face of the kaiser and this is carried out in the lobby display where the central "adornment" has been a seven foot painting of "The Beast of Berlin." Insurance companies refused to grant policies of this declaring that any good American would be justified in shattering it.

It is mighty seldom that the parade plan is worked in New York, but during the opening days of the production this was carried out successfully with a band of boys in khaki and the figure of the kaiser in military uniform marching the prisoner of two soldiers. The figure was hooted up and down Broadway and in a few hours the popular salutation was: "Have you seen the kaiser?"

However, most unique of all was the newspaper that was carried on. All of these include the mailed head of the kaiser and ranged from single column in the daily issues to large copy in the Sunday papers. One of these displays is reproduced here. Others invited American people to come to the Broadway and "hiss the kaiser." The displays are being changed every day so that there is some new point in them for public discussion.

Another stunt used on the first day of the parade was the printing of a fac-simile newspaper, half of which is also reproduced. When the reader turns this over he finds the announcement that "The Kaiser" is being shown at the Broadway.

Carmel Myers Has Another Italian Role in "The Wine Girl"

(Bluebird Five-Reel Production)

Those who saw Carmel Myers' delightful character portrayal in the role of an Italian girl in "My Unmarried Wife," will be pleased at the announcement that this popular young actress will return to the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— in "The Wine Girl," another Italian role. Miss Myers' type of beauty is perfectly adapted to the proper characterization of the sunny young daughter of Italy, and her performances in those parts have never failed to evoke the highest praise from critics. In "The Wine Girl," which was written by Harvey Giles, she again has the able support of Kenneth Harlan, who has been her leading man in a number of her productions. Katherine Kirkwood, E. A. Warren and Rex De Roselli round out the cast. Stuart Paton directed the production for Bluebird. The scene is laid in this country. Andrea Minghetti is proprietor of a large vineyard and in Italian circles is reckoned as wealthy. Bona, his orphaned niece, is working her way as the cook for the establishment and one Chico, a blackhander, has designs not only upon her but upon her uncle's money. Frank Harris, a young man of wealth, goes to work for Andrea on a dare for fifty cents a day, likes Bona's cooking and offers her a job as cook in his mother's household. She accepts it and at just about the time that she finds out that it is her cooking, not herself, that Harris wanted, Chico springs his double demand on the old man. But a visit from a lawyer brings her the information that her uncle's body has been found in a wine vat and that she is heiress to $200,000. Mrs. Harris is anxious for her son to woo the new heiress, but Bona does not want to be married for her money so she returns to the vineyard and starts to run it herself. There Chico is trapped and Harris, who has discovered the girl's whereabouts and is determined to win her, has a terrific fight with the Italian and thereby gains Bona's respect. Just then old Andrea turns up, very much alive. He planned his "death" to throw Chico off his trail. But Harris finds he loves Bona, even though she is not an heiress.

"Unfaithful," Strange Story of a Wife's Makebelieve Infidelity

(Triangle Two-Reel Production

To deliberately make her husband believe that she is unfaithful to him in order to help him to achieve success in life, is the strangely unusual thing which Dorothy Dalton does in a two-act photoplay, "Unfaithful," in which this charming star will be seen at the ——— theatre on ———. The ingenious little story is from the pen of Lambert Hilyer and Charles Miller directed its production on the screen under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince. Robert McKim, Charles Gunn and Charlotte Vermont are the other members of the cast. John Karge, a novelist, is so absorbed in his work that he suggests to his young wife, Evelyn, that she get Dick Hamilton, a former school pal, to take her out. Naturally, a Platonic friendship springs up between them. Karge finds that in the construction of his novel he is unable to handle a certain situation in which a husband accuses his wife of infidelity. Evelyn learns of her husband's predicament and with the help of his stenographer plans to make him believe that she is untrue to him. Hamilton is taken into their confidence and agrees to go through with it. The stenographer then warns Karge that his wife is quite intimate with Hamilton and suggests that he accuse her in order to solve his problem. The plan works with astonishing realism and with almost fatal results, but all turns out all right in the end and Karge's literary reputation is made.

"Naughty, Naughty!" a Film Comedy Which Is Really Funny

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

"Naughty, Naughty!" a comedy film feature which is really funny, is announced as the attraction at the —— theatre for ———. It is a Paramount Picture, produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, and presents Enid Bennett as its star. Miss Bennett's rise to fame has been rapid. A few years ago she held a position in a Perth, Australia, business house. She suddenly decided to go on the stage and promptly won fame as Modesty in "Everywoman." It was while she was playing in this part that Fred Niblo and his wife, the late Josephine Cohan, then filling an engagement in Australia, saw her and immediately engaged her to join their repertoire company and she was seen during the balance of the organization's tour in "The Whip," "The Fortune Hunter," "Seven Keys to Baldpate" and "Broadway Jones." Some time after that Thomas H. Ince was in Australia, saw Miss Bennett and signed a contract with her whereby she was to appear in pictures under his direction. Since coming to America she has appeared in "The Keys of the Righteous," in which her work has drawn only the highest praises. "Naughty, Naughty!" is her second Ince production, and was written for her by C. Gardner Sullivan. It opens with the return of pretty Roberta Miller to her little home town in the Middle West. She left home a quaint youngster in gingham and has come back smartly gowned and sophisticated and the possessor of three bulldogs. The old village bores her, so she proceeds to make it a fit place to live in. A certain young man who happens to be both her sweetheart and the editor of the local paper is one of the strictest of all the strict folks in the community, and her efforts to "reform" him are screamingly funny. She succeeds not only in remodeling her sweetheart but in improving things all along the line. Miss Bennett's own sister is a member of the cast, which also includes Earl Rodney, Gloria Hope and Andrew Arbuckle. Jerome Storm directed the production under the personal supervision of Mr. Ince.

"Naughty, Naughty!" comes to the ——— on ———.

"Thief or Angel," a Typical Judge Brown Story—Capable Cast

(General Two-Reel Production)

"Thief or Angel," the late Judge Willis Brown story to be adapted to the screen will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. In the cast are seen: Ruth Hampton, Helen Muir, Ernest Thompson, Grace Marvin, Charles Richards and W. T. Horn. The drama is in two reels, produced under the direction of King W. Vidor, and released on the General Film program. Antoinette, a young Italian mother, learns that it was impure milk that caused the death of her baby. She is one of the many who live in the tenement districts. The settlement workers promise to furnish her as well as the other mothers in the tenement district, with pure milk but the milk trust soon shut off the supply. A gang of boys who gather old milk bottles bearing certified labels on them, arouse the suspicions of the police, and in a raid on an old barn in the neighborhood they get the boys "red-handed." The leader, Tony, confesses his part in the business. The members of the gang refused to impart any information as to the identity of their leader. It develops that Tony is Antoinette in disguise. She confesses to having taken milk from the doorsteps of the wealthy to furnish pure milk to the mothers of the tenement district. The judge dismisses the case, and establishes Antoinette as an "angel."

Mary Miles Minter in Fascinating Mystery Story, "A Bit of Jade"

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

Mary Miles Minter, assisted by Alan Forrest, David Howard, Vera Lewis, Alfred Ferguson and Clarence Burton render "A Bit of Jade," a late release of the Mutual Film Corporation, in a fashion that will rivet all eyes on the screen of the ——— theatre when it is shown on ——— of ——— week. "A Bit of Jade" is a combination of mystery and straight drama, with the mystery element predominating throughout the run. It was produced under the direction of Edward S. Sloman. Mary Miles Minter has a role in the interpretation of which she can shake her golden curls, masquerade in boy's clothes and "cut-up" generally. She strikes the serious vein, and at times during the run is in the role of a little Sherlock Holmes. She has the role of Phyllis King, whose brother, Cuthbert, after loosing heavily at poker, asks Phyllis for a loan of a sum of money with which to put over a business deal. Phyllis is at lunch at the time, and she gives her brother the last cent she has. When it comes time to pay the check, she finds that she hasn't the amount. Grayson Blair, who happens in the restaurant at the time, comes to her rescue. As Cuthbert leaves the restaurant, he takes, by mistake, the wrong overcoat, in the pocket of which is a valuable necklace of jade, which had originally adorned a Brahmin god in a Hindu temple. At her aunt's country home a few days later, Phyllis in a lark, dresses in her brother's clothes, and enters the boathouse of the adjoinig estate. In the pocket she finds the necklace. She is surprised by Blair, who sees the necklace, and thinks that she has stolen it. He recognizes her as the girl he had met in the restaurant. She is convinced that her brother is the thief. After a series of adventures in which a thrilling detective hunt is staged, the mystery is cleared and Phyllis and Blair are happily united.

"The Brass Check," with Bushman and Bayne—Detective Story

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, two of the most widely known artists working before the camera, are coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, in one of the best screen dramas in which they have been seen. "The Brass Check" is the title. It was written by George Allan Engand, and ran in the All Story Magazine. June Mathis adapted it for screen presentation. It is in five reels. In the cast with Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne are seen: Augustus Phillips, Frank Currier, Ollie Cooper, Rudolph de Cordova, Frank Joyner, Robert Williamson, John Smiley, Hugh D'Arcy, Jack Newton and Hugh Jeffrey. The picture was produced by Metro, under the direction of William S. Davis. Mr. Bushman has the role of Richard Trevor, son of the head of the powerful rubber trust. Henry Everett, a struggling inventor, has invented a process for making artificial rubber, and tries to sell his invention to Silas Trevor, head of the trust. He refuses to accept the small amount offered for the invention. The trust is anxious to obtain the secret, and have Everett confined to an insane asylum, thinking that he will change his mind about accepting the amount offered for his invention. Silas Trevor, the head of the trust, wants his son, Richard, to marry Norma Glanor, but Richard demands more personal beauty than Norma possesses. He refuses, and leaves home to shift for himself. Henry Everett's sister, Edith (Beverly Bayne), is seeking means to release her brother from the asylum. She consults a detective agency, and is told that since men of so great wealth and influence are responsible for her brother's confinement in the asylum, it will be a difficult matter to obtain his release. A detective is assigned, but meets with an accident, and is sent to the hospital. On his person was found a note of instructions for Edith, with a brass check for a suitcase at Grand Central Station, New York. Richard finds the letter with the check, and in the spirit of adventure follows up the case.

George Walsh in Some More Thrills In "The Kid Is Clever"—Comedy Thrills

"Full of Pep and speed" is the way William Fox characterizes George Walsh's latest comedy-drama, "The Kid is Clever," written by Randolph Lewis, and produced under the direction of Paul Powell, with John Leezer at the camera. In the supporting cast assisting Mr. Walsh in his latest comedy-drama, are seen, Doris Pawn, in the leading feminine role; Ralph Lewis, A. Burt Wesner, Don Likes and Clyde Hopkins. Mr. Walsh has the role of Kirk White, college graduate and champion all-round athlete. His knowledge of football, baseball and general college sports was far more developed than his knowledge of Latin and Greek. His father is a millionaire munitions maker, and he decides that it is about time for his son to do something in the world. Kirk balks at the idea of going to work, and his father grants him three months in which to seek adventure and satisfy his appetite for romance. Leaving his father's office he stumbles into a very charming young lady. After a successful flirtation, the girl tells Kirk that she is sailing the following Saturday for Havana. Kirk thinks that she is a " movie " actress. Two motion picture producers frame up a series of thrillers for Kirk, which it is hoped will cure him of his taste for adventure. A full company is to be provided including a large supply of ammunition made of paper. The company is to set sail for Havana, but the cast misses the boat. Kirk, however, is among those present when the liner sails. A band of Mexicans had obtained information that a film company was sailing with a large supply of ammunition, and they plan to confiscate the supply. Then the thrills start. Kirk believes that it is all in the play, and nonchalantly braves the onslaught of the Mexicans. The girl and he have many adventures before the hero discovers that he has been bucking a real revolution.

" The Claim," with Edith Storey, in Powerful Dramatic Role—Heart Interest

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

Edith Storey, one of the most accomplished actresses working before the camera is to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in " The Claim," written by Charles Kenyon and Frank Dare, and adapted to the screen by June Mathis and Leighton Osmun for release on the Metro program. Frank Reicher directed. Wheeler Oakman, Mignon Anderson, Marion Skinner, Paul Weigel and Fred Malatesta are in support. Miss Storey presents the part of Belle Jones, who leads an unhappy life as the wife of Ted Jerome, a notorious gambler. A child is born, and the mother bestows all her affection on the little one who is the one bright spot in her life in the sordid surroundings of her Western home. Jerome deserts his wife and child, going to a mining camp in El Dorodo. Belle takes in washings to make both ends meet. Jerome meets Kate McDonald in El Dorado. Kate lives with her brother John, a struggling prospector. Jerome, in order to win the love of Kate, goes through a mock wedding ceremony, saying nothing about his wife and child. Kate's brother learns the truth, and drives Jerome over a cliff at the point of a pistol. Jerome's body is being carried into the hotel just as his wife and child arrive. She leaves the child on the bar and slips out. John takes the baby home to Kate. John MacDonald becomes a rich man. Belle has drifted into a music hall under the name of Belle Jones. MacDonald, who has struck it rich, sees Belle and admires her. She decides to blackmail MacDonald, in order to raise money. When she and John meet, each recognizes the other. She forgets about the money when she sees her child, and leaves with the child. The child calls for the adopted parents, and Belle returns with it, and she and John become man and wife. " The Vortex," a Powerful Play of Love and Jealousy

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Jealousy, the destructive canker of human happiness, eats its way into the hearts of noble men and women in " The Vortex," which comes to the ——— theatre on ———. A great financier finds his " one woman in all the world." But jealousy and suspicion arise and sweep the characters along in their pitiless path to tragedy, when a happy circumstance discloses the innocence of the girl. Mary Warren and Joe King are the featured players in this interesting and unusual photoplay and they have been surrounded by a cast of more than ordinary talent. The production is beautifully embellished in the matter of settings and photographic effects, the Busch Gardens at Pasadena, one of Southern California's greatest show places, having been used by Director Gilbert P. Hamilton in filming many of the scenes. Van Cleefe, Wall Street millionaire, falls in love with Joan Meredith, daughter of his business rival. Believing there is something between Van Cleefe and Mrs. Hilda Herford, Joan spurns his attentions in favor of Albert Dunning, an impoverished clubman, much against her father's wishes. She elopes with Dunning and they go to a hotel to await the arrival of the minister who is to marry them, meanwhile registering as man and wife. Van Cleefe, who has taken Mrs. Herford for an auto ride, sees the couple and believes the worst, while Joan suspects the banker's presence at the hotel with a married woman. The minister fails to arrive and Joan and Dunning are not married. Later Dunning learns that Joan's father has lost his money, so he leaves town. Joan offers to marry Van Cleefe if he will save her father, but he spurns her. Just then Herford rushes in to shoot Van Cleefe for stealing his wife, and Joan saves Van Cleefe's life by saying that it was she who was at the hotel with him. Van Cleefe then agrees to marry Joan, but it is not until he learns from the minister himself of his failure to fill his engagement to marry Joan and Dunning that he fully believes in her. Then there is a happy reconciliation all around.

USING THE STARS

These Will Help You To Follow Advice of Successful Exhibitor

ON another page the Diary of a Successful Exhibitor will tell you how that enterprising man used the stars to build patronage for him..

He did not follow the circular suggestions of some manufacturers, but worked out his own plan, and most satisfactorily.

He sent out cards about the various productions, telling just a little what it was about and then depended upon his newspapers and program for giving the rest of the information. He would have found the proper material for these stories right here had these Ad Talks been in existence then. But they are ready for you now.

" The Curse of Iku " Is a Thrilling Japanese Drama

(Kleine-Essanay Production)

A production quite unique in the realm of emotional photodrama is " The Curse of Iku," which is the attraction announced for ——— at the ——— theatre. The featured players are Tsuru Aoki, Japanese actress, and Frank Borzage. Critics have pronounced the acting of Tsuru Aoki in this drama a veritable triumph. They say that she would be called the greatest Japanese in the silent drama were it not for the fact that her husband, Sessue Hayakawa, has already been accorded that honor. She was born in Japan twenty-five years ago and since her childhood has acted on the stage and before the camera. A quaint Japanese atmosphere pervades the entire play, the early scenes being laid in Nippon fifty years ago and the latter part in California and Japan at the present time. Back in Japan's barbaric days when the story starts no foreigners were permitted to land on her shores except Dutch sailors who unloaded cargoes at Nagasaki. Allan Carroll, shipwrecked American sailor, is washed ashore and found by Yori, a kind-hearted Japanese prince who is an enemy of Prince Iku. Yori secretes Carroll in his house, but Iku hears of it and sends his sister Omio San, to investigate. She falls in love with Carroll and tells her brother he is a white god. Enraged, Iku raids Yori's palace, captures him and the American and has Yori killed. Before Carroll's sentence, which was that he be boiled in oil, can be carried out, he kills Iku and escapes. Then the action jumps to the present. Iku, third, comes to California to learn American customs and gets employment in a house where Alan Carroll, third, is a guest. In revenge for his grandfather's death Iku kidnaps Carroll's fiancee. Carroll follows them to Japan and in a pitched battle kills Iku and rescues the girl, returning to America.

(World Five-Reel Production)

In a role quite distinctly different from anything she has essayed before, Ethel Clayton comes to the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— in " The Witch Woman." In this play Miss Clayton is seen as an Alsatian peasant girl, who is driven out of her reason by the treachery of a supposed lover and wandering alone among the mountains comes to be regarded as a witch. The story is from the pen of Willard Mack, famous playwright, author of " Tiger Rose," now playing in New York, and conceded to be one of the dramatic successes of recent years. With Ethel Clayton as star, Willard Mack as author, and Travers Vale as director World Film, presents the work of a triumvirate which could not be otherwise than successful. In the cast are Louise Vale, Jack Drumier, John Ardizoni and Robert Tansey. Miss Clayton's leading man—who, by the way, has a dual role in this play—is Frank Mayo, son and namesake of the famous actor who made the stage character, " Puddenhead Wilson," celebrated throughout the length and breadth of America. In the story Marie Beaupre, a beautiful Alsatian girl, meets Louis La Farge, a French artist, in the mountains where he has come on a painting trip. She falls in love with him, and when he deserts her she is cast from her home and forced to live in the mountains as best she can. All this trouble deranges Marie's mind, and she becomes known as " the witch woman," drawing the reproach and curses of all the mountaineers. Finally she is found by a doctor who becomes interested in her case, and takes her to Paris. There she again meets Louis, and also his twin brother, Maurice, who looks exactly like Louise. Many surprising events follow these meetings, and all go to make one of the most entertaining photoplays seen in a long time.

" The Hillcrest Mystery " Is Exciting and Fascinating Play

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

Irene Castle, who in a comparatively short space of time has come to be one of America's favorite screen artists, has an unusually fascinating role in the new Pathe play, " The Hillcrest Mystery," which is announced as the attraction at the ——— theatre on ———. It is a story teeming with action, suspense and intrigue, typical of the work of Ouida Bergere, the author, with a touch of color from the great war in which the star's husband, Captain Vernon Castle, recently lost his life while acting as an aviation instructor in Texas. In the supporting cast are J. H. Gilmour, Ralph Kellard and Wyndham Standing, each worthy to be termed a star in his own right. When the United States sends out its call for more ships Thomas Sterling decides to donate his big shipbuilding plant for the duration of the war. He announces his decision at a party given for his daughter, Marion, who wears a necklace, the gift of her father, and a solitaire from his partner and prospective son-in-law, Hugo Smith. But Marion thinks highly of Gordon Brett, her father's secretary, and after the guests have departed she gives him the necklace to put in the safe. He slips it into his pocket, forthwith storms, the citadel of Marion's affections and conquers. At the moment of conquest Mr. Sterling enters, summarily discharges Gordon, and orders him from the house. The young man leaves, defiantly—and with the necklace still in his pocket. Later that very night Thomas Sterling is strangely murdered. Who did it and why? And how was the murderer eventually apprehended and what was his motive? That's the mystery of the story, and its solution is well worth waiting for through almost five reels of film.

" The Hillcrest Mystery " will be solved on ——— at the ——— theatre.

" The Debt of Honor " Well Suited to Star, Peggy Hyland

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

After an absence of several months from the screen, Peggy Hyland, the English stage beauty, has returned under the banner of William Fox and will be seen in her first Fox picture, " The Debt of Honor," at the ——— theatre on ———. In it Miss Hyland does the best work of her career before the camera. This is due not altogether to her own capabilities but to the fact that an unusually good story has been provided for her by Eve Unsell, and no expense has been spared in giving it a lavish production. In the play Miss Hyland has the part of Honor, an orphan of unknown origin. Stanley Middleton, a United States Senator, meets her under entirely accidental circumstances and is immediately attracted by her. Middleton, married but childless, takes Honor to his home and adopts her. His wife, Irma, appears to welcome Honor to her home, but secretly she dislikes the pretty little girl. Three years later Honor returns from boarding school. Middleton has become a powerful member of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. His secretary, Chester Holbrook, falls in love with Honor. The attraction is mutual. Honor has not been at the Middleton home long when she learns that the Senator's wife, Irma, has a sweetheart in the person of Frank Schiller. The truth is that Schiller is a spy and is using Irma to get secrets regarding transport sailings from the Senator's desk. One night Middleton returns home unexpectedly. He sees on the window shade the shadows of two persons clasped in each other's arms. When he enters the house his wife tells him that Honor was one of the lovers. Middleton accuses Honor, who herself has seen Irma in Schiller's embrace, and orders her to leave the house. To save Middleton from the knowledge that his wife is untrue she leaves in silence, but with the aid of Holbrook, Honor soon traps Schiller. Irma, trying to save her lover, is followed to his apartment by Middleton. In the mix-up which takes place there, both Irma and Schiller are killed. Later the broken-hearted Senator is " adopted " by Chester and Honor, who marry.

Live News from the Producers

First National Gets Another

Makes Arrangements to Distribute "Passing of the Third Floor Back," Made by Brenon—English Actor Is Star

THROUGH an arrangement with L. Lawrence Weber, who controls Herbert Brenon's production of "Passing of the Third Floor Back," starring Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in the role of the Stranger, the screen version of this dramatic classic will be released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Since its original American production nine years ago at the Maxine Elliott theatre, Jerome K. Jerome's play has been given by Sir Johnston in practically every city of importance throughout the United States and Canada, and ranks first among his many stage creations by popular choice.

Over two months were spent in filming the story of the changes wrought in the lives of the mean-spirited and scheming members of the gloomy Bloomsbury lodging house by the mysterious occupant of the third floor back.

Sir Johnston made a special trip from England to America for the purpose of making the picture. The Stranger is his own favorite role, and he entered into his contract to reproduce it on the screen with real enthusiasm, declaring at the time that he would rather have his production of the "Passing of the Third Floor Back" given the permanency of celluloid than any play in his entire repertoire.

Herbert Brenon assembled a cast in support of the English actor including Molly Pearson, in the part of the slavey; Alfred Hickman, who won commendation in "The Fall of the Romanoffs"; Germaine Bourville, Ketty Galanta, George Le Guere, Sydney Goldin, veteran stage and screen actor and director; Agusta Haviland as the scheming landlady; Ben Graham and Grace Stephens as the bully and the shrew, respectively; Robert Fisher as the sporting satyr; Thornton Bastion as the cad; Ricca Allen as the painted lady; and Dora Mills Adams as the snob.

In putting on this study of human frailty redeemed by love and understanding, there has been no effort to sacrifice, it is said, any characterization, no matter how humble, in order to build up a dominating part for the star. The result is pronounced an evenly balanced ensemble that brings out every phase of the play's lesson with power and realism.

Essanay Compiles Chaplin Comedy in Five Parts

Essanay has compiled a five-part Chaplin comedy which will be released through the George Kleine System April 6. It is composed of several of the Essanay-Chaplin comedies, the best scenes from all being taken out and put together to form one comedy. It is practically a new story with the continuity assisted by new subtitles. These latter are in verse form, the main title being "Chase Me, Charlie."

Prints already are being shipped to the various George Kleine offices and bookings are said to be coming in rapidly. Exhibitors who have viewed the picture state that as compiled it forms the essence of all the funniest Chaplin situations. In fact, in the making of the film Essanay announces that great care was taken to select none but the scenes in which there was the swiftest action and the drollest situations.

Three Booklets to Explain Hodkinson Plan

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has announced a campaign for the informing of the exhibitor of the principles, ideals and benefits of the Hodkinson co-partnership plan. The propaganda is taking the form of a series of simple yet very attractive folders with a limited amount of reading matter covering each case clearly and concisely, but dealing with the one point only.

The first booklet is entitled, "The Man Whose Dreams Come True," and deals, of course, with W. W. Hodkinson, the man behind the organization. The second is "The Master Builder," which gives in detail the achievements of Mr. Hodkinson. The third deals with "The Co-partnership Plan."

The First Three Selexart Pictures Distributed by Goldwyn Are: "Honor's Cross," "Blue Blood" and "Social Ambition," Shots of Which Are Here. Shown in the Order Named

Lucien Hubbard to Write Scenarios for World

Lucien Hubbard, scenario writer and former newspaper man, has just signed a long-term contract with World-Pictures and has already started work on a new play.

Mr. Hubbard has recently been associated with the Diando Company in the preparation of the story and continuity for a new serial to be released by Pathe. It bears the title of "The Wolf-Faced Man" and the authorship will be credited to Mr. Hubbard and W. A. S. Douglas, the president of the Diando Company.

Julia Arthur to Enter the Picture Field

Julia Arthur has abandoned her theatrical producing plans for this season, having relinquished her rights in the last of three plays she had obtained for her personal use this year had conditions been more propitious. Miss Arthur has opened headquarters at the Biltmore Hotel to complete plans for entering the motion picture field, having at last succumbed to the lure of the photodrama. In anticipation of several months' work for the screen before the next regular theatrical season, she has obtained the rights to an original scenario by Charles K. Harris, the song writer, and is negotiating for the film rights of two recent stage successes.

Earthquake Reproduced in Alice Brady Picture

Alice Brady's Fort Lee studio was the scene last week of an imitation earthquake, said to be scientifically correct in every detail. "The Ordeal of Rosetta," which Miss Brady is now making for Select under the direction of Emile Chautard, calls for the destruction by quake and fire of a street in the village of Cantona, set in the heart of volcanic Sicily.

To ensure fidelity to detail the Select directors consulted authorities on seismic disturbances and perfected a mechanical device to bring about the desired effect realistically.

Goldwyn Stars Busy at Studio

Mabel Normand, Mae Marsh and Madge Kennedy Are All Engaged on Production of New Plays at Fort Lee

THE spring production drive at the Fort Lee studios of Goldwyn is now in full swing, with the three companies headed by Mabel Normand, Mae Marsh and Madge Kennedy all hard at work again after interruptions attributable to various causes.

Hardly had Mabel Normand become acclimatized to the chill of Fort Lee after her recent sojourn at Tampa, Fla., than she plunged into another production. The title is not announced, but the play is said to afford unusual scope for her abilities as an actress who is equally herself in moments of pathos and tears. Clarence G. Badger is directing the play, an adaptation of a Broadway success by a famous playwright.

To revert to Florida, George Loane Tucker directed the scenes made there to replace those eliminated at the request of the Government, and he will reconstruct "Joan of Plattsburg" before it is released early in May.

Mae Marsh, not to be daunted by Mabel Normand's work-filled life, saw to it long before she finished Irvin S. Cobb's "The Face in the Dark" that there would be no cessation in her labors. Accordingly, Miss Marsh began the first scene of the new production on the afternoon of the day she finished "The Face in the Dark." Whimsical charm and exciting conditions are woven into the new production directed, as was "The Face in the Dark," by Hobart Henley. The story is by Edith Barnard Delano.

Madge Kennedy is reaching the close of Roy Somerville's "The Danger Game," under the direction of Harrv Pollard, and is said to be more enthusiastic over it than any production yet made for her by Goldwyn. Miss Kennedy has entirely recovered from her recent indisposition and is frank in saying that her eagerness to get back to the studio really retarded her recovery instead of hastening it. She, too, is anticipating her next production and is assured that she will have no holiday.

Mary Garden's "The Splendid Sinner" was released March 24, and, according to Goldwyn, exhibitors and public alike are evincing even more eagerness to see it than that evoked by "Thais," her previous production.

Pathe Begins Serial at Diando Studios

"THE WOLF FACED MAN" is announced as the name of a Pathe serial on which work has been begun to be released some time during the coming summer. This serial is being produced by the Diando Company for Pathe from the story by W. A. S. Douglas and Lucien Hubbard.

"The Wolf Faced Man" is described as a Western serial, and the story deals with the actions of a man who is disguised with a mask which resembles a wolf's head. It is claimed to be a serial of thrills and mystery. The scene is laid in the West around 1870, and is said to be replete with action and adventure. Some of the early episodes call for an Indian attack on an immigrant wagon-train, the burning of the wagon-train and a pitched battle between Indians and United States soldiers in which the Indians are routed.

George Larkin has been selected as the leading man for this serial. He is well known in pictures as a "stunt" man. Among the others in the cast are Horace Carpenter, True Boardman and Frederick Malasta.

Stuart Paton will direct this serial, and has been engaged for the last month in going over the script and picking out locations. He has consulted with Mr. Douglas, one of the authors, and the president of the Diando Company on this serial.

Pauline Starke and Myrtle Lind Are Triangle Favorites Well Liked by Audiences. They Have Finished New Pictures for the Program

Triangle Plays Move Forward

Three New Features Have Been Started, with Variety as Keynote —Alma Rubens and Pauline Starke in "Judith"

THE keynote of variety which has been a fundamental of the Triangle schedule has been struck, it is said, in the new plays which include, in addition to society dramas and western subjects, a modern play with an Oriental setting, and several "crook" plays by the well-known romancer of the New York underworld, John A. Moroso. During the past week three new pictures have been started, and five companies worked steadily on their various productions. Director William Beaudine has been awaiting a new subject which will be supplied with the current week.

Following her recent appearance in "The Love Brokers," Miss Rubens is cast as a seeress in a new romantic drama entitled "Judith," which Gilbert P. Hamilton is directing. Pauline Starke, who has recently been featured in "The Shoes That Danced" and "Innocent's Progress," will have a leading role. Edward Pell will support Miss Rubens. Peggy Pearce, of the Triangle-Keystone beauties, has been given her first dramatic role in this production. The cast also includes Lillian Langdon, Anna Dodge, Iris Ashton, Myrtle Rishell, Alice Crawford, Walt Whitman, Lee Hill, Lee Phelps and Ward Caulfield.

"Her Decision" is the working title announced for Director Jack Gonway's latest Triangle screen drama, the second picture which has been put into production during the past week. This marks the third dramatic appearance of the former Keystone comedienne, Gloria Swanson. J. Barney Sherry has a featured role in "Her Decision," and Darrell Foss and Anna Kroman are included in the supporting cast. The plot for this play is based on a girl's sacrifice to save her sister.

Director Raymond Wells has started work on "Mlle. Paulette," a comedy drama in which an attractive actress and a scion of wealth play the leading roles. A summer camp in the mountains, in the vicinity of New York, provides the locale for this story. Claire Anderson is in the title role. Wallace McDonald is the leading man. Others in the cast are George Hernandez, George Pearce, Walter Perry, Anna Dodge and Dot Hagar.

The filming of an "An Honest Man," William Desmond's latest Triangle vehicle, which is being directed by Frank Borzage, is nearing completion. Desmond is seen as a knight of the road who is something of a sleight-of-hand performer. Mary Warren is again seen as Desmond's leading woman, following her first appearance with him in the March release, "The Sea Panther." Ann Kroman and Graham Pette are included in the supporting cast.

Director Harry Edwards is putting the finishing touches to a two-reel comedy which has been temporarily titled "Their Neighbor's Baby." In the cast are Rae Godfrey, Ray Griffith and Charles Dorian.

San Francisco Teachers Saw Chapin Pictures

The enthusiasm aroused by the Paramount Benjamin Chapin series, "The Son of Democracy," is said by Paramount to be well illustrated by the action of the Superintendent of Public Instruction in San Francisco, who invited the teachers and principals by personal letter to attend a private showing of the first four chapters at the Imperial theatre.

After the performance the teachers were enthusiastic in their commendation of "The Son of Democracy." The underlying note of patriotism, so appropriate during the present time, was the subject of special comment.

Frederick Chapin Leaves Goldwyn

Frederick Chapin announces that on April 19 he is leaving the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, after having completed the scenarios of "Heart of the Sunset," by Rex Beach; "The Pirate Woman" for Geraldine Farrar; "Charity Kate," by Edgar Selwyn; "Helenka," by Arthur Train, and "The Venus Model," for Mabel Normand.

Ruth Roland with Douglass Films

It was announced this week that Ruth Roland is to be the featured player with the Douglass Natural Color Film Corporation, at San Raphael, Cal. She left Los Angeles recently, it is said, to begin activities on her first picture for Douglass.

Zecca Director General for Pathe

Ferdinand Zecca, pioneer in the motion picture industry and said to be the inventor of the subtitle, has come to America as director general of productions for Pathe Exchange, Inc., and as such will supervise all the Pathe productions in this country. Charles Pathe and Mr. Zecca, in the days when the motion picture was a curiosity, were the first to realize the possibilities of elaborating on this simple form of animation and in 1900 made the first motion picture drama, "The Little Story of a Crime" being the title. Later, when Mr. Zecca had risen to the top among producers of Europe he supervised the making of "Les Miserables" and "The Life of Our Saviour," both of which have been shown extensively in America. The latter was directed by L. J. Gasnier, now president of the Astra Film Corporation, and the former by Albert Capellani, also famous as a producer in this country.

Viola Dana's Newest Play Well on Way

Viola Dana's newest starring subject, "The Night Riders," is well along on the way to completion at Metro's Hollywood studio. The tiny star of "Blue Jeans," "The Winding Trail," "Weaver of Dreams" and other Metro plays, is said to be so delighted with the stellar role of Sally Castleton, a daughter of the old South, that she fairly revels in the hard work that it entails.

The cast which surrounds Miss Dana includes George Chesebro, Clifford Bruce, Russell Simpson, Monte Blue and Mabel Van Buren. "The Night Riders," an original story, was scenarioized by Albert Shelby LeVino.

Report "Shame" Scoring Heavily

That "Shame," the John W. Noble production distributed for Duplex Films, Inc., by General Film Company, has scored heavily with exhibitors is indicated by reports received at the New York office within the last few days. One of the enthusiastic exhibitor friends of the Zena Keefe feature is Rodney C. Davis, proprietor of the Kozy theatre, of Paducah, Ken., who writes:

"I wish to say that 'Shame' is an excellent subject, in fact, one that with a little advertising one could do an immense business with at an advanced price—so you need not hesitate to give the subject what it deserves."

Acquisitions to Mona Lisa's Cast

Recent acquisitions to the acting staff of Balboa studio are Annie Scott and Miss Haru Fugite, both of whom are appearing in the new seven-reel Mona Lisa production. Miss Scott has had several years' experience in pictures. She is playing the part of the wife of Wilfred Lucas, who plays leading man to Mona Lisa. Miss Fugite is a native Japanese who has appeared in Fox and Lasky pictures.

Clergy See "The Cross Bearer"

Private Showing of World Feature at Baltimore Draws Praise of Cardinal Gibbons and Prominent Roman Catholic Priests

HIS EMINENCE, JAMES CARDINAL GIBBONS, recently attended a private showing of "The Cross Bearer" at the Auditorium theatre in Baltimore, and at its close gave the World Feature Film, in which Montagu Love plays the role of Cardinal Mercier, the heroic prelate of stricken Belgium, his emphatic personal endorsement. "I was much pleased," was his remark, and the manner in which he uttered it betokened deep enjoyment and appreciation.

The house was packed for the occasion, hundreds of the Catholic clergy of Baltimore being present. Applause was frequent as the heroic stand of Cardinal Mercier against the onrushing German hordes was shown and as other striking incidents were projected upon the screen.

Rev. William J. Ennis, rector of Saint Ignatius Church, voiced the sentiments of all the clergymen when he said: "It is strongly expressive of Catholic patriotism." "It is a wonderful picture," said Rev. Jos. W. Renand, of Loyola College, "and I am sure that it will find favor with all lovers of heroic little Belgium." "It deserves to be a great success from more than one point of view," said Rev. F. M. Connel, also of Loyola College. "I shall be glad to advise others to see the picture when it is exhibited to the public," declared Rev. W. T. McKenna, of St. Elizabeth's College.

Among the many voluntary written testimonials was the following from Father Ennis: "I wish to thank you in my own name—in that of the Faculty Church and College, and also, in the name of our friends, for the splendid projection last night in our College Hall of 'The Cross Bearer.' It was an artistic and historical treat. Its gripping reality of Cardinal Mercier's heroism and the patriotism of his dear Belgians were soul-stirring, and I congratulate the company that will release this picture to the public—teaching more favorably than words what low depths have been sounded by Teuton militarism."

Leonard B. McCaughlin, business manager of the Auditorium theatre, where the showing was held, writes as follows: "The motion picture production 'The Cross Bearer,' which was given a private showing to the Catholic clergy of Baltimore at this theatre yesterday afternoon, is a splendid picture and is intensely strong to have held such an audience to a man and have them applaud so spontaneously at the ending. You have a very valuable piece of material and it should be a big success."

General to Market Russian Feature Film

GENERAL FILM announces that it has assumed the distribution in the United States and Canada, except the local New York territory, of "Why—the Bolsheviki," a dramatic production controlled by the Export and Import Film Company, Inc. Steps will be taken at once to give the film a presentation in four leading cities, following which it will be introduced in other territory until the whole country is covered. A large assortment of advertising aids is available, including five-color posters in 24-sheet, 6-sheet, 3-sheet and 1-sheet selections, colored 22 x 28 and 11 x 14 lobby display stills, black and white, 8 x 10 stills, a three-color window card, slides and cut electros of all sizes besides heralds.

"Why—the Bolsheviki" deals with the historical motive for the present upheaval in Russia and is described as one of the most intensely dramatic and stirring picturizations of class conflict ever consummated. The film lays claim also to extreme spectacular beauty, and to insure its historical and technical correctness it was produced in Russia and Italy, hundreds of people and scores of the most elaborate and expensive scenic effects being utilized. Despite the elaborateness of its scenes the action is swift and condensed, the picture being in five reels, the accepted program feature length. It is expected to score strongly as an expose of the tyranny of a barbaric, passion-mad autocracy which drove the Muscovite soul into vengeful eruption. The plight of a nation groping blindly for the ray of democracy is said to be revealed in graphic style. Upon this background the story is worked out, with a beautiful woman as the heroine and a czar as her evil genius with all the necessary aids to lend realism.

New York Scenes in "Ordeal of Rosetta"

"THE ORDEAL OF ROSETTA," which Alice Brady is now making for Select Pictures, is said to be noteworthy not only for its emotional plot, but also for the many particularly interesting high lights in the production itself.

Miss Brady's camera man is having a busy time, jumping about town to "shoot" the various spots called for in the script. Permission was secured to photograph the members of the cast, entering Sherry's. The interior of this restaurant has been reproduced, with the aid of numerous pictures, in Miss Brady's studio, and the audiences which will see her latest photoplay will see what is, to all intents and purposes, the very restaurant itself.

From the luxury which Sherry's embodies, the camera will next be directed at the contrasted immigrant neighborhood about Mulberry Bend Park, which is thronged by recent arrivals from Italy. Miss Brady's director has completed arrangements to photograph a four-room apartment which is the actual residence of a Sicilian family, thus carrying out a strict adherence to realism.

For this picture also, was built an exact reproduction of Chamberlain Brown's office for the theatrical agency of the story; and The New York Bill Posting Company loaned for it its giant bill-poster to stick up the lithograph on which much of the action hinges.

Fox and Advisers Now Cutting "Salome"

THE task of cutting the large amount of film used to screen the pageantry and dramatic scenes of "Salome," the new Theda Bara production made under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, who had charge of "Cleopatra," has been taken up by William Fox and his advisers.

The cinema version of "Salome," Mr. Fox announces, follows closely the Bible story told by Josephus, the renowned Jewish writer, in his book, "The Antiquities of the Jews and the History of the Jewish Wars." Briefly it is as follows:

Herod Antiphas, tetrarch of Galilee and Paraca, has contracted an illegal marriage with Herodias, wife of his brother Philip. Still strong in arms, but the real power of his dominion undermined by injustice and trickery, he is more interested in voluptuous entertainment than in the welfare of his people. He is falling deeper and deeper into moral degradation, lower still in the estimation of his subjects.

Then comes John the Baptist, preaching the coming of a new kingdom, warning the sinful to repent, lashing Herod, Herodias and their unholy union with words of fire. He is hailed by the masses as a "second Elijah." The people follow him, rejoicing in his scornful denunciations of their hated rulers. But Herodias, incensed at his rebukes, plans John's destruction, using Salome and her wiles in an attempt to bring about his downfall. John, unmoved by Salome's enticements fans the flames of hatred.

One night, Herod, in the midst of a debauch, calls upon the beautiful Salome to dance before his throne. She comes in response to his call and dances in wild abandon.

Deep in wine and blinded by her sensuous appeal, Herod rashly offers her a reward, "even unto the half of my kingdom." Salome thereupon makes her request for the head of John the Baptist "in a charger."

Her wish is granted, and with its consummation ends one of the most moving tragedies that the world has even known.

Metro Gets Thanks for "Fit to Fight"

MAXWELL KARGER, Metro production manager, recently received official thanks from Major Wm. F. Snow, representing the Surgeon General's office, in which satisfaction was evidenced with Metro's co-operation with the military authorities in producing "Fit to Fight," intended as a lesson to soldiers of the perils of immorality.

"Fit to Fight," which was written and directed by Edward H. Griffith of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, is in three reels, not for general distribution, but will be shown at training camps, on shipboard, and at all United States Naval and Military stations here and abroad. The story is told in such a straight-from-the-shoulder manner as to compel attention.

The hero is Billy Hale, the quarterback of a varsity eleven. In brief, the story first tells of the civilian life of the characters, and then swings to camp. While on leave, Billy and his companions meet the temptation of "booze"—the first step in the downward path toward vice. Billy restrains himself, but Jack, Chic and Hank fall. Later while in mess line for "chow," Kid McCarthy taunts Billy for his "goodness." The two have a fist fight in which clean living on Billy's part enables him to knock out the Kid. This plucky fight wins followers for Billy. After a twenty-mile hike, which proves a severe test, Billy and the Kid become friends. At the close of the picture, Jack, Chic, and Hank are left at a base hospital—slackers and dead heads on Uncle Sam's pay roll—while Billy and the Kid are shown on a troop transport on their way to France.

Raymond McKee, who has played for Metro, and is now with Edison, was loaned by the latter firm to play the leading role of Billy Hale.

Farnum's First Sherman Production Chosen

Dustin Farnum's first starring vehicle with the recently organized Sherman Productions, Inc., is to be "The Light of Western Stars," President Harry A. Sherman has announced. The story is by Zane Grey, and Roy Clements is now engaged in writing the scenario in collaboration with Charles Swickard, who will direct the Farnum pictures. Winifred Kingston will be Farnum's leading woman.

Two other stories, "The Wolf Breed," by Jackson Gregory, and "The Man in the Open," by Roger Pocock, have also been purchased by Mr. Sherman for early production.

"I believe," declares Mr. Sherman, "that in Dustin Farnum I have the very best western type of man in the world. With his ability as an actor and wonderful personality I feel sure that after the public sees him in 'The Light of Western Stars,' he will be the biggest attraction the screen has ever seen."

Frederick Powers Engaged for Beverly Bruce Play

Beverly Bruce has engaged Frederick Powers to play the part of Luther Prouty in Willard Bradley's "Letitia-for-Happiness."

Miss Bruce also announces her intention of going to Scotland to produce on the original ground Sir Walter Scott's "Lady of the Lake."

General to Release Real Negro Comedies

On April 2 General Film will begin the distribution of a series of weekly one-reel comedies produced by the Ebony Film Corporation of Chicago, a company of negro actors. The subjects are to be known as Ebony Comedies, and the following have already been announced for release: "A Black Sherlock Holmes," "Spying the Spy," "The Porters," "A Milk-Fed Hero," "Busted Romance" and "Spooks."

Bryant Washburn Has a Dual Role In "Twenty-one," His First Pathe Play

Bryant Washburn Play Is Pathe's Leader

Bryant Washburn in "Twenty-One," a Pathe Play, tops Pathe's program for the week of April 7. The story is by the clever American author, George Randolph Chester, and in it Washburn has a double role said to be ideally suited to his talents.

"Spies Within' is the title of the fifth episode of the gripping Pathe serial, "The House of Hate." This episode opens with the Hooded Terror trying to choke Pearl Waldon, played by Pearl White, to death in the deserted boathouse on the Hudson. She is saved by the timely arrival of Harvey Gresham, the role played by Antonio Moreno, and the latter's chauffeur, who engage in a spectacular battle with the Hooded Terror. The Hooded Terror overcomes both men and runs away.

The Harold Lloyd one-reel comedy for the week is "Follow the Crowd," which deals with the adventures of Billy Boulder in the sanctum of the "Red Handers."

A split-reel travel and educational is made up of Picturesque France (St. Flour and Aurillac) Pathe colored, and scenes from Sweden, Pathe colored.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 30 is released on this program.

Hamilton Smith Joins World Scenario Staff

Hamilton Smith has joined the scenario staff of World-Pictures, having signed a long-term contract with that company. He is now engaged, in association with Mr. Hoyt, in the preparation of a new story for Madge Evans.

Mr. Smith has been writing scenarios for the past seven or eight years, having begun with the Kalem Company. Later he was engaged by Metro and has also done a number of the adaptations of the Charles Frohman stage successes.

About New Productions

Mae Marsh is given credit for suggesting a knitting scene in "The Face In the Dark," her newest Goldwyn production. The picture is from an Irvin S. Cobb story.

In the stellar role in "Treasure," her most recent Metro feature following "The Claim," "Revenge" and "The Legion of Death," Edith Storey has the distinction of being the only woman in the cast.

It is said Clara Kimball Young's "The Reason Why," for Select, is marked throughout by a gorgeousness of scenic and sartorial investiture which make it especially noteworthy.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle has done his bit as "The Bell Boy" and has turned his attention toward moonshining, according to his new Paramount scenario. It has not been named as yet.

Peggy Pearce is another of the Triangle-Keystone girls who has recently been cast in a straight dramatic subject. She will appear next with Gloria Swanson in a new feature.

Edward Sloman has completed his latest Mary Miles Minter feature for American-Mutual. This does not mean he is idle, however, as he started the very next day on a new picture.

Wallace C. Clifton, World scenario writer, has completed the story and continuity for "The Interloper," in which Kitty Gordon is to star. "Scenarios are not written, they are rewritten," says Clifton.

Universal has completed in two reels a special which is called "Careless America." It is expected to make America safe for careless pedestrians and automobilists. Harry Levey is editing it.

Essanay is working on the script of a new feature which it promises to announce shortly. Director Berthelet is getting everything in readiness to rush the picture through, with an all-star cast.

Gertrude Claire, the clever character woman, is in the cast of "Naughty, Naughty!" starring Enid Bennett, the Ince star. Paramount has released the picture.

Tom Mix was fortunate in having an exceptional cast with him in "Western Blood," which he recently finished for William Fox. Cowboys in dress suits supply a great part of the story.

Bryant Washburn promises some new wrinkles on the "dual" role question when Pathe's "Twenty-one" is released. He is said to hand himself money and fight with himself, in the picture.

Wm. S. Hart is preparing to put over another outlaw story for Artcraft. It is called "The Tiger Man," and will have the advantage of Hart's skill as a director and the star player.

Having put on "A Pair of Silk Stockings," Constance Talmadge, Select star, next proposes to put on "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots." In both of these she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick through Select.

Marguerite Clark is finishing the last scenes of "Rich Man, Poor Man" for Paramount under the direction of J. Searle Dawley. The star wields a billiard cue in a friendly game in this picture.

"Paying His Debt," a new Triangle which features Roy Stewart, is a Western subject nearing completion. The star has a dual role for the first time since joining Triangle.

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne and their company have been working nights to complete "With Neatness and Dispatch," the elaborate version of a story that has been widely read.

Dorothy Dalton, Thomas H. Ince star, has finished work on a new Paramount feature under R. William Neill's direction, which will be known as "The Mating of Marcella."

Carl Stockdale Engaged

William Russell, of the William Russell Productions Company, has engaged Carl Stockdale, whose recent work with the American Film Company has brought him much praise. Mr. Stockdale was with Mr. Russell in "In Bad" and "The Midnight Trail."

Sessue Hayakawa Is to Star With His Own Company for Haworth Pictures Corporation

Hayakawa Refuses Offer to Tour Japan

It was announced from the West Coast last week that Sessue Hayakawa, who recently signed to appear as star of his own company for Haworth Pictures Corporation, of Los Angeles, has refused an offer to appear personally in the theatres of Japan. This would require at least three months, it is said, and the star does not wish to discontinue his motion picture work for that length of time.

Vitagraph Offers New Idea in Serial Plan Book

Something new in serial advertising service to exhibitors has come from Vitagraph in connection with the forthcoming chapter play, "The Woman in the Web," by President Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Instead of getting out one big book covering the entire serial it was decided to issue the service in three sections of five episodes each. The idea was based on suggestions of several branch managers, who said that in many cases exhibitors lost or mislaid the large plan book and thus lost step in their publicity campaigns.

The first issue contains portraits and biographies of the stars, Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon, and reproductions of posters, lobby displays and other exhibitors' aids.

Snakeville Comedies Have Been Renewed

Intensive treatment is said to have been given the ten Snakeville comedies issued by Essanay through General Film, with the expectation that they will duplicate their former popularity. New film, new titles, new tints and careful editing are expected to make these subjects most acceptable as program adjuncts in any sort of theatre.

Critic Praises "The Blue Bird"

Ohio Censors and Others Attend Private Showing of Artcraft Spectacle at Columbus—Big Campaign of Exploitation Planned

AT a recent private showing of "The Blue Bird," given at Columbus, Ohio, for the benefit of the censors and a few exhibitors and members of the press, Artcraft's film version of the Maeterlinck masterpiece was pronounced an amazing accomplishment, according to an announcement from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Among those present was Miss Alice Coon Brown, dramatic critic of the Ohio State Journal, who wrote a two-column review of "The Blue Bird" in the Ohio State Journal, over her signature, in which she mentions the exceptional subjects which have been released during the life of the industry, including "Quo Vadis," "Cabiria," "Neptune's Daughter," "Hypocrites," "Rose of the World" and "The Birth of a Nation," and adds:

"The other day we were privileged to see a picture that takes still another step ahead, and a very long one. It is the filming of Maeterlinck's 'The Blue Bird,' under the masterly direction of Maurice Tourneur. It is the last word in the development of fanciful and poetic dramas on the screen, and it accomplishes many things which a few years ago were impossible, through photography.

"The poet takes us to the gates of life and death, unlocks to us the soul of things, and touches the sources of all that is dearest. . . . It is a heart-touching expression of the resurrection. . . . Never do you realize more strongly that the art of the motion picture is the art of the director than in looking at this series of lovely pictures, the elusive thoughts of a poet taking tangible form.

"Here is a picture without a vampire, without even so much as a love story; a picture without a star; a picture which sets itself to express a great poet's message of hope and happiness. And we believe that the people will throng to see this picture, and that it will bring the thoughts of the great Belgian author close to their lives.

"The picture has had no public showing anywhere as yet, but it is planned to release 'The Blue Bird' at the end of Lent. What a glorious thing it would be, in this period of depression and doubt, if every picture theatre in the land could give out its message of happiness at Easter time! We can think of no more beautiful and appropriate Easter gift than this poetical message of the life everlasting."

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation states that it plans to give "The Blue Bird" the most extensive exploitation that has ever been accorded a motion picture. Carl H. Pierce, special representative, has been traveling through the country for several weeks, conferring with the managers of the branch offices with a view to arranging special exploitation in the various localities, in addition to the nation-wide publicity and advertising campaign which is being waged in the daily newspapers and national magazines and other recognized agencies.

Enid Bennett, the Ince Star, Is the Center of Interest in "Naughty, Naughty!" Released by Paramount

Praises "The Whispering Chorus"

"I consider 'The Whispering Chorus' one of the finest examples of the perfect motion picture that I have ever seen," said Emil Kehrlein, manager of the Los Angeles Kinema theatre, just prior to the production's opening there. "It contains all the essential elements to a drama of life—sympathy, human interest, thrill, love, tragedy and hope. And it is also the strangest story I have ever seen in photoplay form. It is a tribute to the art of Cecil B. De Mille."

Hodkinson Exhibitors Lengthen Their Runs

"WE are particularly gratified with the number of exhibitors who are proving, to their own satisfaction, that Hodkinson Service is not only worthy of a longer run than usual, but is actually profitable when played additional time."

The above statement was made to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week by a member of the W. W. Hodkinson organization. He continued further:

"We were reminded of the fact just a few moments ago by the arrival of a letter from our San Francisco office telling us of the decision of one of our customers in Oakland, California, to run his Hodkinson-Paralta Service two days instead of one. This exhibitor, like many others, had booked with us for a one-day run at a price quite satisfactory to both parties. However, it only took one picture of each series to prove to him that he would make more money by using his product two days instead of one. Accordingly, we received his new contracts for the longer run without delay.

"Looking at it from the exhibitor's standpoint, it does seem remarkable that the average exhibitor has not figured out just where he can gain by longer runs when he can get a product that will stand up under it. On the second day of a two-day run, for instance, your film cost is reduced, there are no expressage charges to pay, your advertising bills are less, and in every way the selling expense is reduced in proportion to the amount of business taken in.

"Practically the same argument applied in this case as that which we give our salesmen when they start out to sell our product. We tell them that if they are not successful in selling our entire product in one visit, the selling expense increases, which of course results in a waste and eventually an increase in the cost of the product. The exhibitor of today should look at matters in much the same light. He is a seller and the public are the buyers. It is up to him to reduce the selling expense as much as possible in proportion to the amount of business he does.

"An essential to the longer runs, we admit, is a product that warrants extra time, and, of course, we claim we have it in Hodkinson-Paralta Service, and the results we are obtaining in encouraging longer runs is the most convincing proof we can offer."

Satire on Coal Famine

There is said to be a touch of satire on the late lamented coal situation in "She Couldn't Grow Up," Billie Rhodes' Strand-Mutual comedy which is scheduled for release April 2. The comedy opens in "the frozen East."

World Film Lays Down New Rules for Casting

Hereafter no directors will do casting for World-Pictures. In the interest of efficiency the management has decided that all casting will be done in the following manner:

When a story is accepted by the scenario department and the continuity has been written and O. K.'d, a conference will be held by the production department managers, scenario editor and general manager as to which star shall be assigned to the principal role. When this highly important point is determined the work of casting the remainder of the players will be given to the casting director, whose selections will be approved in another conference.

Metro Begins "The House of Mirth"

Metro has begun the production of Edith Wharton's novel, "The House of Mirth," having assembled what it claims to be one of the strongest and most distinguished casts ever selected for the screen. June Mathis and Albert Capellani prepared the scenario and the former will also direct the picture. The difficult role of Lily Bart has not yet been assigned, but Henry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour, Edward Abeles and Lottie Briscoe have already been given important parts.

Louise Lovely Is Presented by Universal in "The Girl Who Wouldn't Quit"

Showing of "La Tosca" for Lasky Officials

The completed production of "La Tosca," the Paramount release for March 25 starring Pauline Frederick, was recently exhibited to the officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who pronounced it an ideal subject for Miss Frederick.

Well known players are found in the supporting cast of the famous Sardou play. Frank Losee again plays an important character in the part of a villain as Scarpia, the chief of police of Rome, who covets La Tosca and orders the execution of her sweetheart. Jules Raucourt has the romantic role of Mario, the artist lover, who finally meets his death at the hands of a firing squad, and Henry Herbert is Angelotti, the political refugee who foils the pursuing police by killing himself when he is cornered. W. S. Forestelle is Spoletti, the vigorous and resourceful captain of police who carries out in minute detail the cruel orders of his chief.

Exterior scenes, in harmony with the architecture of the period, were secured at Fort Marion, St. Augustine and other southern Florida points.

Hodkinson Official Tours Middle West

C. E. Shurtleff, general sales manager for W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, left on March 22 for an extended trip covering Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City, Minneapolis and Chicago. Mr. Shurtleff plans to be away until some time after the first of April in a big campaign to speed up the sales of Hodkinson Service throughout the Middle West.

Exhibitor Must Share Blame

"He Is Responsible for Much of the Ruinous Overhead Bearing Him Down," Says Laemmle, Universal's President

FRESH from his recent attacks upon wasteful and extravagant film producers, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has come forward with the direct charge that the exhibitor himself is to blame for much of the ruinous overhead bearing him down.

Mr. Laemmle's statement is based upon the results of a tour of observation recently undertaken by Joe Brandt, assistant treasurer of Universal. This trip included the territories from which the loudest exhibitor complaints have been heard.

Among the facts laid bare by Mr. Laemmle as the result of his assistant treasurer's report are:

That hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of films are lying idle and useless upon the shelves of the exchanges because exhibitors have failed to return the lithographs and photographs loaned to them for advertising purposes.

That hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of film are being sent to the silver refiners as the direct result of carelessness and inefficiency in the operating room.

That totally unnecessary expense is thrust upon the exchanges as the result of the loss of film cans, reels, leaders, trailers, film cases, straps and reel bands.

That an enormous loss is annually experienced because of carelessness in preparing films for shipment back to exchanges and because of indifference in the matter of taking proper care of mounted paper rented to the exhibitor.

That even greater loss is caused to both exchanges and their accounts as the result of unnecessary and wilful delays in returning shows and in forwarding them on certain trains.

To a representative of this publication who desired to get further details, Mr. Laemmle spoke in his characteristic straight-from-the-shoulder way.

"My statement means just what it says," Universal's head emphatically declared. "The time has come when mealy-mouthed compliments and pussyfoot praise of all things and all persons connected with the moving picture industry should cease. Instead, it is up to every man who has the welfare of the industry at heart to take a vigorous smash at anything which menaces its successful existence.

"The other day Mr. Brandt, who had just returned from a tour of some of our exchanges, laid before me his report covering the sources of exchange leakage. I should consider myself as a traitor to the men who helped make Universal—the exhibitors—unless I gave this report the widest publicity.

"Do you know that Universal is annually compelled to shelve hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of films in excellent condition, simply because some exhibitors make a practice of retaining the advertising matter loaned them? This material is of no earthly use to them after the pictures have been shown, but it is vitally necessary to exhibitors who have still to present these subjects. Naturally, no man will book a production unless he can obtain the necessary advertising props, with the result that after a comparatively limited life these films must go on our shelves and there remain indefinitely.

"While on his tour Mr. Brandt made a special trip to one theatre which was reported as being a flagrant offender in this respect. He discovered hundreds of posters lying stacked up in the cellar, while enough photos to fill up a good-sized packing case stood in one of the corners. Practically every prominent exchange organization was represented in the advertising thus literally kicked around."

Chaplin's "Dog's Life" Ready for April

IT was announced this week that "A Dog's Life," the first subject in the series of eight comedies Charlie Chaplin is making for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has been completed, and will be ready for release early in April.

The story with which Chaplin inaugurates production under his own management was selected by a process of elimination, it is said, after half a dozen scripts had been rehearsed and found wanting for one reason or another. Finally Charlie himself hit upon the idea of utilizing as his chief support a homeless, unkempt white mongrel that had sought refuge in the studio one day. The shivering, neglected cur furnished the novel note of pathos that the comedian believes absolutely essential to the type of screen humor that he has made all his own, so a story was built about the pair—Charlie as a tender-hearted vagrant and the dog as his only friend.

tion, and which is released the current week

The narrative of the adventures that befall this knight of the road and his brindle-nosed retainer will be kept secret, it is said, until the picture is released.

The members of the cast are headed, as usual, by Edna Purviance in the role of the cabaret singer. Harry Lauder is said to have suggested the actual title of the comedy to Chaplin during his recent visit to California by remarking in his dry Scotch manner that Charlie was now "leadin' a dog's life" in his new studio at Hollywood.

The production will probably run well over two thousand feet, but will be distributed in the standard two-reel manner.

More Buildings for Vitagraph

LAST week witnessed more building activity at the Vitagraph studio in Hollywood than has been seen there at one time since the new stage and administration buildings were completed some months ago. Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph's president, states that this is due to the fact that seven companies now are engaged in production at the company's western plant, and the nature of the stories being filmed required new and distinctive settings for each.

The most important building operation was the construction of a complete studio for William Duncan and his serial company in the Big Bear Valley. When Duncan first went there, he expected to remain about two weeks, but he found so many suitable locations for his exteriors that he decided to make a large part of the picture there, and instead of taking the time to transport his company to and from the scene he had a special studio built, and there, with the aid of a complete staff of carpenters and artists, will be able to make many interior scenes in the development of the story.

Another important building operation at the Vitagraph plant was the construction of a complete Arizona town for the reproduction of "Wolfville," as painted in the stories of Alfred Henry Lewis, more than a score of buildings being put up for it. This will remain standing indefinitely, because the O. K. Restaurant, the Red Light Saloon and other landmarks in the Lewis stories will figure in the screen productions.

Besides this building work, a complete medical laboratory had to be built for a series of scenes in "The Seal of Silence," the Earle Williams feature now being directed by Tom Mills; numerous special sets were made for scenes in "The Woman in the Web," the new serial in which Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon are to be featured under direction of David Smith. The script of the serial, as written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, calls for many original settings, both interior and exterior, and a large force of carpenters has been kept busy supplying them.

Simultaneous with this other construction work, special buildings were being constructed for the use of Lawrence Semon and Montgomery and Rock, heading the two Big V comedy companies which are producing single reel laugh makers at the rate of about one a week.

Goldwyn Pictures Win Exhibitors' Praise

AS indicative of the widespread enthusiasm with which "Dodging a Million," Mabel Normand's first Goldwyn Picture, is being received, Goldwyn cites the fact that J. A. Quinn, showman of Los Angeles, has just finished a two-weeks' run of this George Loane Tucker picturization of the story of the modiste's dresser who became an heiress. Business in the first week at his Rialto theatre was huge, Mr. Quinn states, but in the second was even better.

The approval thus expressed follows on the heels of a three-weeks' run of Mr. Tucker's picturization of Edward Childs Carpenter's "The Cinderella Man," with Mae Marsh as the star.

Goldwyn reports that exhibitor praise of its productions, both old and new, continues to pour into its New York offices. C. B. Nance, who conducts the Ruth theatre at Ruth, Nev., writes: "The Goldwyn service is sure going good here. I think it is the best of them all."

Fox Stars Busy in East and West

Production at the eastern and western studios of William Fox goes on apace. At the eastern studios June Caprice is working under the direction of Harry Millarde on a new picture by W. Francis Crowley titled "Blue Eyed Mary." Under Carl Harbaugh's direction George Walsh is engaged in the filming of "Brave and Bold," an adaptation by Perley Poore Sheehan from "Four Forty at Fort Penn." "Fires of Hate" is the working title of a new play in which Edmund Lawrence is directing Virginia Pearson. The scenario is by E. Lloyd Sheldon. Jane and Katherine Lee are also at work on a new play in which they save their aunt, a wealthy widow, from fortune hunters and succeed in marrying her off to a man worth while.

At the West Coast studios Jewel Carmen is making "Confession," while "Her One Mistake," described as a story of the unwritten law, is occupying the time of Gladys Brockwell and Edward Le Saint, her director.

McAdoo Asks Bill Hart to Help Loan Drive

In reply to a personal request from William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, William S. Hart, star of Artcraft pictures, has promised to devote a portion of his time about April 15 to the patriotic duty of assisting in the Liberty Loan drive. He will speak at Los Angeles, San Diego, San Francisco, Oakland, Portland, Tacoma, Seattle, Salt Lake City and a number of other cities.

Trade Paper Advertising Got the Business

Striking proof of the value of trade paper advertising has just been made available by the Fox Film Corporation, following its campaign for putting Bud Fisher's Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons on a contract basis. One month ago William Fox had not even contemplated taking over this interesting series of productions. Today, he not only is world distributor of the Fisher pictures, but he has a larger number of signed and sealed contracts than have ever been obtained in the history of the industry for a feature of this sort.

This success was achieved, according to Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, chiefly through trade paper publicity. "The ink was not dry on the contract," he explains, "before we began formulating plans for a smash. We realized that we had a feature that, while small from standpoint of length—they run only about 500 feet, you know—really was a whale of its kind. Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons undoubtedly are the biggest little productions on the market; hence advertising was certain to pay."

Chambers Designs Sets for Doris Kenyon Play

Charles Chambers, artist and illustrator, is making the sketches for the interior scenes of "The Street of Seven Stars," the Mary Roberts Rinehart story in which Doris Kenyon will appear at the head of her own company. A number of the scenes of the story are laid in the Latin Quarter of Paris. Mr. Chambers spent several years in the Quarter during his student days, and is said to be thoroughly familiar through personal contact with the surroundings.

Bertram Bracken Engaged by Paralta

Bertram Bracken, formerly of the William Fox forces, has joined the directorial staff of Paralta Plays at their California studios. He will direct the fourth Henry B. Walthall picture to be produced by Paralta. It is an Alaskan story from the pen of Monte M. Katterjohn and is practically ready to be staged.

Metro Uses Motion Painting

Second Nazimova Picture Embellished with the New and Unique Art of Ferdinand Earle, Discoverer of the Process

THE aid of motion painting, the discovery of Ferdinand Earle, has been invoked in preparing for the screen Madame Nazimova's second Metro production, in which the Russian star plays the part of a gypsy princess. Mr. Earle, who has studied long with such renowned artists as Whistler and Bouguereau, is an artist-pioneer who believes that the same results can be attained on the screen that are obtained in the sister arts by Edmond Dulac, Bakst and Urban. Maxwell Karger, himself an artist and always interested in new art-forms, has given Mr. Earle an opportunity to develop his ideas at the Metro studio, and the new Nazimova picture will no doubt profit as a result.

As a sort of pictorial interlude, Mr. Earle will show the development of a celebrated resort of wealth and fashion from earliest times. Its splendid tropical solitude, before the arrival of man, is first pictured. The scene changes as if by magic throughout the succeeding stages of evolution, giving full value to the natural beauties of the place, up to the fulfillment of its destiny as a garden-spot of earth. Nazimova herself figures in the closing views. Art-titles have also been made by Mr. Earle for the entire production, paintings in harmony with the accompanying scenes having been made for the purpose which are said to considerably enhance the picture's value.

The artist has been obliged to experiment with different pigments, oils and surfaces in order to obtain something that will photograph in the way he wishes. The intricacy of the process is said to protect him, because he might explain practically every detail of the proceeding and still run no risk of having his work duplicated.

Heavy Bookings Are Reported by Mutual

EXHIBITORS who have adopted the open market plan of booking are said to have found Mutual productions profitable offerings. Stars of consistent drawing power are booked with confidence, and among these Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fischer are headliners, it is claimed.

"Powers That Prey," the last Minter drama, and "Ann's Finish," the Fischer comedy, both show advance bookings exceeding all previous features of these stars, it is said, and the indications are that they will establish new records.

Edward Holland, manager of the Sennett theatre, Los Angeles, who recently adopted the open booking system, writes Mutual under recent date:

"Since we adopted the open market plan of booking a short time ago we have looked at four of your pictures, two starring Mary Miles Minter and two starring Margarita Fischer. All four have proved to be great successes, both artistically and financially; Miss Fischer is the best drawing star whom we have shown in five-reel productions in many months. All the features from the Santa Barbara studio have been absolutely perfect in both direction and photography and have had stories that were of real entertainment value."

The next Minter production for Mutual is scheduled for April 1 under the title "A Bit of Jade," and is a story of mystery with a lot of Oriental atmosphere. Margarita Fischer is now working on "Primitive Woman," which, as the title indicates, is a story in which the elementary passions of the eternal feminine are contrasted with the modern female of the species.

Edison Presents "The Wall Invisible"

A PRIVATE showing was given at the Edison studio on March 16 of the new Shirley Mason picture, "The Wall Invisible," which had been completed last month under the working title of "Aliens." Having been edited to six thousand feet and provided with most of the sub-titles, the feature needed but a few touches here and there to make it ready for release, and the observers were able to form a good idea of its appeal. Among the invited guests at the showing arranged by Director Bernard J. Durning were Henry MacMahon, Shirley Mason's representative, who suggested the definitive title of the production; Ormi Hawley and Frank O'Connor, two of the players; J. Searle Dawley, the well-known Paramount director, and a number of non-professional friends.

Miss Mason's acting in the role of Kiku-San, the Japanese heroine, pleased everyone, and several of those present expressed the opinion that the new Edison offering would create a sensation. It is said to be quite different from anything Miss Mason has previously done, being tragically dramatic in a number of the situations, though the comic spirit has not been neglected. The most striking characteristic is the action continuity.

Mr. Durning, the director, was warmly complimented on the artistic sets, the invention of stage business, the smooth working-out, and some exceedingly clever and novel lighting effects. Next to the star, Matt Moore's acting stood out in the role of the young American who marries an alien wife, individual hits being scored also by Miss Hawley, Frank O'Connor and T. Tomomoto, the Jap actor. A pleasing incident was the presence at the showing of J. S. Dawley, the former Edison director-in-chief, of whom Bernard Durning was a favorite protege.

Paramount Names April Films

Eight Productions Are Scheduled, Presenting Unusual Line-up of Stars — Sessue Hayakawa Feature Comes First

WALTER E. GREENE, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of the distribution department, last week announced the April releases to be offered under the Paramount trade-mark. For the fourth month of the year this organization discloses the latest screen accomplishments of Marguerite Clark, Billie Burke, Dorothy Dalton, Vivian Martin, Sessue Hayakawa, Wallace Reid, Jack Pickford and Charles Ray. Six of the productions in which these celebrities appear come from the Famous Players-Lasky Studios in the East and West and two from the Thomas H. Ince plant.

"The initial Paramount release of the month will be a new Sessue Hayawaka subject, 'The Honor of His House.' Staged under the direction of William C. DeMille and written by Marion Fairfax, the eternal triangle in this photoplay receives a twist that completely transforms it and alters the idea that has been used in many dramatic productions so that it is all but unrecognizable.

"April 8 will mark the release of two Paramount pictures starring Jack Pickford and Wallace Reid. Jack's new photoplay is an adaptation from the story by Harry Leon Wilson, 'His Majesty, Bunker Bean.' William D. Taylor staged it before the camera, closely following the original story. Louise Huff, in the part of 'the Flapper,' appears opposite Jack, the supporting cast including Hart Hoxie, Jack McDonald, Frances Clanton, Peggy O'Connell, Gustav Seyffertitz and Edythe Chapman.

"Wallace Reid's appearance will be in 'The House of Silence,' by Margaret Turnbull."

Marguerite Clark and Vivian Martin are the stars to appear on March 15. Miss Clark's vehicle is "Rich Man, Poor Man." This subject by Maximilian Foster, the novelist, has had wide publicity, having appeared in serial form in the Saturday Evening Post, in book form and on the stage, where is was adapted by George Broadhurst. J. Searle Dawley, director of Paramount pictures, staged the photoplay.

Vivian Martin's picture is "Unclaimed Goods," by Johnston McCulley, scenarioized by Gardner Hunting. In this film the star appears as a Western girl, the daughter of a sheriff, who passes through the remarkable experience of being shipped as an express package to an out-of-the-way mining town.

"Playing the Game," Charles Ray's newest photoplay, directed by Victor L. Schertzinger, under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, is marked for April 22 release. This subject discloses the star in a character quite unlike anything he has heretofore attempted. The story by Julien Josephson has to do with a young Easterner who as a result of riotous living, is compelled to fly to the Western plains where romance and many exciting events await him. Doris Lee appears opposite Mr. Ray.

The final releases of the month on April 29 are Billie Burke in "Let's Get a Divorce," and Dorothy Dalton in "Tyrant Fear," an Ince production. Miss Burke's play, the scenario of which was written by John Emerson and Anita Loos, offers a satire on the ease of sundering the marital knot and is expected to prove the star's best screen vehicle yet.

Petrova Chooses Name for New Feature

FROM the offices of the Petrova Picture Company it was anounced this week that the title of the fourth special production in which Madame Olga Petrova is to appear has been changed. Up to the present time this picture has been known to the trade as "The Great Star." This, however, was but a working title. The name under which the fourth Petrova feature is to be released is "Tempered Steel." This is the Polish actress' own personal choice and was decided upon only after two weeks' consideration by herself of various titles submitted from the different members of her organization.

"Tempered Steel" fits exactly, it is said, the character of the latest production in which Madame Petrova will shortly be seen, inasmuch as the play deals with the terrific nerve strain and suspense which the leading character of Lucille Caruthers, portrayed by the Polish star, undergoes in her struggle to work out her own destiny in the face of strong parental opposition. The story is from the pen of George Middleton. Mr. Middleton is the author of "Polly With a Past," now playing at the Belasco theatre, New York.

The production has been directed by Ralph Ince. It contains a cast of screen players, prominent among whom are Thomas Holding, J. Herbert Frank, E. J. Radcliffe, Matilda Brundage and Edith Hinckle. It will be distributed through the various branches of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit following the release of "The Life Mask," Madame Petrova's third special feature issued on March 18.

Louise Glaum Will Soon Start on Next

Louise Glaum, the new Paralta star, who has just completed "An Alien Enemy," her initial production since joining that company, and which takes her from the narrow scope of vampire roles for the first time in years, will soon start work on her next production. Miss Glaum's second Paralta play will be the screen version of an original story by Monte M. Katterjohn, who wrote "An Alien Enemy" for her, and it will be directed by Wallace Worsley. Miss Glaum is waiting at the studio for the completion of some settings and for the final approval of the scenario before starting the filming. The title of this production has not yet been decided upon.

Christie Keeps Two Companies Busy

Directors Al Christie and Scott Sidney are keeping two comedy companies busy at the Christie plant on Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, Cal., according to reports from the West Coast last week. Ethel Lynne, Billy Mason, Bobby Vernon, Eleanor Field and Dorothy Dane are the principals in the one-reel comedies produced at this studio.

More Triangle Volunteers for Uncle Sam

Sam Comer, assistant to Triangle Purchasing Agent L. H. Buell, has enlisted in the signal corps at the U. S. Aviation Corps at San Diego and expects to report for duty in a few days.

Mon Randall, former well-known newspaper artist who has been for some time past an artist and cartoonist for the Triangle Film Corporation, has made up his mind to become an ambulance driver in France. Randall has volunteered his own services and those of his big Marmon touring car to the Red Star society and is awaiting notice of their acceptance.

Arthur Fresneda of the Triangle Accounting Department, has made application to join the medical corps stationed at Ft. Riley, Kansas.

Changes in General Film's Sales Force

Four important changes in the sales force, two in the South and two in the North, are announced by General Film Company. John R. McIlheran, of Dallas, Tex., for eight years prominently identified with film exchange interests of the Southwest, has been appointed manager of the General Dallas exchange.

James B. Kelly, known for years to motion picture exhibitors of the South, becomes special representative for General in Texas, with Dallas as his headquarters, to handle the organization's releases in an intensified campaign.

F. Flarity, whose appointment as manager of the Albany General Film exchange was announced recently, has been transferred to Buffalo to succeed E. J. Hayes, resigned. He has been succeeded at Albany by C. R. Osborne, another well-known exchange man, who resigned as manager of the First National Exhibitors exchange at Boston to return to General Film. Previously he had been employed as a salesman out of the General Film Boston and Wilkes-Barre exchanges.

"The Home Trail" Heads Vitagraph List

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, announces the following program of releases to exhibitors for the week beginning March 25:

"The Home Trail," a Blue Ribbon feature, starring Nell Shipman with Alfred Whitman; "The Hand of Fate," fourteenth episode of "Vengeance—and the Woman" serial, starring William Duncan with Carol Holloway; "His Wife Knew About It," one-reel comedy with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew; "Stripes and Stumbles," a "Big V." comedy, with Lawrence Semon as the star. Written and directed by Lawrence Semon.

Mr. Smith announces that the regular Vitagraph program, which now includes four units, or nine reels weekly, will be given to exhibitors at least a week in advance of release date, so that they may make booking arrangements accordingly.

Kaiser Has No Terrors for Fox

"The Spy" Said to Be Object of Teuton Venom, But Producer Comes Back Strong with Orders to Push Patriotic Films

IN a special dispatch to the New York Herald, dated London, March 17, the Frankfurter Zeitung is quoted in a tirade against Americans who are accused of organizing hatred for Germany. Speaking for its particular part of the Central Empires it threatens the United States with revenge after the war, and more particularly promises exclusion from that territory of American motion picture makers who have produced films antagonistic to the Teuton cause.

The William Fox production, "The Spy," in which Dustin Farnum has the title role, is doubtless one of the pictures referred to, for it was one of the pioneer anti-Teuton propaganda pictures. In "The Spy" the activities of the American Defense Society to counteract the German spy menace to America are depicted, and it is obviously this organization which the Zeitung singles out when it says:

"In the New World, however, in the fourth year of the war and many months after America's entry, the foremost leaders of public life, including an ex-President, former Ambassadors and Cabinet Ministers and university presidents, league themselves together for the deliberate organization of childish and poisonous agitation."

That William Fox stands pat on this picture is evident from the fact that he recently ordered new prints to be sent to all the Fox exchanges in the country for immediate showing in all sections where it has not been seen. And as if this were not enough he comes back again with "The Pride of New York," having ordered new prints of this feature also, for distribution to all his film exchanges. As the typical New York boy who graduates from skyscrapers to aeroplanes, via the American training camps, George Walsh commits lese majeste on the film by knocking down a "double" of the German Crown Prince for insulting an American girl who is acting as Red Cross nurse in a captured French town.

"It's a dirty dog that bites the hand that feeds him," says Colonel Fox sententiously, "and no decent German in America will be injured by the exposure and punishment of Prussian spies. In the secret book which 'The Spy' finds in Berlin are said to be written many names of Americans, who have been bribed by promises of titles and honors which they could not purchase with all their wealth, to act as agents of the Kaiser in his accursed scheme of world domination. If I have done my bit to expose these traitors it was well done and I am proud of it."

Three More Paralta-Barriscale Plays Ready

ALREADY Bessie Barriscale has completed five seven-reel features for Paralta and is now working on the sixth. Two of these, "Madam Who" and "Within the Cup," have already been released. Those completed and awaiting their turns for release from the Paralta offices are "Blindfolded," "Maid o' the Storm" and "Rose o' Paradise."

"Blindfolded" is a story of the underworld. There is a series of interior scenes taken in absolute darkness with but flashes of light to reveal the action, which are said to build up a suspense more tense and thrilling than in any other screen play ever made by Paralta. This picture was directed by Raymond B. West from the story by E. Richard Schayer. Mr. West is also responsible for the direction of "Maid o' the Storm," which is a story laid in Scotland and in which Miss Barriscale's impersonation commences as a fishergirl waif and transforms to a prima donna in London Opera. The story was written by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton. "Rose o' Paradise" is a screen version of the novel by Grace Miller White and was staged under the direction of James Young.

Miss Barriscale is now engaged at the Paralta Studios in the filming of a patriotic drama to be entitled "Patriotism." She is also being directed in this by Raymond B. West, and the story is from the pens of Jane Holly and R. B. Kidd. Many of the scenes in this picture will be laid in Scotland, but they are said to be of a completely different nature from those presented in "Maid o' the Storm."

Pathe Promotes Parsons and Winchester

UNDER the regime of Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., P. A. Parsons, as advertising manager, will have charge of all Pathe advertising, while Tarleton Winchester, formerly serial publicity manager, has been made publicity manager. Harry Lewis has been appointed manager of the Pathe art department.

Mr. Parsons, well known in the motion picture world as publicity and advertising manager of Pathe, will devote his time and attention to advertising, being in complete control of that branch of Pathe's activities. The Pathe advertising in the newspapers and other mediums has become of such importance that Mr. Brunet deemed it best to separate the advertising and publicity departments. Mr. Parsons has been with Pathe for five years.

Mr. Winchester will have charge of all publicity matters emanating from the house of Pathe. He has been connected with this organization for almost two years, having been successively editor of Pathe Sun, which combined with it special sales and publicity work, and serial publicity manager.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

Humor and Human Interest—Animal Films

DO you remember that story by O. Henry—perhaps it has been filmed—in which a sheriff is confronted by two men, either of whom might fit the description of a man sought for wife-murder and one of whom actually is the culprit? The sheriff, after various unsuccessful ruses, kicks a little dog that wanders into the room. One of the men pays no apparent attention to the incident. The other violently resents the cruelty and is promptly handcuffed by the sheriff. "I have lived in Kentucky," explained the officer when asked to account for his action, "and I have never known a man who was too fond of horses and dogs who was not unkind to a woman."

Which is a long way of saying that a sympathetic fondness for animals is practically universal, though its implied corollary of cruelty in other directions is seldom present. And the exhibitor who caters to it by adding a short nature picture to his program is sure of one reel at least that will give pleasure and in very many cases cause a hearty laugh. And, speaking of laughter, one of the funniest pictures we have ever seen was that wherein a monkey diverted himself with a garden hose. Monkeys are nature's farce comedians and on the screen or off are the most mirth-provoking exhibits in the collection. Elephants, too, are prime favorites and the recipients of an emotion mingled of affection and amusement. Those who saw the Urban pictures some years ago, taken at the London Zoo, will remember how delightful they were. The same type of picture is being made today by Curator Ditmars of the New York Zoo, as readers of this page have noted. They are short, lively, cleverly titled and indeed make ideal comedies in every sense of the word.

An animal picture of a different type is that taken in the animal's natural habitat, and is often extremely beautiful and novel, as well as entertaining. Such pictures often have all the quality of a good scenic, with the added element of sympathy. Excellent examples of this type are the Nature Studies made by Commissioner Finley, of Oregon, showing birds of lake and sea, wild and friendly bears, herds of deer in the virgin forest, and a great American eagle on his lofty nest. Pathe Freres at one time gave much attention to this type of picture and were particularly successful in portraying wild bird life.

Don't be afraid to lead your audience out of the beaten path. They may surprise you by greatly enjoying the adventure.

How Did They Do It?

How did a supposedly barbaric people, with no known methods of transportation, no steel tools, and no cement, build a fortress on a hill whose ponderous stones fit each other's irregular sides with the precision of a well-made crazy quilt?

That is the thought always in one's mind when viewing the very interesting Lincoln-Parker picture devoted to Cuzco, the "City of the Sun," built by the ancient Incas. A survey is first made of the present city, lying 11,000 feet up in the Andes, with its fine plaza, and Spanish cathedral and university. Like most Spanish cities, its grandeur is of the past, and the inhabitants, descendants of the Incas, are a pretty dilapidated though picturesque lot. Then we climb the hill, on which is the above-mentioned fortress, with its huge walls and terraced gardens. On a slope rising above the fortress location are seats for the Chief and his staff, whence they watched the progress of the building. Also, torture stones for the unfortunates who incurred their displeasure. A lively band of Indian youngsters add the comedy element.

A Delicacy from Russia

Whether or not the Germans will have reached Transcaucasia by the time this appears in print is idle speculation. But if they do, we hope they will not interfere with the ancient, honorable, and profitable industry of caviar as practised by the natives, and set forth in very interesting fashion in a current release of the Educational Films Corporation. Caviar, be it remarked for the unenlightened, is made from the eggs of sturgeon, or rather, it is the eggs, salted down and exported carefully in cans. The film, carefully edited to avoid the unpleasant yet bring out all the steps in the process, begins with the "spring haul" on the banks of the Kura River, and closes with the camel train that carries the valuable product to its port of departure on the Black Sea.

The reel is of undoubted value for the exhibitor in its timeliness.

Interest and Amusement Nicely Combined

The real thing in Hula Hulas, danced by the Hawaiian equivalents of little Ann Pennington, is perhaps the "feature" of the current Bray Pictograph. It forms the very entertaining conclusion of a day in Honolulu that includes a trip up the "Punch Bowl," whence a fine panorama of the city lying along the curving shore is had.

The fine work that goes into the engraving and printing of a Liberty Bond will, perhaps, make those articles all the more to be sought and appreciated when they are again put on the market. As this event is imminent, the patriotic exhibitor might do well to offer this picture to his patrons.

Bobby Bumps, as the antagonist of a local "champ" about five times his weight is as funny as that delightful young hero has ever been. Fido, doing his by the black cat, is equally successful.

Fine Doings Under the Sea!

Last week, in reviewing the first installment of "Depths of the Sea," issued by the Ditmars Studios, we had occasion to comment on the atrocities practised by the octopus. In the second part, also shown at the Strand theatre, Mr. Octopus ventures to encircle a ray, and gets the shock of his life,—a genuine electric one, from the storage battery carried by the ray.

Modern military tactics are also employed by the cuttlefish, who ejects clouds of black smoke, behind which he retreats from his enemy. The cuttlefish, by the way, has more than one stunt. He is an expert catcher of crabs, which he devours with relish, and is a turncoat who changes his stripes to spots before our very eyes.

The reel is filled with any number of curious and extremely interesting forms and phases of life that could not otherwise be known.

In the Spring a Young Bird's Fancy—

One method is as good as another, we suppose, if you have the key to it. So when young Mr. Gull, in the current number of the Finley Nature Pictures, expresses his admiration of his lady friend by bowing sideways, he wins a cordial response in the same style and we are left to presume that the courtship ended happily.

This is one of several charming scenes of bird life as it is found on the shores of a lake. The snipe is watched as she approaches her nest, the nest located, and visited three weeks later by the naturalist, who finds the little chicks all ready to make friends. The young of the blue heron are shown, and gulls on their nests and diving. A spirited "hundred yards dash" is also indulged in by the gulls, preceding the amusing scene of courting mentioned above. The reel is especially good for family programs and children's matinees, while possessing sufficient amusement of a novel character to render it acceptable by any audience.

Of Varied Interest

"Of interest to women" seems to have been left out of the Universal Screen Magazine this week, but there is plenty to hold the attention of the man and boy. And perhaps the woman, these days, can find something to engage her eye and mind other than hats and "household hints."

For example, the scene of military preparation is shifted to Canada, where men to lead troops to replace those who fell so gallantly at Ypres are receiving training. Also plenty of good food, and an opportunity to win strength and agility by strenuous games.

That most popular part of the making of a newspaper—its printing, is excellently shown in a number of close-ups of the great presses at work. The lively work of getting the printed sheet into speedy circulation also receives attention.

Women as well as men will soon be thinking of the summer Panama, so after all there is something for the ladies, in a short length showing how this popular form of headgear is made in Java.

Willie Hopkins has a novel conception of "The Eyes Have It," expressed in his "Miracles in Mud."

Why They Survive

Nature is certainly an arch fakir, but if she were not, precious little chance would there be for many of her charges to survive. As Mr. Ditmars shows in a current number of his "Living Book of Nature" called "Adaptation." The screech owl, who lives in old trees and flys by night, has a coat of mottled wood browns and soft down under his wings that muffles his flight. His powerful talons and sharp, strong beak make short work of the mouse which he catches in the woodpile and devours in the solitary comfort of his nest.

The long neck of the flamingo enables him to seek his food far beneath the surface of the water. The wild turkey, with his dark, burnished coat, mingles with the shadows and sun flecks of the summer woods and becomes part of the dark tree growth when snow covers the ground. Most curious and interesting is the "secretary bird" from Africa with quills in his head and black knickerbockers on his long legs A very ungainly creature, till we see how useful his height is in protecting him from the snake that he stamps to death.

The reel offers excellent entertainment in that it is instructive and very amusing, with laughable action.

"ADAPTATION."
EDUCATIONAL FILMS CORP'N: APRIL.

A Scenic with "Punch"

There is real excitement in the Pathe picture which forms the second part of the current educational. It illustrates the timber industry of Sweden and shows great rafts made of logs bound together with saplings and ropes being steered down and around powerful currents where death is averted only by extreme skill. The camera man has evidently been part of the time on the raft. For the rest, he has stationed himself at various points of the shore affording the best view of the dangers encountered. The resulting pictures are genuinely dramatic.

The other part of the reel consists of views of the ancient French towns of Saint Flour and Aurillac in Auvergne. They are charmingly located, and afford many attractive pictures of red roofed houses in clustered trees, narrow streets, and quaint types. Aurillac, with its tall houses rising straight from the river bank, might be a French Venice.

Strips Naked The Soul of History's Maddest Murder-King

"THE KAISER" The Beast of Berlin

New York over "The —The Beast

WITH the Broadway Theatre's first showing of Rupert Julian's super-sensation, now property of Jewel Productions, blasé New York went wild.

At last, red-blooded Americans have before them a picture—no, a revelation, that sets them boiling with rage, fighting mad. At last, Americans see the evil thing they are battling against. At last, they know they have good right to be mad.

"Thank God!" says Burr McIntosh, "little old New York finally got up nerve enough to publicly call the Kaiser just what he is, 'The Beast of Berlin.'"

A Picture not of battlefields but of one man's murderous, treacherous, lecherous soul.

A Drama of mad, ruthless ambitions. A shocking expose of the secret instincts of the wickedest human being in all history.

An absorbing, thrilling, dramatic Story that reaches the pinnacle of artistry through its daring conceptions and opulent settings. Photographic effects such as the world has seldom seen.

At the very first showing at The Broadway, men and women stood up and cheered like mad. The New York American said:

"Polite playgoers became an orgiastic mob."

They'll do the same thing in your theatre if you'll only give them the chance.

Get the full money-meaning of this.

Here's a marvel of a Picture that will pack your house to the fire-limits day after day after day.

Here's a Picture that will pull in more people and more money than you ever took in before on any single day. A Picture that will keep on taking it in for a bigger number of days. A Picture that will get you a new record-net-profit.

THE BEST CRITICS IN THE BUSINESS SAY:

"Masterful screen production. It is the moving picture stupendous."—MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

"It is a picture worthy of the history-making age that produced it. It moves one to tears. It brings a prayer to one's lips. Will be a furore all over the country."

—BILLBOARD.

"From a patriotic standpoint, this film should prove a bear and it ought to bring down the house anywhere. There are great advertising possibilities in this picture. Taken as a whole it should prove a big money-maker."

—WID'S.

"A Picture to make your blood boil—every American Exhibitor should book it. Never yet has a document been written, not even President Wilson's forceful address to Congress in which he declared war on Germany, that will drive home this fact more convincingly. Grips you like a vise from beginning to end. The Picture is a Masterpiece. Will raise the roof of the theatre."

—MOVING PICTURE NEWS.

"A remarkable and wonderful picture. Conveys powerful message for every true American. The picture wrung round after round of applause from the Critics. Worked audience into tremendous pitch of enthusiasm."

—N. Y. TELEGRAPH.

"Stirring. Received tumultuous applause from people who packed the theatre. Polite playgoers become orgiastic mob."—N. Y. AMERICAN.

Now — get on the wire to your nearest Jewel Exchange, or the Home Office, just as soon as you've read this last sentence and nail down this smashing super-sensation of 1918 for the biggest net profit you ever put in the bank.

But do it now if you want a real clean-up. You haven't a minute to lose. Act! And act quick!

WARNING!

NO sooner had the trade learned that "The Kaiser, The Beast of Berlin," is the most sensational success of recent years than several producers dug up some of their old pictures and gave them names similar to "The Kaiser, The Beast of Berlin." This was done for the sole purpose of getting a little extra money by confusing the mind of the exhibitor.

Don't let anyone confuse you!

The one and only "Kaiser picture" that has set New York wild with excitement and has made the people STAND UP AND CHEER LIKE MAD is to be secured through the JEWEL OFFICES and nowhere else. The title of this picture is

New Sunshine Comedies for Fox Program

Henry Lehrman has made two new Sunshine Comedies for William Fox, the titles of which are "A Self Made Lady" and "The Waiter's Wasted Life."

In "A Self Made Lady" the story hinges on a female crook who was sent to prison for seven days. A mistake is made by the jailer and she is kept behind the bars for seven years. When she is finally freed she wants to reform. She meets a male crook who refuses to permit her to travel the straight and narrow path.'

"The Waiter's Wasted Life," it is claimed, also is calculated to chase away the blues.

Military Activities in Hearst-Pathe News

Military activities of the United States and her Allies are shown in Hearst-Pathe News No. 23, the locale ranging from the Western front in France, where a French general is seen bestowing medals of honor upon American soldiers, to Yaphank, N. Y., and Camp Logan, Texas.

General French, head of England's home forces, is shown reviewing the latest recruits in England's final drive for manpower at Chelmsford, Eng.; Governor Chas. Whitman, of New York, is seen riding a British tank through the streets of Albany, in a similar drive on behalf of Great Britain in the U. S. A.

A spectacular feature of the release is the thrilling rescue of the storm-battered survivors from the shipwrecked liner Kershaw, near an Atlantic port, while another picturesque sight is the burning of a number of gigantic oil wells near Los Angeles, Cal.

"The Whispering Chorus" Is Current Artcraft

"The Whispering Chorus," the story by Perley Poore Sheehan which Artcraft released March 25, is claimed to have an added publicity advantage by reason of the fact that its concluding chapter only recently appeared in All Story Weekly Magazine, in which it has been running in serial form. It is therefore fresh in the public mind.

Though the cast of "The Whispering Chorus" contains a number of prominent players, including Kathlyn Williams, Elliott Dexter and Raymond Hatton, none are being featured in the production.

King Completes His First Russell Production

Henry King has completed his first William Russell production at the studios of the American Film Company in Santa Barbara, California, and is now talking over the script of the second story with his star and making the necessary changes. King likes directing the big outdoor type of plays that Russell is to be featured in, and is said to have added some touches in the first Russell feature that were not in the scenario.

COMING PROGRAM OFFERINGS

Triangle Offers Three Dramas

Dorothy Dalton in "The Unfaithful," a Two-Reeler with Novel Theme —Others, "The Marriage Bubble" and "The Vortex"

TWO marriage dramas are listed on Triangle's March 31 card, one of them being a two-reeler featuring Dorothy Dalton, titled "The Unfaithful." The other is "The Marriage Bubble," which presents William Desmond in a dual role. A Wall Street story, "The Vortex," with Mary Warren and Joe King, is the concluding feature release of the week.

"The Unfaithful," by Lambert Hillyer, presents the situation of a neglected wife who professes infidelity in order to assist her husband to write a book on matrimonial difficulties. Robert McKim, Charles Gunn and Charlotte Vermont are included in the cast of "The Unfaithful."

Woman does the proposing, according to "The Marriage Bubble," W. Carey Wonderley's story, which affords William Desmond a dual role in which he plays both drinker and gentleman through a maze of complications which finally clear the road for a romantic love affair. A comedy fire scene is said to be a notable feature of this production. Anne Luther is seen in Mr. Desmond's support.

Jealousy is the theme of "The Vortex," Norman Sherbrook's Wall Street story of love and intrigue, released for the second part of the week. Mary Warren, who had her initial role as leading woman with William Desmond in "The Sea Panther," and Joe King are the featured players. Many of the scenes of this production were filmed in the beautiful Busch gardens in Pasadena.

"The Vortex" Is a New Triangle Play Announced As An Exceptionally Good Picture

Much of the action in Herman Raymaker's new comedy "A Playwright's Wrong" takes place within a motion picture theatre. A specially constructed picture theatre was built for this photoplay. Throughout the filming of this story there were few moments when Raymaker's troupe was not playing to a big audience composed of directors and performers who were off duty.

First of Blue Ridge Dramas April 13

THE first of the series of Blue Ridge dramas, produced by Ned Finley for General Film Company, will be released April 13, a week later than originally planned, and other subjects will follow every second week. The title of the initial release is "The Return of O'Garry." Three of the Finley films have already been completed and the company is making arrangements to return to Bat Cave, N. C., to resume its work on other releases. Each subject will be two reels in length.

"The Return of O'Garry" is a tale of the Northwest in which Ned Finley returns to the screen in the role made famous in his O'Garry pictures, produced several years ago by Vitagraph. Marion Henry is featured with him in heroine roles. The action revolves around the attempt of the Royal Mounted officer to break up the operations of a gang of cattle rustlers which has established itself near the American border. O'Garry disguises himself as a tenderfoot and finds employment on the ranch which is the headquarters of the gang. The tenderfoot is asked to help in the re-branding process, but calls a halt by arresting the foreman. A terrific fight follows in which the officer is overpowered. Ciel, the foreman's daughter, attempts to release the officer, but is detected, and to save the situation she pushes O'Garry into a bear trap, telling the men she did it to prevent his escape. Later Ciel manages to release O'Garry and speeds him on his way for reinforcements, but is forced to seek safety from the wolves in the top of a tree. O'Garry returns in time to rescue the girl from her stepfather, who is attempting to brand her with a red hot iron for her refusal to marry his halfbreed companion, and another fierce fight follows in which the mounted officer emerges the victor.

"Mountain Law" and "The Raiders of Sunset Gap" will be among the forthcoming Blue Ridge Dramas.

Report Heavy Export Sales of Jaxon Serial

General Film states that extensive foreign territory has been sold on the patriotic serial, "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," produced by the Jaxon Film Corporation.

William Parsons, Whose Funny Films Will Be Released by Goldwyn, Seems Built for Comedy

"Blue Blood," Goldwyn's First Selexart

"Blue Blood," a drama in which Howard Hickman is starred, is announced by Goldwyn as its first Selexart release. As the initial production of a group of three, Goldwyn professes to offer it with confidence that it embodies all that exhibitors and public want.

Beautiful Hawaii Shown in Pictograph

Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 112 contains the second series of views of Hawaii. A bird's eye view of Honolulu, taken from a high cliff, discloses the picturesque city with its luxuriant tropical growth. Natives are seen at work and play and four dusky Hawaiian beauties give a demonstration of the native religious dance, the hula-hula. "The Birth of a Liberty Loan Bond," showing in detail the processes of engraving and printing, is a subject of immediate interest to every American. The animated cartoon by Earl Hurd is "Bobby Bumps' Fight," and shows both the screen kid and his ever-present canine ally, Fido, in desperate combat.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 18 Military in Tone

Hearst-Pathe News No. 18 is distinctly military in tone. Two of the subjects treated are those which show Americans of the National Army of Camp Devens and Camp Upton and those which depict a review of the French Colonials on a wide plain in France.

The American scenes referred to show hundreds of young soldiers doing a practice run in a snow storm. The sight of so many men in uniform, running at top speed over hill and dale, is a striking one. Some companion scenes to this show the drafted men from Yaphank in their big parade down Fifth avenue, New York.

The French scenes show many thousands of veterans, heavily armed, marching in review on a plain so wide that it disappears in the horizon. A close-up is given of one hero who bears upon his chest several rows of medals as a testimonial of his valor.

Glances at the Program

It is said Bryant Washburn, just for luck, wanted Pathe to release "Twenty-one" on April 13. They compromised on April 7, and all agreed no luck is needed to put the picture over.

Goldwyn said this week that the cast with Madge Kennedy in "The Danger Game," released April 7, is the best to be had, and Goldwyn is very accurate about such things. Tom Moore is in it.

Essanay scenics are said to be making a big noise with Southwestern exhibitors. General Film, distributing them, has received many letters about them from all over the country.

May Allison makes her bow as a Metro star in her own right in "Social Hypocrites," released April 8. This is taken from the stage play, "Bridge."

A new Sunshine Comedy in which Lloyd Hamilton appeared is about ready to go over the top for William Fox. Trying scenes and narrow escapes are said to fill this picture.

Comedy, pathos and thrills are promised in the five-reel Pathe feature, "Mrs. Slacker," released the week of March 31. Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale are presented as co-stars.

"A Pair or Sixes," a George K. Spoor special, starring Taylor Holmes, has been scheduled for April 1, following "Ruggles of Red Gap." The latter made a big hit all over the country.

George Walsh is the star in the special feature release of William Fox for the week of March 31, "The Kid Is Clever." This picture is said to be novel in the beginning, with an unusual climax.

"Bill's Baby," a Capitol Comedy starring William Parsons, is announced for early release by Goldwyn. National Film Corporation is making the productions.

The next Artcraft picture starring Elsie Ferguson, to follow "The Song of Songs," is "The Lie," which is announced for April 8. The star has an emotional role, it is said.

"Rough and Ready," the latest William Farnum film from the William Fox offices, is said to have "five hundred feet of the fiercest fist fight ever filmed." "Battling Bill" is one of the battlers.

"Heart of the Sunset," the Rex Beach story released by Goldwyn, features in some parts a band of genuine U. S. Cavalrymen stationed at Eagle Pass, Texas. Frank Powell directed.

"The Blindness of Divorce," recently completed by William Fox on the Coast, is to be released as a standard production early in April. The cast is an all-star one, under Director Frank Lloyd.

WHAT'S IN THE SHORT SUBJECTS?

Timely war pictures from darkest Africa to the training camps of the United States are promised, along with other news features, in Hearst-Pathe News No. 24, released March 20.

Within an hour after the coast liner, "Kershaw," ran aground near an Atlantic port, a representative of Universal Current Events was on the job "shooting" the rescue of the ship's passengers. It's in No. 45 of that screen publication.

Agriculture plays a big part in Universal Screen Magazine No. 65, for release April 12. Industry also comes in for its share of attention, with "Miracles in Mud" winding up the reel.

The 111th release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue is a trip in the Klondike, over the Chilkoot and White Passes, which were the trails used by the gold hunters who flocked to that region.

Universal Animated Weekly No. 24, released March 20, has scheduled eleven distinct subjects for that issue. These include everything from Irish "doings" on March 17 to army and navy preparations and accomplishments.

Kleine to Release "The Wall Invisible"

The Japanese feature film recently completed at the Edison studio, with Shirley Mason in the leading role, will be released through the George Kleine System under the title of "The Wall Invisible." It is a six-reel production.

Mack Sennett, Who Makes Those Ripping Comedies for Paramount

Thomas Meighan Has Role in "Missing"

Thomas Meighan, leading man in many Paramount and Artcraft features, will appear in one of the principal roles, that of Sir William Farrell, in "Missing," which Commodore J. Stuart Blackton is producing for Paramount from Mrs. Humphrey Ward's war novel. Meighan has just completed his work in "M'liss," in which he has the leading male role in support of Mary Pickford. Sylvia will appear opposite him in "Missing."

Gladys Leslie Is Star of Week's Vitagraph Feature

The Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature release for the week of April 1 is "Little Miss No-Account," with Gladys Leslie as the star. This will mark the third appearance of Miss Leslie on the Vitagraph program and will prove her best vehicle to date, according to the Vitagraph announcement.

As in her other productions, Miss Leslie has the role of a young girl, this time a ragged heiress whose fortune is sought by scheming relatives. In the supporting cast are Eulalie Jensen, Carleton King, Richard Wangeman, Stephen Carr, William Calhoun, Patrick O'Connor and West Jenkins.

Neilan Comes East to Direct Cohan

Marshall Neilan, who has recently been directing Mary Pickford in Artcraft pictures, has arrived in New York to take charge of "Hit the Trail Holliday," which Anita Loos and John Emerson adapted for the screen from the stage play of the same name and in which George M. Cohan is to have the title role. He has already commenced work on the production at the 56th street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Neilan is enthusiastic over "Hit the Trail Holliday," having seen the stage version twice when it played at the Astor theatre in New York. George Cohan himself wrote the play, which dramatized Billy Sunday, the famous evangelist. Cohan is renowned as a picker of box office winners and "Hit the Trail Holliday" is said to have been the biggest success he ever launched.

In the Independent Field

C. R. De Barge Will Direct Pictures for the Scrantonia Photoplay Corporation

Scrantonia to Produce Features

The Scrantonia Photoplay Corporation, which has announced for immediate release six one-reel comedies featuring Charlie Fang, a Chinese comedian, has already expanded operations and will immediately commence the producing of six and seven reel photoplays, to be released on open market through Jesse J. Goldburg, exploitation manager.

Negotiations are pending for the purchase of the Crystal Palace at Rocky Glen, Pennsylvania, situated six miles out of Scranton. The Crystal Palace is the largest all glass enclosed structure in the United States, and is suited to studio work.

C. R. De Barge, vice-president and director general, Scrantonia Photoplay Corporation, will supervise all productions. Mr. De Barge was born in Antwerp, Belgium, and educated there. Upon completing his education there he went to Paris and studied dramatic art for three years, after which he was engaged by Pathe Freres. Later he was engaged as director by the British Colonial Pictures Company in London. Upon completing this contract Mr. De Barge came to America and worked for the old Imp and Biograph Companies, after which he returned to Amsterdam, Holland, and entered into the legitimate dramatic field. Returning to America, Mr. De Barge was engaged by The Famous Players and supported among other stars, Mary Pickford, Donald Brian and Pauline Frederick. He then directed the productions of the French Art Pictures Corporation, producing among others, "Mother's Fate" and "The Ten Commandments."

Gaumont Weekly on Open Market

Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic Released on Date of Shipment—Scheduled for Tuesdays and Fridays

AN official of the Gaumont Company, which produces the Gaumont semi-weekly news reels—the Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic, states in a communication to the NEWS, this week, that the demand for news on the screen has become insistent on the part of State rights buyers during the past several months, and this insistence has grown gradually since the declaration of war. "No theatre," says the official, "can afford to omit the news weekly from its program, which tries to please its patrons." He continued:

"Until the Gaumont Company decided to enter the independent field, State rights buyers found difficulty in giving their patrons pictorial news service. They were quick to realize their opportunity, however, and letters and telegrams demanding the Gaumont News Service began to pour into the Flushing office. So insistent were these demands that the Gaumont Company sent representatives to interview a number of the most important buyers, and the result is that the greater part of the country has already contracted for the new Gaumont semi-weekly news reels, the Gaumont News and the Gaumont Graphic.

"The Gaumont Company desires to call attention to the fact that these news reels will be released on the dates of shipment from the factory, and that shipments will be made from New York City every Tuesday and Friday morning. As soon as the reels are received by the buyers, they will be placed on exhibition. This means that there will be no stale news shown in the News and Graphic. The exhibitor will be quick to recognize that this is an improvement over the old plan of having a set release date for each issue, and holding up the showing of the news until that date, even though the news reel might be received by the exchange several days in advance. The first issue of the Gaumont News will be shipped on Tuesday, March 26, and of the Gaumont Graphic on Friday, March 29.

"Tarzan of Apes" Hitting High Spots

"Tarzan of the Apes," to be released shortly by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has been delivered to the various branches and exchanges of that concern and within the past week over seven hundred days of bookings have been offered and accepted, it is announced. According to Messrs. Williams and Schwalbe of the First National, not in their many years in the film business has a picture created the response as that accorded "Tarzan."

During the past week Loew's Stillman at Cleveland, Globe at Boston, the Hippodrome at Dallas, and Zoe theatre at Houston, Texas, have engaged a print for first run. Harry Davis of Pittsburg has asked for a print in order that he could screen it for the purpose of deciding as to whether he would run it for an indefinite engagement at his new house in Pittsburg. The Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, will begin its run on April 1, and the Virginia theatre, on the boardwalk at Atlantic City, opens April 7 for a week or longer. The Hippodrome at Buffalo, and Webb's theatre, Newark, and William Fox's Springfield theatre are booked to open April 7 for periods of one or more weeks, and Harry Crandall's new house at Washington, D. C., will open with "Tarzan."

Of the ninety prints to be issued by the National Film Corporation through the First National Circuit, but nine remain unbooked for the first five weeks following release date and bookings have already been consummated for such distant dates as June and July in such towns as Sheridan, Wyoming; Macon, Missouri; Des Moines, and Omaha, with August and September bookings recorded at Bayonne, Montclair, Caldwell, N. J., and Grand Island, Neb.

The picture as turned out in its final state by Watterson R. Rothacker's laboratory, contains thirteen hundred scenes, of which but two hundred and eighty feet are titles. There are two hundred and seventy hand-colored scenes and one hundred and ten decorated title cards were used in the printing.

Mr. Rothacker came to New York and in company with Isidor Bernstein, J. D. Williams and Mr. Schwalbe and Harry Reichenbach, studied the picture for several days before going back and upon his return to Chicago gave the work on "Tarzan" his personal attention.

London Broker to Handle American Product

Lionel Phillips, prominent film broker, 29a Charing Cross Road, London, writes the MOTION PICTURE NEWS that he has entered into negotiation with a number of the largest producers in New York, to handle their product in the British market. Mr. Phillips does not state in his communication the names of the producers with whom he has contracted.

"Eagle's Eye" Setting Pace

Good Reports Received from All Sections—Shows in Two Theatres in Same Section to Big Houses

"THE EAGLE'S EYE," the serial of Germany's spy system in America, which the Whartons are producing from the story by William J. Flynn, formerly of the United States Secret Service, was shown in Ithaca, N. Y., last week and both of the leading houses of the city ran it on the same night. Both houses were packed, it is announced.

"'The Eagle's Eye' represents an entirely new phase of serial photodrama," said William Dillon, owner of one of the two houses which held the simultaneous showing, "and that lies in the fact that it gives enough information that every American should know to repay him for the whole cost of his visit to the picture show. It is worthy of being featured over any five-reel picture on the same program. 'The Eagle's Eye' is a picture and a revelation at the same time."

The Majestic theatre in Des Moines, Ia., has been newly decorated especially for the showing of this serial. Manager O'Hare, of the Majestic, found that by using old ivory as an interior finish, with old rose trim, he got the effect of the national colors by using dull blue lights.

"The Eagle's Eye" opens at the Majestic on March 31, and will run there the first three days. This is to be told in the cotton episode upon which the Whartons are working, many of the scenes for which will be taken in the cotton districts of the South.

Exhibitors throughout the country are finding in the serial at the end of each episode of "The Eagle's Eye" a potent factor in aiding the third Liberty Loan drive. The novelty effect of seeing such a familiar picture as Uncle Sam animated and making a plea for the united financial support of the nation has proved most effective, it is reported. Such sub-titles as "Buy a Thrift Stamp and Shorten the War," "Help the Kaiser lose his job! Buy a Liberty Bond," "Buy a Liberty Bond and Drive a Nail in the Coffin of Imperialism," "Let Your Money Work for Humanity. Buy Thrift Stamps and Liberty Bonds," break the action and visualize the appeal.

The trailer was organized by a desire on the part of the Whartons to do what they could to aid the drive for the third Liberty Loan. The exhibitor has the option of whether or not to run it, as it is not a part of the picture, but the demand for it has caused the Foursquare Exchanges to attach it to the ending of each episode as it is shipped from the branch offices.

Exhibitors who may have held that "The Eagle's Eye" was "too contrary to the thoughts and opinions of German patrons," will find the experience of Schawger, owner of the Bohemian Annex, New York, enlightening. Mr. Schawger's theatre is in the heart of New York's "Little Germany." Police registration records show that the immediate territory served by the Bohemian Annex contains a greater percentage of aliens than any other section of New York. Despite the fact that it might be expected that such a clientele would not care to see Count von Bernstorff, Captains von Papen and Boy-Ed, Dr. Heinrich Albert, and others who represented their countries in the United States, exposed as villains by an array of facts which cannot be denied, the Bohemian Annex played to capacity houses on every run of the serial so far, it is said.

Webster Engages Welch as Leading Man

NILES WELCH, prominent juvenile star, has been engaged by Harry McRae Webster, president of Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc., as leading man for the seven-reel feature, "Reclaimed," the production of which he will commence immediately. Mabel Juliene Scott, who will be remembered for her work in Edgar Lewis's production of Rex Beach's "The Barrier," and Mr. Lewis's late production, an adaptation from Anthony Kelly's, "The Sign Invisible," has been engaged as Mr. Welch's leading woman. "Reclaimed" was written by Richard Field Carroll.

Mr. Welch was guest of honor, recently, of the members of the 307 Infantry, Camp Upton, Long Island. He was called upon to make a speech, and told the boys of the camp, his experiences before the camera, and concluded with the words: "I believe if our screen stars will devote a certain amount of their time to getting acquainted with the boys at the different camps, that they will be repaid a thousandfold."

Mr. Webster has leased the Standard Studio at Yonkers, N. Y., where "Reclaimed" will be filmed. There are few men that are better known in the amusement field than Mr. Webster, and his work both on the screen and in the drama has shown the master hand in both production and cast. "Reclaimed" is being made under Mr. Webster's personal supervision.

John D. Braddon, formerly with the William Fox forces, has been engaged as technical director for "Reclaimed."

Mike and Ike in "The Artist Model"

The first one-reel animated cartoon of Rube Goldberg's twins "Mike and Ike" (they look alike), is titled "The Artist's Model," in which the two caricatures will introduce a new method of advertising women's hosiery. Great interest is being shown by exhibitors all over the country in these cartoons. Harry Grossman, through whom these one-reelers will be released, reports that letters of inquiry are being received in bunches every day in which theatre owners express a desire to book the pictures as soon as released.

Rube Goldberg is a popular cartoonist. His cartoons are published in newspapers throughout the country. His work is of the laugh-making variety, and receives a good amount of advertising. In practically every city in the United States the public has been laughing at the humorous drawings in the papers.

Mr. Goldberg will present his famous twins "Mike and Ike, They Look Alike" in a series of one-reel productions of which "The Artist's Model" is the first. One reel will be released each week and each film will tell its own particular story.

Hart Reissues Liked by Bimberg

B. K. Bimberg, one of the most prominent exhibitors in New York City, who is the owner of a number of leading theatres, sent the following letter to Magnet Film Exchange in appreciation of the Hart reissues:

"I have already shown Wm. S. Hart as 'The Two-Gun Man' in 'The Bargain,' in my Standard, Schuyler and Broadway Photoplay theatres, and wish to state that this production brought capacity crowds—in fact, more business than I ever got on any other Hart production. This is rather surprising since I followed the 81st Street theatre after they had run the picture for an entire week—which bears out the fact that a great many of the re-issues are doing more business than the new productions."

Connelly Has Strong Role in "Devil's Pawn"

Edward Connelly's interpretation of the Devil in "Satan's Pawn," the first Bessie Barriscale feature to be released by the W. H. Productions, is said to be a striking characterization. The interpretation as given by Mr. Connelly is a dual character part—the visible in the human flesh and the invisible in the environment.

The story tells of association of his former sweetheart, who is married to another, with the artist who has been engaged to paint her portrait. Though of high mind and respected throughout their communities for their good reputation and character, they are compelled to feel the force of Satan and his invisible influences. The drama was adapted from the stage success "The Devil," in which Mr. Connelly had the title role.

Late Ivan Production Well Received

A representative body of buyers and press representatives witnessed the private showing of Ivan Film Productions, Inc., late release, "Life or Honor," at the New York Roof, Thursday afternoon. Leah Baird, James Morrison and Violet Palmer are the featured players. The production is in seven reels. Edmund Lawrence directed. The next Ivan release, now under production under the direction of Francis J. Grandon, will be completed soon.

Merit Gets News Weeklies for City

The Merit Film Corporation, which has purchased the distributing rights for Gaumont News Weekly and Gaumont Graphic for Greater New York, announces the first release dates to be March 31st, and April 4th, and there after regularly each Sunday and Thursday for this territory. A strong feature of the Gaumont product is exclusive news and views procured from "over there."

Francis Ford's First Production Since His Decision to Produce Independently, Is "Berlin via America," Said to Be a Worthy Contribution to the List of War Films

"Berlin via America" Ford's First

FRANCIS FORD announces the completion of his first independent production, "Berlin via America," written by Elsie Van Name. The picture has been assembled and the subtitles inserted. It is now ready for distribution on the independent market.

Mr. Ford directed the picture and presents the principal role—that of an aviator in the German army. Edna Emerson plays opposite Mr. Ford in the principal feminine role. She has the role of an American girl.

The story contains a certain element of mystery, love romance and that which predominates—the spirit of patriotism. He announces that offers have been received from prominent operators in the independent field, and that he has every reason to believe that "Berlin via America" will go over big because of its strong appealing title, its spirit of patriotism and its quality production. Mr. Ford has long been a favorite with the American public as an actor.

"Junk Prints No Longer in Foreign Fields"

"I RECENTLY declared that the advance of American films in the foreign fields was not due to war conditions," says President Paul H. Cromelin of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation in a recent statement. "This declaration is substantially true, but there is one war-time angle that has worked indirect benefit to the American picture abroad, and it is this:

"American pictures suffered loss of prestige abroad for many years because junk prints were shown in many instances. These prints came from England and were the result of an overflow of American films in that country. American pictures were indiscriminately shipped to Britain, and their suitableness to that market not considered at all, with the result that some of them fell into the hands of second hand dealers, who bought them as junk and sold them for such in foreign territories.

"Naturally, film buyers in those territories would not pay the price for new American films when ones could easily be had that were new to the market, although not in quality, so local picture fans never saw American pictures at their best, and were not impressed with what they did see. You would not expect a spirited demand for American films under such conditions!

"But the indiscriminate flood of American films on the London market ceased when the ten cents per foot British import tax went into action. There was no longer an overflow of American pictures in London, and shortly none for the second hand dealers who shipped to foreign parts. Besides, it became more difficult for the latter to make shipments, with the tightening of shipping restrictions. The countries the junk dealers had supplied tried out new American film, and theatre audiences took to this material with such enthusiasm that the foreign exhibitor was glad of the change. Today he declines to be switched to second hand stuff at any price."

Five Reeler Postponed

Lou Burstein, president of the King-Bee Films Corp., has notified Nat H. Spitzer that the production of their first five-reeler entitled "Old King Sol" has been postponed indefinitely.

Why Not the Melodrama?

By Nathan Hirsh

(Pioneer Film Corp.)

(Those of you who doubt the appeal of the melodrama on the screen, read what Nathan Hirsh, of the Pioneer Film Corporation, has to say in the following interview.—Ed.)

"The call for strong melodramatic productions has never been as heavy as it is at the preesnt time. Exhibitors everywhere are making their wants known at the exchanges, and are puzzled as to why some of the famous melodramas seen on the stage, are not adapted for presentation on the screen.

"I have often been asked by customers in New York State and Northern New Jersey, in which territory I operate, why the various producing companies did not produce more of the successful stage melodramas as a relief to the many society dramas being released, their strongest argument being that these plays would come to them with all the previous advertising which made them a success, at the same time offering their patrons a new type of pictures and stories. On inquiry among the manufacturers I found that in most instances the prices asked for the rights to film these plays were exorbitant, in many instances being upwards of $20,000.00 Add to that, the cost of special production which these melodramas always require and the total cost will almost be prohibitive. I did learn, however, that Selig had finished 'The Still Alarm' and at once entered negotiations with him, closing with the purchase of the negative. This was welcome news for exhibitors in my territory, and the bookings I have already received are equal to those of 'Cold Deck,' featuring Wm. S. Hart, which I am exploiting in my territory. It is my intention to state right the balance of the country and as soon as possible will close with several prominent buyers. Nowithstanding the fact that I have handled the biggest productions since 'Civilization,' including 'Redemption,' 'Cold Deck,' 'Today,' 'Mad Lover,' 'Garden of Allah,' 'City of Purple Dreams,' and 'Carmen of the Klondike,' there seems to be more demand and more enthusiasm about 'Still Alarm' than I have experienced with any other production. Judging by my experience thus far, the exhibitors are right in their request for more strong melodramas of gripping interest and heart appeal.

Ochs and Seelye Getting Results in West

LEE A. OCHS, president, and C. R. Seelye, vice-president and general manager, United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., report from the Middle West where they are now campaigning in the interests of the United plan, report that their visit has been rewarded by a large membership of Middle West exhibitors.

Branch Manager C. W. Bunn signed up fifty Chicago theatres in mid-March following the Ochs' visit and the latter's addresses to the exhibitors of the Chicago territory.

"The Chicago office," writes Mr. Ochs, "will have one hundred days inside of four weeks. I should not be surprised if the Chicago territory gave our plan no less two hundred days of bookings altogether."

The announced plan of United Picture Theatres is to start wholesale co-operative buying of films for its members after two thousand booking days shall have been secured. For Chicago alone to take from 5 to 10 per cent. of this aggregate would indicate that the plan is in fair way of realization. Applications for fifteen days had to be rejected because they happened to be opposition houses to those that had already signed.

From Chicago Mr. Ochs paid flying visits to Cincinnati and St. Louis, and then visited the Southwest with stops at Memphis, Little Rock, Dallas and New Orleans. C. R. Seelye is organizing branch offices in these cities, putting men in charge who are thoroughly acquainted with the needs of Southwestern exhibitors. The proper handling of film distribution over the wire-spread area is being carefully studied with the view of cutting out unnecessary expense, insuring rapid shipments, and doing away with the idle days resulting from the ordering of superfluous prints.

In New York the efforts of Arthur S. Abeles, Eastern representative, and Aaron Corn, city sales manager, are lining up additional metropolitan houses. Another live Eastern centre is Boston with Stanley Hand in active charge. N. I. Filkins in Buffalo, Joseph Schwartzbine in Minneapolis, C. S. Edwards in Kansas City, and Gilbert Heyfron in Montana, report great activity. Conservatively it may be stated that the first five hundred of the desired two thousand booking days are in sight.

King-Bee Exchange for Northwest

Mark Goldman is the manager of a new "Bee-Hive" exchange that will handle the King-Bee Billy West comedies for the States of Washington, Idaho, Oregon and Montana. Nat H. Spitzer closed the deal that gave this important territory to Mr. Goldman and his new company that has been formed to sell the King-Bee brand of comedy exclusively in this section. Mr. Goldman left for Seattle last Saturday. He will make his headquarters in that western metropolis, and upon arrival there, will engage a staff of salesmen.

Sixty prints of the King-Bee two-reelers have been shipped to Mr. Goldman.

"Small Town Bully" Goes Good in New York

Magnet Film Exchange announces that the first of W. H. Productions Company Mack Sennett produced comedies, "The Small Town Bully," featuring Mabel Normand, Mack Sennett, Roscoe Arbuckle, and Owen Moore, is being booked heavily throughout Greater New York.

According to reports of exhibitors who have shown it, this comedy has created an interest for the additional subjects in this series, and in many cases the exhibitors have used this comedy as an added attraction, as suggested by the Magnet Film Exchange. By doing so they have also booked a feature production at a less rental than ordinarily, thus saving money in rental and giving as satisfactory a show as previously. The second of the comedies to be released is entitled "Friendly Enemies," and features Sydney Chaplin and Chester Conklin.

Juvenile Lead in "Moral Suicide" Popular

Jack McLean, who has the juvenile lead in Ivan Abramson's first production for the Graphic Film Corporation, "Moral Suicide," which was shown to the trade recently, was popular on the speaking stage before he appeared on the screen. He played one of the leading parts in Charles Dillingham's production, "Watch Your Step," for a year, during its successful run on Broadway. Mr. McLean's work in "Moral Suicide" is pronounced by critics to be one of the shining lights of the production.

Hazel Washburn Graphic's Recent "Find"

Hazel Washburn is to appear in important roles in future Graphic Film productions, according to an announcement made this week by this company. Miss Washburn is heralded by Graphic as a "find" and is said to possess rare beauty.

Up-State Business Good, Reports Samson

Sydney Samson, assistant manager of the new York Foursquare Exchange, is making a tour of the principal cities in New York State in the interests of Foursquare products and "The Eagle's Eye." In Albany, Troy, Schenectady and other points visited by Mr. Samson showings of the early episodes of the serial have attracted attendances of exceptional quality and dimensions.

"We have found," said Manager Hy Gainsborg of the New York Foursquare Exchange, "that where exhibitors have hesitated to book in advance of the first releases they have displayed an eagerness to secure this wonderful picture upon hearing of the attitude of the audiences attending these first showings.

"I have handled some ten serials for several large organizations, and I can truthfully state that none has possessed the entertainment value of 'The Eagle's Eye,' certainly not the element of appeal to the patriotism of the people, and none carrying such box-office value as this one the Whartons produced.

"I find, too, that Foursquare features are proving their worth to exhibitors. 'The Cast-Off,' which has been booked by numerous exhibitors in and outside Greater New York, is proving all we expected of it. With Bessie Barriscale in a story of delightful human appeal, this Ince production is one confirming our judgment in obtaining negatives."

Colonel Levy Speaks for "Tarzan"

Col. Fred Levy, president of the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Kentucky, on a recent visit to New York, witnessed a showing of "Tarzan of the Apes."

After attending a performance and spending two or three days studying the promotion mediums that had been utilized to put it over, Colonel Levy declared it would be the biggest money-maker for exhibitors since "The Birth of a Nation." Colonel Levy is identified with the B. F. Keith interests in the control of the three largest theatres in Louisville.

Gordon Closes Deal with Sterling

Herbert R. Ebenstein, sales manager, Sterling Pictures Corporation, announces that Nathan H. Gordon, Globe Feature Film Company, Boston, is the latest independent buyer to become affiliated with the Sterling system of ditribution. The first Sterling release in the New England territory through the Globe Feature Film Company, will be "Hypocrites," produced by George Loane Tucker, the rights to which Sterling acquired.

Mr. Gordon in commenting upon the deal said:

"I am an ardent admirer of the technical skill and artistry of George Loane Tucker. In this, his latest production, I consider he has rendered one of the best efforts of his career. The theatres of New England are already requesting our exchange for information as to our trade showing and other information regarding the release. I consider the deal just closed between the Sterling Pictures Corporation and myself will prove most advantageous. I assuredly feel that the Sterling Pictures Corporation have struck the keynote of equitable distribution."

Sterling is exploiting, also, the France Film production, "The Natural Law."

Pettijohn Makes Second Trip Westward

C. C. Pettijohn, general manager, Producers & Exhibitors Affiliated, left for a Western trip last week in the interests of the direct booking plan upon which he has been working with success for a few weeks past. He will be gone a week or more.

A wire was received at the headquarters of the Producers & Exhibitors Affiliated at 524 Longacre Building, from Cleveland, which stated that he was consulting with the exhibitors along the line and that he finds everything in splendid shape.

He visited Detroit, Chicago, and Indianapolis.

Hall Buys Negative of "Just a Woman"

Frank Hall, president of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has purchased outright the six-part production "Just a Woman," produced by Julius Steger, and featuring Charlotte Walker. He will distribute it through the U. S. Booking Exchanges.

Mr. Hall acquired the negative of the picture, which was adapted from the play of the same title, written by Eugene Walter and produced on the stage with great success a few years ago, yesterday. Miss Walker, who is starred in the picture version, also appeared in the same role on the stage.

"Just a Woman" will be released in the near future under the distribution system put into effect by Mr. Hall and his associates and will be available to exhibitors in all parts of the world simultaneously.

"Just a Woman" tells of the struggle of a lowly-placed but spiritually-developed woman to raise her husband to a commanding position in the world and her fight to retain his love for herself and their son when his old weakness—drink—and other evil influences which came with wealth, make him forget his better self so that he outrages all her finer sensibilities.

Billy West Titles Changed

The titles of Billy West's two latest comedies, "The Barber" and "The Prospector," have been changed to "His Day Out" and "The Stranger," King-Bee Films Corporation announces.

Dorothy Jardon Scheduled for Silent Drama

It is announced that Dorothy Jardon, comic opera singer, has arranged with Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr., publicity director, King-Bee Films Corporation, to act as her personal and business representative for a term of three years, and that Miss Jardon will soon make her debut as a motion picture actress. Mr. Rosenbaum is acting in a representative capacity for Nora Bayes, star of the vaudeville stage, who is to appear also in pictures, according to Mr. Rosenbaum's announcement.

Catherine Calvert, Edwin Forsberg and David Powell Appear in "A Romance of the Underworld," a Frank A. Keeney Production

Ford, of Wichita, "Live Wire"

Novel Lobby Display Used in Drawing Them to See Hart in "The Bargain" — Owns Biggest Downtown House

ARTHUR FORD, owner of the Marple theatre, Wichita, Kansas, is an exhibitor who is not afraid of trying out an idea, and especially the big ideas, unless it be that the idea might get away from him, as was testified to by a recent lobby display which he arranged for the showing of William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," which display carried a more-than-life-size image of a cowboy and horse, mounted near the box-office. As one of his associates said: "Mr. Ford is retiring and modest when it comes to being photographed, but when it comes to making motion pictures pay, particularly the Marple, at Wichita, the biggest downtown theatre, he's 'there and over.'"

"We did a great business on 'The Bargain,' said Mr. Ford. "Hart is a wonderful personality. But beyond the strategy of booking the picture I consider myself wise in devising a compelling lobby-display. The horse figure at the center of the set in the lobby display stands twenty-seven feet high, and it surely made people stop to stare! I really had a lot of fun watching its success. The posters and the other features of the lobby helped a lot, too, of course.

"A lobby should be the exhibitor's stimulator of public interest. Dozens of people pass theatres running productions and stars they've heard of and want to see, but it takes something a little startling, at least a good deal more so than a one or a six sheet, to arouse those dozens of people from the pre-occupied condition of their minds. The American public, and in fact any group of theatregoers, are on the whole rather unobservant. That's why I'm strong on advertising and striking lobbies. Get attention and get it in the right way and you immediately stimulate curiosity. That fills your theatre.

"Of course, you've got to have a real production. There's no use trying with 'bunk.' A good production will advertise itself and so will a bad one. But a bad one will advertise itself just about five times as fast, and if the bad one is in your theatre, you lose. I've lost myself sometimes.

"Take 'The Bargain'—it pulled for me because I advertised it and because it's a real production with a great star."

Mr. Ford is right on advertising values. Strategy always wins.

Keeney's First Reveals Underworld Life

"A Romance of the Underworld," which is to be the first release of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, is a screen version of the Paul Armstrong's drama, and in its revised form, it is said to be more thrilling than the play.

The action revolves around a girlish character whose life is suddenly transplanted from the quiet seclusion of the convent to the coarse and eventful environment of the underworld in the great city of New York. Doris' beauty attracts the unwelcome attention of a brutal and unscrupulous political boss, Mike O'Leary. Unknown to Doris, he has made her brother, Richard, a member of a low gang of heelers and "dope" fiends. Suddenly there is revealed to her a full knowledge of the dangerous surroundings in which she is placed. She finds her brother in an opium den, a helpless victim of the pipe, and tells him her story. Then follows the tragic events leading to trial of the heroine for murder. The trial scene is said to be most sensational. The court room scene is a replica of one in the Criminal Courts Building, New York. Catherine Calvert, with Eugene O'Brien in chief support, is featured. The production will be released shortly.

Bookings for "Eagle's Eye" Heavy

First bookings for "The Eagle's Eye" give proof of the confidence the exhibitors feel, throughout the country, in the drawing power of the twenty episode serial expose of plotting and intrigue of the Imperial German Government in America, by William J. Flynn, recently retired Chief of the United States Secret Service, said an official of Wharton, Inc., to a representative of Motion Picture News.

"Among the cities in which each episode has been booked for a week's run is San Antonio, Texas, with less than 100,000 population. The Modern theatre in Providence, R. I., has booked "The Eagle's Eye" also for a run of a week. It is the first serial to be shown there.

"Bookings for two and three days, in cities where the population usually causes a daily change, are the rule rather than the exception in the contracts made for "The Eagle's Eye."

Ann Dearing Appears in Gerard's Picture

Ann Dearing, who has the role of the mysterious woman in Ambassador Gerard's picture, "My Four Years in Germany," now running at the Knickerbocker theatre to crowded houses, is a new comer in the field of those working before the camera. Director William Nigh prophecies a bright future for Miss Dearing, who is just past seventeen and of English parentage.

Lincoln Exhibitor Tries Price Raise

When F. D. Eager of the Acme Amusement Co., manager of the Orpheum theatre, Lincoln, Neb., showed "The Price of a Good Time," he charged 50 cents a seat. Only the picture was shown, no vaudeville being on the bill. Mr. Eager reported his patrons highly satisfied and the box-office outcome as being most satisfactory to him.

"Two-Gun Man" Praised by Exhibitor

W. H. Productions Company are receiving communications from exchanges and from exhibitors all over the country who are running "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," to the effect that it is doing big business.

Leon D. Netter, general manager of the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Cleveland and Cincinnati, who controls "The Two-Gun Man" for the State of Ohio, received the following communication from Harry Hart, manager of the Southern theatre, one of the largest and most prominent in Columbus, Ohio:

"I am overjoyed at the extraordinary showing 'The Two-Gun Man' made the first day in my theatre. The receipts were nearly fifteen hundred dollars, which is conclusive proof that a good show man with a good picture has good chances of making as much money now as he ever had."

Ryan Has Long List of Comedies

Jester Comedies are meeting with enthusiastic approval in the Middle West, according to Phil L. Ryan, general manager of Standard Film Corporation. Kansas City, Mo., which has the distribution of these comedies in this territory. "Ever since we placed them on the market," Mr. Ryan said, "I have been greeted with a bundle of contracts on them from our five offices located in Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, Chicago and Minneapolis. Up in the Northwest, especially, the Jesters, are meeting with approval. Although the winter in Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, and Minnesota has been even more severe than usual, forcing many small town theatres either to close entirely through the worst months or to run only on a few days, our new features found pleased supporters.

"The Keystone Comedies are going good. There is a fly in the ointment of filmdom today and that is the presence of too much in comedy products that are untried, doubtful and usually downright inexcusable when it comes to screening. We consider ourselves fortunate in possessing our selected list of Keystone and Jesters.

"A circular going out this week is labeled "Comedy Galore," with 44 Mack Sennett-Keystone Comedies, 12 Jester Comedies, 11 Billy West Comedies, and 29 Christie Comedies, as well as various cartoon comedies that we have been handling for some time on the list. We also have two special 3 and 4-reel Arbuckle-Normand and Sidney Chaplin Comedy features that we look for big business on.

"We have secured rights to three original Charles Chaplin productions; these have been retitled and edited and the first will be called 'The Hula-Hula Dance.' Most of these comedies with the exception of the Jesters, were purchased from the W. H. Productions Company."

Graphic's Production Being Assembled

"Moral Suicide," Graphic Film Corporation's late production, is now being assembled by Director Ivan Abramson. The story deals with one of the important problems of life. John Mason heads the cast.

Foursquare to Give Bonuses

Exchangemen and Salesmen of Foursquare Pictures to Benefit—Key Explains System—Hoffman Reports

"PROGRESSIVE methods are always welcome in any field of commercial endeavor, and in the motion picture industry they are beginning gradually to find their places," said Pierre V. R. Key, of Foursquare Pictures. "The executives of Foursquare Pictures," continued Mr. Key, "as distributors of 'The Eagle's Eye,' the Wharton serial, and the features, 'The Bar Sinister,' 'The Cast-Off,' 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid,' 'Those Who Pay' and 'The Belgian,' have decided to establish a system of bonuses for the benefit of their exchange managers and salesmen.

"This plan is the result of the decision of Messrs. Backer, Wildberg, Hoffman and myself to make it personally advantageous to every member of our many selling branches to secure the widest possible distribution possible on every piece of Foursquare film merchandise we market.

"From the beginning, it has been the purpose of our organization to build for permanence, a permanence benefiting employes of Foursquare as well as the institution. The application of bonuses will be modeled upon a percentage basis similar to what prevails in the large manufacturing and selling concerns of this country. There will be first figured out the reasonable gross income which a photoplay should bring, and such amount will be estimated up as a fair earning upon the value of the picture negatives.

"For the purposes of illustration," explained Mr. Key, "let us assume that Foursquare Pictures has acquired the rights to a feature which conservative estimates justify the belief that the total bookings should reach $80,000. A ten per cent exchange will, first of all, be expected to produce its quota of $8,000. Thereafter, a division of all bookings in excess of this amount will be made in a way that will give to the exchange a certain percentage in addition to what it is legitimately entitled to for the actual distribution of the feature.

"In a sense, such a plan will make every person who secures a contract a sharer in excess profits. It will demonstrate the previously expressed intention of Foursquare Pictures to make it an object for efficient employes of the organization to share in its prosperity. It will also promote a feeling of good will and contentment which are factors in the building of any business and in helping to maintain it at high-water mark.

"This move, I am authorized to state," continued Mr. Key, "is merely one of several which our executives have in mind for the benefit of Foursquare Pictures as an organization and for its exchange managers and their subordinates. Mr. Backer has long held that a profit-sharing arrangement is one of the surest means of enlisting the fullest enthusiasm of the producers in an organization, but it was not until Mr. Wildberg joined Foursquare and explained how bonuses in his own manufacturing industries had worked out so satisfactorily that this procedure was agreed upon as proper to apply to Foursquare Pictures.

"From the west comes a communication from Mr. Hoffman who writes: 'All our men are enthusiastic over the idea we are about to put into practice. I have wanted, for a long time to bring it about and am delighted that its inception indicates that progressiveness and the application of sound business principles to motion pictures meets with the approval of those for whose benefit it is in part designed, and they are showing the keenest interest.

"I have left New York behind me for the time being, to move from city to city in behalf of the many exhibitors who are showing Foursquare pictures and such other product as is being distributed under the Foursquare banner. It has been a matter of gratification to discover that everywhere I go the men whose progressiveness is most pronounced agree with me in those fundamentals which I consider form the foundation of successful motion picture distribution. It has been a satisfaction to learn that my ideas—as set forth in the columns of your publication from time to time—are approved by the men who book and show pictures. Mr. Hoffman in the trip he began several weeks ago, and which is to continue for some time to come, is now in the Southwest and reports conditions good."

Novel Advertising for "Raffles" Opening

The All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., San Francisco, has arranged for the opening of "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman," at the Strand theatre, San Francisco, with a novel advertising campaign preceding the event. A man disguised as Raffles appears in the big stores daily. Incorporated in the stores' advertising in the morning and evening papers, during the engagement, this announcement appears: "'Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman' will be in this store at (given hour) on (given day) to make a purchase. The management at the Strand theatre will pay to any person who can identify this man $10.00, providing said person places his hand on the man's shoulders and says: 'You are "Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman" appearing at the Strand theatre this week.' Said person must prevent 'Raffles' from making a getaway to a machine waiting outside of the store, on which appears a banner with the wording, 'Raffles, the Amateur Cracksman,' appearing at the Strand theatre this week. Catch him and you will obtain $10.00."

In addition to the prizes of $10.00 daily given by the Strand theatre, a number of well-known stores in San Francisco have taken up the spirit of this proposition and are offering prizes themselves. The Strand theatre is carrying slides showing the eyes, ears, nose and mouth of the mysterious "Raffles."

"Great Advantages in Comedy Field"

WILLIAM STEINER, who left New York City last week on his second tour of the United States on behalf of the Jester Comedy Company, featuring Twede-Dan, the international mirth maker, expresses satisfaction with the success of his venture into the comedy field. Mr. Steiner in speaking of his new undertaking said that he wished he had entered the comedy field many years ago.

"I have been manufacturing film of every description but, comedies for the past twenty-three years," he said. "Up to a few months ago if one mentioned the word 'comedy' I felt as if I wanted to fight, but now it is different.

"How did I come to go in for this class of film? To tell you the truth, I hardly know myself. As I recall it, several of the boys came into the office and told me what a wonderful comedian Twede-Dan was. They talked so fast about his great possibilities that before I knew it I was under way at full speed. With Twede-Dan, as a star, I have a find who I think is a most versatile man. He is original, and he does not have to use any subterfuge or tread on the characterizations adopted by the comedians who have made reputations for themselves. Then, again, this venture gave me an opportunity of meeting with some of the old-timers, who have hibernated to other cities in the United States, and seldom come to New York.

"My first trip was practically one of jollification, and, before I knew it, I was back in New York with the entire country, excepting the District of Columbia, disposed of for the Jester Comedies. Up to the present time the first two releases, 'The Recruit' and 'His Golden Romance,' are enjoying phenomenal success in all cities throughout the United States, and they have the distinction of appearing in a great number of first-run houses.

"The third of the Jester Comedies, 'All Fur Her,' to be released in April, stands up in quality to the first two. Work has been completed on the May release, 'The Wrong Flat,' which is now in the process of its final cutting, and I can safely say that I will have to go some to beat this one.

"Have already secured my stories for the following seven, which will complete the first year's output. It is my intention to have all these comedies on hand, ready and completed, with paper and all advertising matter, so that they will be in the hands of the various exchanges far in advance of their release date."

Mabel Juliene Scott Is to Appear in "Reclaimed," a Harry McRae Webster Production

Parrott, Director King-Bee Comedies

Charles Parrott, formerly director of Keystone comedies, is now director general of the King-Bee Billy West comedies, it is announced.

Mr. Parrott's best known creations are a burlesque on "A Fool There Was," and "Chased Into Love," "His Bomb Policy," and "Bing, Bang." He is now working on his first King-Bee comedy to be released May 1st.

Kosch Closes for Foreign Sales

Harry G. Kosch, advisory counsel for Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., announced this week that he had been appointed New York representative for a co-operative body of foreign buyers recently organized for the purpose of dealing in foreign fields. Mr. Kosch reports an unusual state of activity in this particular branch of the industry. On behalf of John Olsen & Company of Copenhagen, Denmark, the General Enterprises, Inc., attorney, has negotiated a contract whereby this firm secures the Scandinavian rights to the entire Select output. Mr. Kosch also acted this week in a similar capacity for Olsen & Company in closing contracts for all of the productions made by Goldwyn for the territory embraced by Denmark, Norway and Sweden. In addition to the above mentioned contracts, negotiations were also consummated between Mr. Kosch and Nick Holde, acting for the Balboa Company, whereby a complete series of Balboa pictures will be distributed in Scandinavia by the organization which Mr. Kosch represents.

Another important deal involving the countries in Scandinavia, Finland and Holland has been consummated between Kosch and the Trans-Russian Film Company, which gives the latter named firm the right to distribute ten special pictures of the Frohman Amusement Company in the territories mentioned. Among these pictures are "Body and Soul," "The Woman in 47," "Then I'll Come Back," "What Happened in 22," "The Witching Hour," "God's Man," "The Rainbow," "The Accomplice," "The Song of Six Pence," and "The Conquest of Cannan."

In addition to these numerous activities the General Enterprises, Inc.,, Mr. Kosch is also handling the foreign sales for Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin's various special state right productions, among which are "The Warrior," "Mother," "The Liar" and "The Crucible of Life."

"Les Miserables" Turning 'Em Away, Says Fox

Reports from all sections of the United States, according to the Fox Film Corporation, indicate that "Les Miserables," the William Farnum production, is doing a business for exhibitors closely approximating that being done by "Cleopatra" as a road attraction. "Les Miserables" was released as a Standard Picture February 10 and since then William Fox has received a very large number of congratulations from exhibitors who have shown the big feature. There have been no reports whatever, it is said, of unsatisfactory business; but, on the contrary, every report received echoes the enthusiasm of exhibitors.

Three New York Houses Book West Comedies

Three of the big moving picture theatres in Greater New York have contracted recently for the Billy West King-Bee comedies. Starting with "The Stranger," the 77th Street theatre, Broadway and 77th Street, will play all the King-Bee comedies on schedules of two days. The 110th Street theatre, at Eighth Avenue and 110th Street, has two-day runs of all King-Bee Billy West comedies, starting with "The Stranger." Fox's Star theatre, at 107th Street and Lexington Avenue, is running the King-Bee Billy West comedies on a four-day schedule, starting with "His Day Out." Fox's Terminal at Newark has played Billy West comedies for three successive weeks, seven-day runs for "The Slave," "The Rogue," and "The Orderly."

"Crucible of Life" to Show for Government

General Enterprise, Inc., which is distributing "The Crucible of Life," is in receipt of a request from the Bureau of Public Information at Washington, D. C., asking for a private showing of the film before the members of the government organization, Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin announce. They have arranged for the exhibition. The picture features Grace Darmond, Jack Sherrill and Frank O'Connor and was produced under the direction of Captain Harry Lambart.

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin have also arranged with Tom Moore, one of the leading exhibitors of Washington, to give a special screening of "The Crucible of Life" for members of some of the war committees now working at the capital.

Universal New Series Begins April 8

On April 8, Universal will issue, it is announced, the first of a new series of features under the title of "Special Attractions." These subjects will be released at the rate of one every two weeks.

Present plans call for the appearance of Dorothy Phillips, Harry Carey, Priscilla Dean, Mae Murray, Mary MacLaren and Herbert Rawlinson, in the new series of productions and enough pictures to provide releases clear through to next November have already been completed, it is said.

It is Universal's intention to make its new Special Attractions take equal rank with the biggest productions now being issued. Each completed picture will represent the last word in quality and to bring this to pass, instructions have been issued to the authorities in charge at Universal City to give them their special attention.

As announced by Universal, the first four features to be released as Special Attractions will be "The Risky Road," featuring Dorothy Phillips; "The Scarlet Drop," featuring Harry Carey; "The Two Soul Woman," featuring Priscilla Dean, and "The Bride's Awakening," featuring Mae Murray. The first will be issued April 8; the second, April 22; the third, May 6, and the fourth May 20.

Cecil De Mille Recruiting Army Camoufleurs

Cecil B. De Mille, Famous Players-Lasky director, has been appointed a member of the staff of the U. S. Engineer's office in Los Angeles to aid in recruiting technical experts and scenic artists for camouflage work in France. The vast experience of motion picture technical men is proving invaluable to the Government, a company of 250 being in process of organization in Los Angeles.

Astra to Make Pathe Serial

"Hands Up," from the Story and Scenarios by Gilson Willets, to Be Produced at Pacific Coast Studios

THE first serial the Astra Film Corporation will produce on the Pacific Coast for Pathe is "Hands Up," from the story and scenarios by Gilson Willets, novelist and traveler, who has been engaged on Pathe productions for many months. It is the second Pathe serial for which he has been responsible, his former work being "The Mystery of the Double Cross," in which Mollie King was featured.

"Hands Up" will be produced in Astra's California studios, under the superintendence of L. J. Gasnier, president of the Astra Corporation, who has supervised such successful Pathe serials as "The Iron Claw," "The Shielding Shadow," "The Fatal Ring," "The House of Hate," and many others. It will be directed by James Horne. The full cast will be announced shortly, Mr. Gasnier having pomised that he will secure the best stunt actors and actresses to be found.

The story of "Hands Up" deals with the search of the last descendent of the Incas, the rulers of Peru before the advent of the Spaniards on this continent, for the buried treasure of his forefathers and for the girl, also descended from the Incas, whom it was prophesied he would marry and restore his race to its former greatness. This treasure house is supposed to be located in Arizona, and the adventures of the last of the Incas in search of his wife and treasure are exciting. Incidentally the girl he seeks is an American girl, and a full blooded virile young American enters the lists for the girl's hand. There are said to be mystery, thrills and adventure in this story calculated to keep serial fans interested to the last episode.

Hammons Takes Over Popular Cartoons

A DEAL was closed last week between the International Film Service Company, Inc., and the Educational Film Corporation of America whereby the latter company will show the animated cartoons, "Katzenjammer Kids" and "Happy Hooligan," in connection with the Educational's Bruce scenics and Ditmar's Living Book of Nature. The Educational subjects are shown weekly at the Rialto, Rivoli and Strand theatres, New York's largest, and are seen at the largest houses throughout the country.

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, is the man responsible for firmly establishing the educational film on the motion picture map. "The secret of pleasing the public," he said, "is to both interest and amuse them. The public is so interested in our educationals that they come back every week for the next. If there is anything more amusing than the 'Katzenjammer' and 'Happy Hooligan' cartoons the International have been putting out I have yet to see it. The combination of these two subjects will make an ideal reel, and the time is not far distant when the demand for it will be so great that every theatre in the country that aims to give its patrons what they want will be compelled to book it." The date of the first release of this combined reel is announced as April 15th.

Director Adolfi Joins World-Pictures

JOHN G. ADOLFI, the director whose most recent big picture is "Queen of the Sea," which he wrote and directed for the Fox Film Corporation, with Annette Kellermann as the star, has signed a contract with World-Pictures and will shortly begin the direction of a production for the World in which Barbara Castleton will be starred, it was announced this week.

Mr. Adolfi comes to the World with a record of achievement in the filming of entertaining, interesting box-office successes. While "Queen of the Sea," which has not yet been released, is his most recent big picture, he has directed scores of other big productions, having been in the industry almost from the start. Though young in years Mr. Adolfi may be considered a veteran of the silent screen. His technique and skill has advanced each year and he is considered one of the most certain producers of box-office drawing cards now directing pictures. The announcement of his connection with World-Pictures will no doubt be noted with interest by all exhibitors.

Mr. Adolfi began his career with the Biograph Company. He was associated with David W. Griffith in some of the latter's big productions. An interesting fact in connection with the filming of "The Birth of a Nation" is the fact that Mr. Griffith used some of the scenes that Mr. Adolfi was taking for another production in "The Birth of a Nation."

From this concern he went to the Universal and then to Fox, directing big pictures for both these concerns. Mr. Adolfi was with Fox for over three years and for a year was director for June Caprice. The last picture in which he directed June Caprice was "Patsy."

Mr. Adolfi will take his first World scenes in Washington.

Kleine-Edison Close Indianapolis Office

The Kleine-Edison Company has closed its Indianapolis office in the Lyric Theatre Building and is moving to Cincinnati. The office there, it is understood, will be made district headquarters.

Notable Cast Seen in "Masks and Faces"

IT probably never has been recorded in the history of the spoken drama, it is claimed, let alone that of the screen, where such a brilliant array of histrionic talent has been shown is presented in The Ideal film, "Masks and Faces," which will be released by the World Pictures Corporation on May 6.

If it were not for the fact that the entire stage, earnest in its desire to do something worthy of the profession in alleviating the distress growing out of the world's war, "Masks and Faces," with its marvellous cast, would not become the property of the patrons of the motion picture theatres, it is said.

George Bernard Shaw, Sir Arthur Pinero, Sir John Hare, representing a committee of the Academy of Dramatic Art of England, decided in the furtherance of this charity to present a play on the screen that offered an opportunity to employ the largest number of stars.

After several conferences it was decided that "Masks and Faces," a drama of Charles Reade and Tom Taylor, was an ideal play for the purpose of the movement. The novel, "Peg Woffington," written by Reade, was based upon the play.

The immortal role of Triplet was assigned to Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson; that of Peg Woffington to Irene Vanbrugh; Ernest Vane to Dennis Neilson Terry; Kitty Clive to Lillah McCarthy; Colly Gibber to Dion Boucicault; Mabel Vane to Gladys Cooper; Sir Charles Pomander to Ben Webster; Donald Calthrop and Gerald Du Maurier are cast for Lovell and Hunsdon, Pomander's servants; Mrs. Triplet played by Winifred Emery; Colander by H. B. Irving; Lyall Swete, who recently staged "Chu Chin Chow" in New York, played Soaper; Viola Tree, who was last seen in America in support of her father, Sir Beerbohm Tree; Stella Campbell, the daughter of Mrs. Pat Campbell; Gertrude Elliott, the wife of Forbes-Robertson and sister of Maxine Elliott, were cast as members of Rich's company; the three most famous child actors of England, Fabia Drake, Joan Buckmaster and George Rowson are seen as Triplet's children. Nigel Playfair portrays Rich's theatrical manager. Others in the cast are: Henry Vibart, J. Fisher White, Helen Haye, Mabel Russell, Weedon Grossmith, Gerald Ames, Mary Brough, Phyllis Hart, Lottie Venne and Renee Mayer.

Says Producers Save Money at U. City

HIGHLY gratified at the reception accorded Universal's invitation to producers to avail themselves of the picture making facilities of Universal City, Carl Laemmle has issued a statement in which he asserts that those manufacturers who have already moved into its West Coast studios are assured of a saving of at least fifty per cent in production overhead.

Mr. Laemmle bases his figures partly upon the present cost to the average producer of all materials that enter into the making of a picture; his organization's ability to get these materials at lower prices because of its quantity purchasing capacity; the extra overhead incurred by those producing units maintaining separate establishments, etc.

"I think a saving of fifty per cent on overhead a conservative estimate," declared Mr. Laemmle in outlining the possibilities for economical production at Universal City. "As a matter of fact, it is my belief that our organization may shortly be able to effect an even more substantial saving for producers now working in our studios.

"To the film producer, the time that is lost in actually completing a subject is one of the most harassing problems with which he has to contend. An inefficient property man may cost him hundreds of dollars. Carpenters and other studio attaches who are afflicted with a permanent case of spring fever also represent wastage. In fact, there are one hundred and one different sources through which his good money may leak.

"Then there is the item of 'extras.' There is always a mob of these people in or about Universal City. There is always a Universal feature in course of production in which their services are required. Now suppose we need them for half a day. Suppose one of the producers working on the lot also needs them for that length of time. Where we both would have been required to employ separate people, we could use the same crowd and divide the expense.

"One of the big advantages of Universal City," declared Mr. Laemmle, "is that we are a law unto ourselves. A separate community in fact, as well as in name, busybodies cannot interfere with us, as is now the cast in Hollywood. Therefore, by cirtue of its ready accessibility, its freedom from petty annoyances and its facilities for turning out pictures quickly and economically, Universal City is the ideal location for all producers who want a studio in which they can turn out their pictures in peace."

Exhibitor Boosts Serials

Ben L. Morris, secretary and treasurer of the Spragg Amusement Co., controlling a series of theatres in Ohio, in a letter to Pathe advises that they have always in the past been told that each and every serial published is "the greatest ever," but in "The House of Hate" all advance advertisements and claims have been lived up to.

Mr. Morris says that "The Fatal Ring" and "The Hidden Hand" made Tuesdays their best days, but "The House of Hate" has "gone over the top with a new record, and we could get along about as well without our light plant as without Pathe serials."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Exploitation Campaign for "Crucible of Life"

An exploitation campaign is now being prepared by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin in the interests of their special feature production, "The Crucible of Life," produced by Captain Harry Lambert with Jack Sherrill, Grace Darmond and Frank O'Connor in the leading roles. The story tells of the German spy system and contains a considerable amount of patriotic interest and vivid scenes of the war.

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin will issue a press sheet for "The Crucible of Life," embodying many of the ideas which they picked up during their recent tour of the state right field made for this special purpose. The press sheet will also contain a special musical score, written by William J. McKenna, author of the song hits, "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly" and "Manday Lane," etc. In this connection arrangements were made with the music firm of F. B. Haviland Company whereby a complete orchestration of "My Broken Rosary," the dominant theme of the score, will be supplied upon request to exhibitors. An elaborate line of lithographs, ranging from two styles of one sheets to a patriotic twenty-four sheet stand is being prepared for "The Crucible of Life" by the Greenwich Lithograph Company. Cuts suitable for magazine and newspaper use will be furnished together with slides, heralds and a complete line of accessories.

Physical Culture Screen Magazine

Bernarr MacFadden, Physical Culture Photoplays announce that the first edition Physical Culture Screen Magazine, produced under the direction of Sy Seidman, will be released soon, on the independent market. Mr. Seidman has taken hunting, fishing and camping scenes in the South which will be contained in the first release. Calisthenic exercises for women will be amply treated in later issues.

Among the Exchanges

Looking Atlanta Over

George C. Warner, of Columbia, S. C., who is one of the leading exhibitors of the South, and is president of the Carolina Exhibitors' Association, has been in Atlanta on a business trip. Mr. Warner was very enthusiastic as to the success of many plans advanced at the recent meeting of the Exhibitors' League held in Charlotte. However, he stated the purpose of the league will not be to fight the exchanges and producers, but to bring everyone closer together.

C. D. Cooley, general manager of the Strand Theatre Company of Tampa, Fla., has been a visitor in Atlanta. It seems, from his conversation, that the purpose of his trip up from the Everglades was to arrange for the entire output of Paramount and Artcraft stars and other special productions. Mr. Cooley is one of the pioneer exhibitors of the South, and one of the best informed. The majority of the exchanges report that it is a real pleasure to do business with him, as you don't have to go into long explanations in regard to the merits of each production. He scans MOTION PICTURE NEWS closely—which may be the reason.

Y. F. Freeman, general manager of Triangle, and better known to his friends as Young Frank, stopped off at Atlanta to shake hands with all the boys and with Mr. Bromberg, local manager of Triangle. Mr. Freeman contemplated a visit to his old home in Greensboro, Ga., before returning to New York.

T. F. McTyer has been appointed district manager for General Film Company. He will have under his supervision the entire Southern territory. "Mac" is one of the most popular motion picture men in the South. Before accepting his new position, he was connected with the Lucky Film Company, handling state rights productions.

Frank Dowler, Jr., general manager of the Signal Amusement Company at Chattanooga, appeared on the scene recently. Mr. Dowler handles all the bookings for the six Chattanooga houses and the Strand theatre in Knoxville. Mr. Dowler is known as one of the most wide awake exhibitors in the Southern territory, and never fails to grasp an opportunity when it presents itself.

C. E. Tandy, district manager of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, distributor of Paramount and Artcraft features for the eleven Southern states, has returned from a trip to New Orleans and Dallas, and states that exhibitors all along the route are reporting good business. He anticipates much prosperity for the coming year.

The trio of Bryan, Allison and Wilbanks has been split up, to the delight of all the exchanges, it is said. According to reports they were rated the same in the film game as Evers, Tinker and Chance were in the old Cub baseball team. Bryan secured the contracts, Allison stood on second in the form of the manager's desk, received and O. K.d the contracts without a fumble, relaying them to Wilbanks at the booker's desk, who completed the play without an error. George R. Allison is now manager of the Vitagraph company at Atlanta, with Byron S. Bryan as star salesman, while James B. Wilbanks has accepted a place with S. A. Lynch Enterprises. Wilbanks is manager of the serial and short subject department.

Harry Cohen, special representative of Metro, has finished his two weeks' work in Atlanta in connection with the taking over of the Metro distribution for the Southern states. He planned a trip to New Orleans, from where he returns to New York. The rights were formerly leased to Chattanooga capitalists, but have been bought over by Metro. Arthur S. Dickerson remains as manager.

Schnitzer on Trip

Joseph I. Schnitzer, secretary-treasurer and general manager of the Central Film Service Company, of Indianapolis, distributors of Jewell productions, returned to Indianapolis last week from a trip through the West.

Mutual Moves to New Quarters

New York Offices Now on Tenth Floor of Mecca Building—Sullivan Inaugurates Some Advanced Film Methods

THE New York Exchange of Mutual Film Corporation is now established in its new quarters on the tenth floor of the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway. The exchange occupies about two-thirds of the entire tenth floor, or approximately 6,500 square feet.

The plans for the new exchange were drawn up by G. B. Svenson, Mutual's construction engineer, who personally supervised the work, and the result is a model exchange in up-to-date equipment and layout. Mr. Svenson, who has made an exhaustive study of film exchange problems, has incorporated in the arrangement and structure of the exchange some novel ideas which make for convenience and safety.

M. J. Sullivan, the newly appointed New York manager, who assumed charge February 18, has inaugurated some advanced methods of film display and exploitations. The general arrangement of the offices is such that he can keep in close touch with all his employees and can give his personal attention to exhibitors.

As you enter the office you find a spacious reception room on the walls of which are hung oil paintings of Mutual stars. On one side of the room is the executive office, the manager's offices, the assistant manager's office, bookkeeping department and the billing department. On the other side of the room is the feature booker's office and a private sales office, and the cashier's office. The executive office is handsomely decorated. The walls are lined with quarter-sawed oak, wainscoting the height of the partitions and very handsomely furnished.

In the rear of the office are two doors, one leading directly to the film department and the other leading to the waiting room, used by the film messengers. The cashier's office has direct connection with the film messenger's waiting room, which is a convenient arrangement and saves a great deal of time to the messengers in making their payments or getting their bills.

The exhibition room is equipped with two machines, which guarantees uninterrupted screening of pictures, and has a seating capacity of twenty. It is easily accessible from the sales room.

General Film Salesman in War Work

John J. McDonald, an assistant of Sales Manager A. Schmidt in the home office of General Film Company in New York, has resigned to accept a position as a war secretary and physical director for overseas service in the Y. M. C. A. He will leave at an early date for France to take charge of the recreation work at one of the Y. M. C. A. huts back of the American trenches or in one of the foreign training camps. Mr. McDonald will have the rank of civilian captain, and is well qualified to act as coach and instructor in boxing, football, baseball, wrestling and other army sports. Mr. McDonald is a graduate from the efficiency department of the American Druggists' Syndicate. He was also physical instructor at Capt. O'Brien's police civil service school.

Philadelphia Fox Office Celebrates

The Philadelphia office of the Fox Film Exchange is celebrating as a result of carrying off the honors of first prize in competition with all other exchanges throughout the country.

The Quaker City exchange has succeeded in getting the most contracts signed of any other Fox exchange, and the reward is said to be large. George Dembow, manager of the office, has already annexed a new touring car. Those benefiting, besides Mr. Dembow, are George Bernstein, George Lees, Harry Dembow, W. H. Smith, E. W. Booth, Joseph Shaeffer and Leon Behal.

Chicago Mutual Manager Badly Hurt

E. H. Duffy, manager of the Chicago branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, was severely injured in an automobile collision at Lawrence and Western Avenues, Chicago, Saturday night, March 16.

The taxicab in which Mr. Duffy was riding was smashed into by another taxicab and badly damaged. He was taken to Ravenswood Hospital, where it was found that he was suffering from a broken collarbone and painfully lacerated hip.

Lucas Entertains Atlanta Film Managers

A regular house warming and kidding bee was given by Harry K. Lucas at the opening of the Lucas Theatorium. A number of pre-released comedies were shown and well received by the audience and the absence of criticism was noticeable, as the hatchet was buried for the night only.

Vitagraph News Bits

Several changes were made necessary at the Vitagraph plant because of the resignation of William Walbert, who has been directing Nell Shipman in a series of five-reel subjects. David Smith has been selected to take this company, and he has already begun the filming of a new story titled "Baree," the title being taken from the name of a malamute that plays a very important part in the subject. Al. Whitman is to continue as leading man for Miss Shipman. The company has departed for Truckee where the Canadian Northwest scenes will be filmed in the snow country.

William Duncan, star and director of a coming Vitagraph serial, has left for a stay of two weeks in Bear Valley where exteriors for the third episode of the serial at present known as "The Will and The Way" will be filmed. Edith Johnson, who will be remembered for her work in Selig and Universal subjects, is to be the leading woman for Mr. Duncan. His selection of Bear Lake Valley for exteriors, indicates a part of the serial is laid in the mountain country in winter. In addition to Director Duncan who plays the principal role in the serial and his leading woman, Joe Ryan has been selected for the heavy, and Leo Maloney, remembered because of his work in Helen Holmes serials, will play the second heavy. In the first episode, Mary Alden plays an important part.

George Sargeant, recently added to the Vitagraph directorial staff, is filming "Clients of Erin Green," which will be one of the Wolfville series adapted from the Alfred Henry Lewis stories. A number of special settings have been made at the studio for this subject, and the true Arizona atmosphere has been carried out even to the transplanting of alkali dust on the Western street set, regardless of the rain fall which swept away this atmosphere creating prop on several occasions when it was transplanted there.

Universal Newsettes

The scenario department at Universal City has been completely reorganized, and several former writers are back in their old positions. At the present, no head has been selected for the department, and this work will be taken care of by General Manager Henry McRae and Sistrom. The former policy of having a writer for each company and star is being adhered to. Harvey Gates is writing for Joseph deGrasse; Eugene B. Lewis for Harry Carey and Director Jack Ford; F. McGrew Willis for Franklyn Farnum being directed by Douglas Gerrard, and Ida May Park, Allen Holubar and Robert Leonard are all writing their own stories, at least for the present. Other members of the scenario department are Hope Loring and Bess Haas, who are in the continuity department. Both were formerly with the Triangle.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have been advised by the New York office of the Universal, that the first comedy of their new series will be released early in April, and known as Lyons-Moran Star Comedies. The first release will be "A Pigskin Hero," in which the "Montgomery and Stone" of the screen will be seen in a decidedly athletic number. Lyons and Moran now have twelve comedies ahead, and in all of these Edith Roberts appears as their leading woman. Captain Leslie Peacocke is continuing as the company's scenario writer.

General Manager Henry McRae, was this week visited by his brother, F. J. McRae, who will leave for France early in April as a member of the Royal Flying Corps. He was formerly manager of the British North American Bank at MacLean, Canada, and gave up this position for aviation.

With Pathe Players

W. A. S. Douglas of the Diando Company, left Los Angeles on a trip to New York to take up matters pertaining to the Pathe serial "The Wolf-Faced Man," which has been put in production. Mr. Douglas will be absent from the studio but a few days.

The tentative title of the Baby Marie Osborne next Pathe play, is "The Soul of a Child," and practically all of the cast have been selected. The list who will work under the direction of Director William Bertram includes J. Morris Foster, William Quinn, Jack Connelly, Ruth King, Virginia Eames, Georgia Woodthorpe and others.

Paralta Paragraphs

Production plans made by the owners of the Paralta Company during their conference here, provides that the Paralta Studios shall be one of the busiest producing places of the West Coast colony, and that within the next two or three weeks. While no official policy has been announced from the West Coast studios, it is learned from an authentic source that nine companies will be working at the Paralta plant within the next few days. Four of these units will be engaged in the filming of Paralta Plays to be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation distributing organization. Four other companies will be busy with the making of Pathe Plays, the stars of these companies including Bryant Washburn, Bessie Love, and Frank Keenan, who are at present working at this producing plant. The other company will be that of the Mastercraft which will film photoplays adapted from the stories of Thomas Dixon, Jr.

The new Paralta studio is now in readiness for production at the maximum capacity with all equipment completed and all necessary properties, scenery and work shops being ready for work.

New subjects will be put in production within the next few days that will star Henry Walthall and Louise Glaum. Monte M. Katterjohn has written another Alaskan story which will be directed by Bertram Bracken with Walthall as the star, but no definite announcement has been made regarding the next Louise Glaum picture.

The F.P.-Lasky Studio

Director General Cecil B. De Mille has begun the active production of his next Artcraft Special which is an adaptation from the David Graham Phillips novel of New York life, "Old Wives for New." The same treatment is being given this subject as has been accorded others of the Artcraft Special variety made at this studio, and particular care is being given to detail work in costuming and construction of the sets. Elliot Dexter, Florence Vidor, Theodore Roberts, Helen Eddie and Tully Marshall are principals of the cast.

Sessue Hayakawa has completed work in the photoplay, "The White Man's Law," written by John Brown, and scenario prepared by Marion Fairfax. This has a South American atmosphere with Hayakawa appearing in the role of a young Arabian graduate of Oxford College who spends some time among the ivory hunters. James Young was the director of this picture, and Florence Vidor the leading woman. The Japanese actor is next to be under the direction of George Melford, and this it is understood, will be his last subject made at the Lasky Studio prior to the expiration of his present contract, following which he will begin work in productions for the newly organized Haworth Photoplays, Inc.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton is now at work an another contribution for the Paramount Program, titled "Missing," which is an adaptation from the Mrs. Humphry Ward story showing the woman's work in the war of the present day, which has recently been issued in book form. Sylvia Bremer, the Thomas H. Ince leading woman, and Thomas Meighan are to be the principals of this film.

Here and There

Production at the American plant at Santa Barbara now consists of three companies, the William Russell Productions, Inc., being the most recent unit to take up production work here. The first subject for this unit is at present known as "Adrian Gasconne," being an adaptation by William Parker from the William Hamilton Osborne story of the same title.

Mary Miles Minter is now working under the direction of Edward Sloman in a subject at present known as "The Church Window Angel." The third company is that directed by Lloyd Ingraham and featuring Margarita Fischer.

George D. Baker has arrived in Los Angeles, and has taken up his new duties as Director General at the Metro coast studio in Hollywood, where the first subject made under his direction will be that starring Edith Storey. Miss Storey is now working under the direction of Frank Reicher who is filming "Treasure," and following the completion of this, the Baker subject will be started. Miss Storey formerly worked under this director when she was with the Vitagraph Company.

With the arrival of Mr. Baker, General Western Representative Joseph Engle, put into effect the new policy for this company which provides that the four heads of the different departments shall work in cooperation in the hope of adding efficiency.

Live Triangle Items

Production activities at the Triangle studios at Culver City, give evidence of preparations for the release of a number of subjects through other channels than the regular Triangle program. The first of these pictures will no doubt be "The Servant in the House," which has now been completely filmed and edited and consists of approximately eight reels. A number of other photoplays of like size are now in production, but no announcement has been made respecting the titles, casts or nature of these stories.

Last week a photoplay titled "Judith," was put in production under the direction of Gilbert P. Hamilton, and will have Alma Rubens as star supported by Pauline Starke, Peggy Pearce, Lillian Langdon, Anna Dodge, Lee Hill and a number of others. The early part of this story has a fishing village atmosphere, and later carries the leading woman to New York City where the fisher maiden begins a career as the rage of the large city. In this life she takes everything and gives nothing, but in the end a romance makes a pleasing finish. The play will abound with luxuriant apartments and a display of wonderful gowns.

Jack Conway, who recently completed the filming of "A Servant in the House," is now at work on "Her Sister," which has Gloria Swanson in the featured role. This is the story of a girl's sacrifice to save her sister.

Raymond Wells is filming a comedy drama titled "Mlle. Paulette," featuring Clarke Anderson, supported by George Hernandez, George Pearce and Dot Hagar. Many of the scenes for this are laid in a mountain camp a short distance from New York.

FAMOUS SAYINGS OF FAMOUS MEN

"We can make the payroll this week all right."—E. H. Allen, business manager of the Hart Studio.

"I'm good, I know I'm good, I've seen myself on the screen." —Frank Keenan.

"If I have to leave now (referring to the draft), it will ruin my career."—Benjamin Ziedman.

"Yes, I'm just a little old-fashioned, wear suspenders and everything, but an honest boy trying to get along."—Ed. Durling.

"They sure like me out here!"—Wid. Gunning to exchangeman at San Francisco.

"Have a cigar boys?"—William S. Hart.

Yes, a little rain.

And now Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle has become the godfather of one hundred soldiers.

Peggy Pearce has forsaken the brighter side of life, or comedy, for the serious drama.

Charlie Murray only has three engagements as master of ceremonies during the coming week.

Now that sunshine has returned to our land, Charles Clary is as chipper as a blue bird in May.

After seeing Harry Harvey direct scenes for a serial, one is prone to remark, "and they really live through it."

Max Asher is such a funny fellow that one is tempted to think he might laugh at himself, but then, Max is serious in his art.

Sherwood Macdonald is one of the few directors who continues to wear boiled linen. He can be seen most any day with a white collar on.

Wally MacDonald not being able to enlist in aviation, has asked the scenario department to give him a subject in which he can go up in the air.

Tom Gibson is comedy writing for the National at Denver, but busy as he is he finds time to lo-ong for the wonderful sunshine of his native state.

Raymond West is seriously thinking of having his yacht brought in from the harbor that he may daily cruise on the young lake in the rear of the Paralta studios.

Mack Swain has become old fashioned now that he is spending a few weeks on his farm, and is reported to be wearing boots like every Yankee farmer of the melodrama stage.

Al Christie has been named the meanest man in pictures. On the coldest day of this California winter, he photographed his new leading woman, Elinor Fields, when she was clad only in a bathing suit.

Jack Conway must have music in the making of all scenes. The other day the orchestra was playing "Onward Christian Soldiers," and Jack demanded more "pep," and next listened to the wail of "They Go Wild Over Me."

Our town is honored this week by a visit of Norma Talmadge, who was accompanied to the west by friend husband, Joe Schenck, who does a lot of presenting with respect to Select Pictures and Paramount Arbuckle Comedies.

Ham Beall, who is beating the Pub. mill at Universal City, comes out with the old story in a new dress. It's all about Mary MacLaren being brave enough to refuse anyone to double for her in the making of an automobile wreck scene.

Dal Clawson was induced to dress up like a human being and attend the premier of Dave Griffith's picture during the week last past. Dal opines that the picture was well received, but is adverse to admitting that he got any new ideas.

William Duncan is flitting about in a new Chalmers that has every indication of speed. He admits he only steps the car up to ninety-five, but adds that he has not found a smooth or long enough stretch of road to beat it any faster than that.

Councilman Walter Edwards, director of motion pictures in his spare moments, is now busily engaged in doing his spring planting, and will, we venture, cut some figure in the Hoover agricultural contest. Walt sure knows how to raise spuds.

Ben Wilson, who is now serialing, has decided to take time off the set for lunch each day. He became so interested in work that he forgot it for three days and is now burdened with an Ingersoll alarm clock, which does the notifying accurately.

Eddie Cline is threatened with divorce proceedings if he does not cease creating comedy ideas in his dreams, but to all threats he asks "what could be fairer than for a wife to jot down the ideas, when one in slumberland thinks of them." Eddie is an apostle of Hoover.

Director Gillstrom created a situation for a Billy West comedy that caused everyone of the company to laugh so much that the lunch hour was extended to two hours, all of which is going some for a director continually amongst a bunch of hard boiled comedians, calloused as they are to laughable situations.

Bill Desmond is shortly to be seen in a wonderful new wardrobe. Mail order shipment having been received this week by the Irish actor that he could have a new suit for St. Patrick's Day. When ordering he told Mr. Woolworth to be sure and have it here by the seventeenth, and the great department store magnate acquiesced.

Now that "Carmen of the Klondike," that Alaskan picture, is to be shown in Southern California, Reg. Barker is being avalanched with requests for personal appearance, but he being one of the boys of the old school, who believe the stage producer's place is back of the wings, has not as yet accepted invitations to step where the calcium glows and tell them how he did it.

Nell Shipman has deserted our climate of sunshine and flowers for a week or two among the pines and snow drifts in the winter zone about Truckee, and we can only hope she will not encounter so hazardous a journey as when she last went to the wintry mountain tops for scenes for "God's Country — And the Woman." At least we hope this present trip will be more pleasant than the other one was painted by the P. A. If memory serves us well, the entire company on this former occasion dieted on soup and beans.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

[Realizing that the voluminous press agent material filling an exhibitor's mail often fails to provide the breezy little items so badly needed for program fillers and your newspaper photoplay editors, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has created this department. It will be conducted by Miss Dorothy Tarbell, and the gossipy personalities presented here will be gathered at first hand in the studios and from the players themselves. Not only the stars but the lesser known players whose good work has often gained them popularity in different localities, will be treated in human, intimate fashion in this department.

In connection with this "clop-sheet" service for programs and newspapers, this department also offers all the facilities of the Motion Picture Studio Directory to exhibitors and players in forwarding mail, locating players, furnishing information regarding pictures in which different players have appeared, and so on.]

Nellie Anderson has again proved herself a queen of character women. In the new Empey picture "Over the Top" she plays the part of an old retainer, the only one left after the invasion of the Huns, who is allowed the freedom of the chateau because of her supposed imbecility. Mrs. Anderson, without any make-up at all, creates the impression of a bent, wrinkled, white-haired, old hag, while in reality she hasn't a white hair in her head or a deep wrinkle on her face.

It would seem that in the Spring a movie star's fancy turns to thought of the stage, judging by Olive Tell, soon to appear in "The Fountain of Youth," Myrtle Stedman in "Follow the Girl," Lucile Satterlee in "Yours Truly," Lois Meredith in an as yet unnamed comedy, and dozens of others.

If Nora Bayes can analyze "getting across" in the picture game as she has in the vaudeville game, success will be hers. If you want her own analysis of it, read her article in the April American Magazine.

Jimmy Morrison is expecting his call to U. S. service any moment. He should be fully qualified as most of his recent work has been in war pictures. The most notable in Empey's "Over the Top."

Though "The Floor Below" is disappointing as a story, it must be admitted that Mabel Normand puts it across. She is one of the most thoroughly alive, one of the most glowing screen personalities. In her the vital spark seems perfectly adjusted.

Alice Joyce's mother and small daughter are spending some time at Gedney Farms, one of the most fashionable resorts near New York. There Miss Joyce can easily visit them in her fleeting moments between pictures.

An Intimate Glimpse of "Actual Work" at the Vitagraph Studio. William P. S. Earle Is Directing Gladys Leslie and Edward Earle In "Ann Acushla," a New Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature

Another director, Albert Parker, of Pathe-Astra, tells us that "the play is the thing." Unless an original story is of tremendous appeal he believes implicitly in the use of books and plays whose value has been proved by time. Mr. Parker played with Douglas Fairbanks in "In Again, Out Again," and "The American" under the direction of Allan Dwan, to whom he gives credit for his own methods of directing.

Joseph Rock, of Montgomery and Rock, Big V Comedies, is coming through in great shape in a fan magazine popularity contest. Under "Leading Kings" he stands third, with Bushman first and Bill Hart second.

"To my dearest Situation Creator, Marie Shotwell," was Ivan Abramson's inscription on a photograph of himself which he recently presented to Miss Shotwell. We would almost stake a bet on one person who will appear in Mr. Abramson's next cast. We hope so, for she has already deserted the screen too long.

An apparition at the top of a flight of stairs at the Pathe studio gave us a start. It was Pearl White, we knew, but such a Pearl White. Her checkerboard suit, astonishingly cut, her white satin vest with huge pearl buttons, her pompomed tam pushed down over one eye, her black and white striped shoes made us gasp. "How do you like?" called down Miss White, and proceeded to tell us how she knew the costume was perfect. One of the prop men was admittedly very rough. He had never remarked upon Miss White's costumes, but to-day he sauntered over to her, hands in pockets, cap on one side, cigarette removed for the occasion and ejaculated, "Gee, Miss White, you look simply grand."

Mr. Shonts has another rival. This time it is George Loane Tucker, who has had the walls of the Goldwyn studio decorated with signs for the edification of the general public. A particularly pertinent one is "Speak softer, people will listen harder."

Florence Deshon, heroine of "The Desired Woman" and "A Bachelor's Children," confesses that she is superstitious about the color green. She scribes to it her first stage engagement. She had been summoned to a manager's office on the strength of a photograph. She wore a green suit. The manager said, "Somehow I knew you would wear a green suit," and engaged her on the spot. Later when her first contract for a big picture was signed she wore a green gown for luck. The picture was a great success. This led her to cultivate an interest in jade, loveliest of green stones. She is now not only a connoisseur but has a large collection, a piece of which she has stitched in every gown for luck. Her aim is to possess a necklace of perfect jade, which is far costlier than a necklace of pearls.

The costumes which Anna Luther wears in "Moral Suicide" are such delightful forecasts of new Spring fashions that we can easily understand why she was called "The Fifth Avenue Girl" when she was in Philadelphia several years ago.

FOR YOUR PROGRAM AND NEWSPAPERS

Ed. F. Roseman, the well-known "heavy," speaks with authority on the subject of screen fights. As Red Ike in "Rough and Ready," as Lew Barabeau in "The Sign Invisible," and as Butch in "The Blue Streak" he has had experience. The best fights, he says are always fakes. Real blows don't always register and real blood isn't as effective as fake blood. Moreover, the psychological effect of a fight in a room where furniture is upturned, articles knocked down, things smashed in general, is always much greater than one out in the open with only the blue sky overhead.

Walter Hiers, the joyous Bobo of "Our Little Wife," is leading a strenuous life these days between the Frank Keeney studio at 134th Street, and the Pathe studio in Jersey City. At the former he is a young millionaire in "Marriage," whose changes of clothes challenge in number the hours of the day. At the latter he is a poor boarder in "Waifs," smitten with the charms of an heiress.

Guy Bolton's first scenario is being filmed by F. Keeney Corporation. Its title is "Marriage." Its star is Catherine Calvert. Mr. Bolton at the present time is drawing royalties from sixteen productions on the legitimate stage.

We are glad to hear that Harry Franklin has been made a director in the Metro Company. We congratulate him on having for his first star, May Allison.

For the second time David Powell is simulating a man struck with blindness. The first time he was opposite Olive Tell in "The Unforeseen." This time he is opposite Catherine Calvert in "Marriage." He had a taste of the legitimate stage this last week when he appeared at the benefit at the Metropolitan with Grace George in a scene from "A School for Scandal." He told us it made him fell so much younger that he believed regularly alternating the stage and the screen would keep one in perfect form.

HOW'S THIS?

GO through the STUDIO DIRECTORY, pick out all the screen people, directors and scenario writers as well as players, who who were born or brought up in your section of the country. Get together short sketches of each. Run them as an article when you are showing a picture in which one of them appears.

Your newspaper will be glad to use it editorially.

We know, as The Messenger of Owensboro, Ky., has already done it with great success under the heading "Kentucky Well Represented in Silent Drama."

If we can help you put it together in any way let us know.

Director James Kirkwood has remedied three salient defects in the general run of pictures in his last two, "The Romance of the Underworld" and "Married." His sets, simple but perfectly done, contain no florid wallpaper vieing with too ornate furniture. His titles are as fell as possible and give the audience credit for intelligence. Their illustration is secondary to their legibility. His unraveling of the plot is logical but not obvious. He does not exhibit his wares all at once, but leads up to a real denouement, not forced but not expected.

Gladys Hulette has some of the troubles in real life of the runaway heiress whom she portrays in "Waifs." The coat which she borrows in the picture to conceal her identity is one borrowed by Miss Hulette (through a bell-boy) from a scrubwoman in her hotel. The blouse worn throughout the picture gets so soiled from climbing in and out of windows that Miss Hulette has to launder it herself since she can find no one to do it on such short notice.

Blanche Davenport, who was the mother in "The Belgian," plays the part of the landlady in whose boarding house the exciting adventures of the runaway heiress take place.

Creighton Hale has been sick for the last few lays, enough so to make it necessary for Albert Parker to tone down a fight which ends the picture "Waifs" and which by the way ends Creighton Hale's career with Pathe, his contract having expired.

Elsie Ferguson is resting at White Sulphur Springs and enjoying the transition from Maine, where the last few scenes in "The Doll's House" were taken.

Julius Steger is to be complimented upon persuading Anna Case to appear in a series of feature productions. Her appeal will be almost universal as through her work at the Metropolitan, her work on the concert stage, and her records she has reached nearly every class of people.

"The Kaiser" will attract every nationality to your theatre when they realize that at the fall of Berlin there appear one after another, in the imperial palace, the famous generals of each of the Allied armies. The strains of the national anthem should of course accompany each general.

Vitagraph to Film Wallace Irwin Story

ACCORDING to an announcement by President Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph has purchased "A Gentleman's Agreement," by Wallace Irwin, author and creator of "The letters of a Japanese Schoolboy," by "Hashimura Togo." The story probably will be produced under the direction of William Wolbert, with Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman as the stars.

Three productions are planned in the early future for Earle Williams, who is working in the West with Grace Darmond as his leading woman and Tom Mills as his director. The first of these, which probably will be started as soon as he completes "The Seal of Silence," is "The Girl in His House," by Harold MacGrath, which ran serially in the Ladies' Home Journal and soon is to appear in book form. The other plays which Mr. Williams is likely to produce before he returns to the East are "By the World Forgot," from the book by Cyrus Townsend Brady, and "Out of the Dark," which was written by Roma Raymond and Jane Dixon.

Alice Joyce, now at work on "The Strength of the Weak," will soon start on "Find the Woman," the well-known "Cherchez la Femme," of O. Henry. "To the Highest Bidder," by Florence Morse Kingsley, has also been prepared for Miss Joyce.

Harry Morey, with Florence Deshon as his leading woman, is at work under the direction of Paul Scardon on a story entitled "The Golden Goal," and will shortly start work on a new play by Cyrus Townsend Brady.

Gladys Leslie and Edward Earle, with William P. S. Earle as director, are nearing completion of "Ann Acushla," an Irish drama, and will shortly start production of "The Soap Girl," by Lewis Allen Browne.

Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman, under William Wolbert's direction, are in the midst of "Baree, the Son of Kazan," from James Oliver Curwood's novel. The Wallace Irwin play is planned for their next, and the ymay follow that with "The Cambric Mask," by Robert W. Chambers.

" A Pair of Sixes "

(Essanay-Perfection—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Lisle M. Albright

IF people actually hurt themselves laughing at this picture it will be no wonder, for in it Taylor Holmes does the best work of his screen career. There isn't a dull moment in the whole production. It moves with snap right from the beginning and never gives you a chance to stop laughing and catch a full breath until the last reel has relinquished at the last foot.

" A Pair of Sixes " just goes to show how irresistible good acting, good direction and a ripping good story become when found in the same production. Mr. Holmes never had a vehicle that afforded him such a splendid opportunity as does this adaptation of the roar-a-minute stage play by Edward Peple.

The incompatibility of two business partners, and their decision to abide by the verdict of a hand of poker as to who shall run the business for a year and who shall be the other's valet is material that works up equally as well on the screen as it did on the legitimate stage. Nothing could be funnier than the scenes in the Nettleton home, whither Holmes goes after making the bad draw in the poker game. He is chased all over the house by the unbeautiful maid servant, " Coddles," who falls madly in love with him as, in the guise of a butler, he proceeds to lay out his partner's clothes, shine his shoes, and play the part of a servant.

An admirable cast supports the star in this latest George K. Spoor feature. Maude Eburne, who played the original " Coddles " on the stage, was secured to go through her mirth-making characterization for the screen and she is one of the big hits of the play. Robert Conness, as George Nettleton, one of the partners, makes a splendid foil for T. Boggs and Alice Mann, the pretty and dainty little artiste who used to play with " Fatty " Arbuckle, is seen in this picture as Taylor Holmes' leading lady. Edna Phillips Holmes distinguishes herself still further as a screen star of pleasing personality and unusual ability.

Lawrence C. Windom directed " A Pair of Sixes," and if the exhibitor will advertise it as one of the best comedies of the year he will be doing no more than stating the bare truth.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

T. Boggs Johns (Taylor Holmes) and George Nettleton (Robert Conness), proprietors of the Digestive Pill Manufacturing Company, become so quarrelsome that they finally agree to a unique method of settling their disputes. They decide the loser in a hand of poker shall become the servant of the other for one year during which time the winner is to run the business by himself. A fine of $5,000 is agreed upon as the payment that must be made if either reveals the circumstances of the pact. T. Boggs loses the hand, and becomes the valet. " Coddles " (Maude Eburne), the house maid embarrasses him by following him about and offering her love.

During his stay in the Nettleton household, Florence Cole (Alice Mann), Bogg's swetheart, pays a visit and finds her lover doing the work of a domestic. She tries to find out about it and is all ready to leave before she finally discovers the reason why he is there. Meanwhile, Nettleton grows jealous of his wife who is left at home with T. Boggs while he goes off to run the business. He begins to think that after all he got the worst of the deal and after a number of amusing complications the story ends happily for all.

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE name Ivan has in the past been associated altogether with pictures presenting a problem, usually a sex problem, but " Life or Honor?" the latest of this brand, deals with a murder, the mystery surrounding it and the solution come to by a detective. " Life or Honor?" would usually be described as " corking." And if this means well maintained dramatic suspense and mystery that keeps one forever on the alert for a clue, then it fittingly recommends the picture. The author has not chosen to hide the identity of the murderer but has sought a much better way in creating the mystery. This is suggested in the play's title. A witness to the killing is able to exonerate the wrongly convicted man at the expense of the woman's honor. But this fact is not revealed until the latter half of the story and until it is, the mystery is exceedingly well maintained. Subsequently the manner in which the detective forces a confession from the real murderer by playing upon his guilty conscience with a number of tricks of fake hypnotism again raises the interest because of the skill with which it has been staged. The murderer's long confession is perhaps the only faulty place in the entire picture. All his story has been anticipated and its enactment in detail is superfluous. But this is easily to be remedied. The greater part of " Life or Honor?" is all its sponsors claim it to be.

Edmund Lawrence's staging of the picture is highly commendable. He has introduced the many characters and different threads of action clearly, and at the same time has never neglected the fact that he deals with a mystery story. There is a full supply of comedy relief, nicely balancing the many sensations which the picture offers. The camera work is generally acceptable and there are some effective lightings. The double exposure stuff, however, does not attain the excellence which most cameramen have reached in this type of work. There is a shadow spreading itself on either side of the joint.

The work of the cast is meritorious. James Morrison in the dual role of Manly and Aguinaldo plays with a good sense of the values of both characters. Violet Palmer is a lively and pleasing ingenue. Leah Baird suffices as the harassed Helen West, and Harry Burckhardt as her drunken husband is quite convincing and terrible. Edward Mackay gives a telling performance as Holmes, and Ben Hendricks as the detective gives a fine characterization often touched with humor. Joseph Burke, Mathilda Brundage and Florenz Sottong complete the cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

J. T. Manly (Joseph Burke), retired merchant who has spent several years of his life in the Philippines, is murdered. His son Jimmy (James Morrison) is arrested. Testimony offered by Aguinaldo (James Morrison), Filipino servant of Manly's, convicts Jimmy of the murder. In the house next door live the Wests. Helen (Leah Baird), sister of Peggy Harmon (Violet Palmer), whom Jimmy loves, is married to an inebriate, Robert (Harry Burckhardt). His friend, Holmes (Edward Mackay) who loves Helen, has seen the murder but even with Jimmy's conviction refuses to come forward with any information. Peggy eventually goes to Martin Cross (Ben Hendricks), a retired detective and a woman hater, begging him to take the case. She persuades Holmes to visit him to relate the facts. Holmes exacting Martin's oath of secrecy tells his story. The night of the murder he had remained at the West home because Robert was seriously affected by drink. He had watched over him until he fell asleep. But on waking had discovered that his charge had escaped. Helen, walking in her sleep because of nervousness, had stumbled and fallen. Holmes carried her to her room and there from her window saw the murder. But as this was the only window in the West home where a view of the disaster was possible he kept silent in order to save Helen's good name. Cross then proceeds to hunt up Aguinaldo and employing a fake hypnotist so plays on his conscience with light effects, mysterious faces and skeletons that he confesses his crime. It develops that Aguinaldo was also Manly's son, by a Filipino woman he had betrayed. This releases Jimmy and Robert's death leaves nothing between Helen and Holmes.

" The Hillcrest Mystery "

(Pathe Play—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE HILLCREST MYSTERY" may be catalogued with Irene Castle's previous features done under the Pathe banner in that it presents rapid-fire mystery formulated on the skeleton-plot over which is usually dressed a serial, but smoothing off rough edges to make it logical and convincing. In fact, this number in its essentials bears a marked resemblance to Pathe's own " House of Hate." It commences with the mysterious murder of a wealthy ship-builder who has turned his plant over to the United States. The due amount of suspicion is thrown upon several characters, the hero is suspected, and it is suggested that the detective and his assistants are crooks, but the real heavy remains a neutral party until the climax, when the fact that he is a German spy is revealed.

Ouida Bergere has piloted her melodrama through any number of sensational crises and mysterious turns. Happily she is such a skilled writer that the action is always sustainingly mysterious and never wearily mystifying. The dividing line between the one and the other is not great and a single false step has often produced fatal consequences. However, Miss Bergere proceeds with a series of highly exciting and mysterious incidents, the logicality of which becomes fully apparent when the climax discloses all. In the meantime one is fully absorbed by the rapid action which gives no hint at the author's final card. It is a mystery story of the most fascinating type.

Mrs. Castle plays with an increased show of feeling as Marion Sterling, daughter of the ship-builder. Ralph Kellard as hero, Wyndham Standing as heavy and J. H. Gilmour as the father give fine performances. So does the man who plays Moffat, the detective, although his name is not mentioned in the cast. The worth of the production may be guaranteed by the mere mention of the director's name—George Fitzmaurice.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Sterling (J. H. Gilmour), wealthy ship-builder, is murdered in his home on the night that he has refused the request of Brett (Ralph Kellard) to marry his daughter, Marion (Irene Castle). A detective summoned to investigate the crime is forcibly removed from his automobile by masked men and Moffat arrives on the scene in his place. He immediately accuses Brett of the deed as all circumstantial evidence points to him. Brett, however, escapes with Marion's assistance and hides in the attic. Hugo Smith (Wyndham Standing), Sterling's partner, is also in love with Marion. At the reading of the will, the lawyer is mysteriously shot. Brett is finally discovered in the attic. The climax comes when Moffat, in reality a member of the secret service, carelessly lets fall a remark concerning the sailing of a troop ship. That night Smith and his aide, the butler who committed the murder, are found in the attic sending a wireless message to a German submarine. They are arrested as German spies. If Smith had been left in power (as the false will he substituted after the lawyer's death directed) all the ships built at the Sterling plant would have been unseaworthy. This is explained by the secret service agent. Brett is liberated.

"The Whispering Chorus"

(Artcraft—Seven Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

WHEN Cecil B. De Mille chose Perley Poore Sheehan's "The Whispering Chorus" for his first special Artcraft release, he was no doubt impressed with the powerful and unusually developed drama it presented and the opportunities it offered for the full play of his directorial genius. His scenario writer, Jeanie Macpherson, utilized all the material presented and with some changes to meet the demands of the camera turned out a scenario that Mr. De Mille has transformed into a picture, the strength of which cannot be easily rated. While to a certain extent the theme is gruesome and treated in kind when necessary, it is tremendous in its force. The decay of Trimble's character, resulting directly from dissatisfaction with his position in the social scale, is told vividly. His wife's remarriage on believing him dead, his return and his final great sacrifice that she may retain her happiness are episodes pictured with sympathetic and sustaining stress.

The picture derives its title from the various forces—good and evil—which determine the actions of Trimble. The Whispering Chorus is each though personified—Mockery, Evil and Good. Trimble heeds the first two until he has tasted deep of the dregs of life learning that it is only the last which can bring happiness and peace of mind. De Mille has introduced these forces by dim faces which appear before Trimble in the various crises of his life. The effect is forceful to say the least. It may be gathered that the part of Trimble is the big one in the story and it has been entrusted to capable hands. Raymond Hatton, reliable in any role, makes Trimble a pitifully weak man. His picture of him as a derelict or as the scenario writers are fond of saying, "a bit of human driftwood" is terrible in its realism. His performance throughout is realistic—faithful in its delineation of human frailty and degeneracy and final recompense.

The production is characteristic of De Mille. His scenes are effective—his little touches tell wonders. There is a bit when Trimble pays his debt in the electric chair. He carries a rose in his hand given him by his wife and when the switch is pulled that sends him to eternity, all one sees is the petals of the rose dropping to the floor. This bit would perhaps serve its purpose without the gruesome flashes of the death chair and the wicked switch which may be found revolting by some. All through the production, in the bigger scenes as well as in the intimate ones De Mille has demonstrated his art of developing dramatic climaxes effectively. Alvin Wyckoff, chief Lasky cameraman has worked in some excellent color effects.

Kathlyn Williams as Jane Trimble and Elliott Dexter as her second husband give fine performances in the roles of next importance to Mr. Hatton's. The support, which includes some of the best known members of the Lasky stock company is deserving from first to last.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Because John Trimble (Raymond Hatton), a salaried employee of a big corporation, heeds the voice of Evil he alters the books and successfully steals from the firm until he learns that the corporation is to be investigated for graft. He takes refuge on an island in the river leaving no word of his whereabouts to his wife, Jane (Kathlyn Williams) or his mother (Edythe Chapman). Ever fearful of discovery he snatches at the first chance of escape which presents itself when the body of a dead man floats to shore. He changes identities with the body and leaves a note saying that he was killed by a certain Edgar Smith for intending to tell secrets regarding the corrupt nature of his firm. The body is found and Trimble is reported dead. His mother refuses to believe this and ever entertains hopes of his return. Several years later finds Jane the wife of George Coggeswell (Elliott Dexter), once investigator of the corporation and now governor. Trimble is traced as the "Edgar Smith" of his own note but eludes capture. But as time wears on he is unable to keep away from his mother. One day he returns to her, crippled, scarred and ravaged by drugs but she welcomes him. The shock of his return proves fatal, however, and her death leaves him with no one to identify him. He is arrested, tried and convicted as "Edgar Smith" as the murderer of John Trimble. When the jury pronounces verdict he bursts out with the truth about himself but no one believes him—except Jane who visits him in his cell and learns his identity. She offers him freedom if he will but swear that he was not guilty of murdering the man whose body he found in the river. Though John realizes that by telling this truth he will escape death he at last listens to the voice of Good and keeps his silence, going to the chair that the happiness of Jane and her second husband may not be destroyed.

John Burton, Parkes Jones, Tully Marshall, Guy Oliver, W. H. Brown, James Neill, Noah Beery, Gustav Seyffertitz, Walter Lynch and Edna Mae Cooper complete the cast.

"La Tosca"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

WE have had screen versions of Victorien Sardou's "La Tosca" before but never under its proper name and never, it may safely be said, of such dramatic strength as this Paramount in which Pauline Frederick stars. Miss Frederick gives a brilliant performance, particularly in the two big scenes of the production which require skilled emotional handling. In the first of these when Mario, La Tosca's lover, is undergoing torture in an adjoining room because of his silence on the whereabouts of a political fugitive, she plays with wonderful feeling and makes one realize all the agony she undergoes on hearing Mario's cries of pain. In the other when she visits Baron Scarpia to plead for Mario's life Miss Frederick again shows her ability as an actress of exceptional emotional powers. La Tosca is without doubt the great acting part Miss Frederick has had in some time.

The adaptation of the tragedy made by Charles E. Whittaker shows skill also. The arrangement of the scenes is notable. There is phase after phase of action not interrupted by sudden cuts or flashes to any parallel line. The play has strength enough to stand this mode of treatment and happily Mr. Whittaker saw its bigness and adapted accordingly. It was staged by Edward Jose and settings and locations all bespeak of his fine sense of atmosphere. The photography by Ned Van Buren is of the best and some of the lightings add considerably to the dramatic force of the action.

Frank Losee as Baron Scarpia, the most villainous heavy of all times, is always a reliable foil for the star. Jules Raucort is a good Mario and Henry Hebert and W. H. Forsythe show to advantage in minor roles.

The fact that "La Tosca" is essentially a tragedy and ends with the death of the lovers should in no way detract from its merit as one of the greatest tragedies ever written for the stage—and adapted for the screen. Those who know "La Tosca" would hardly countenance a happy ending, a thing which only the most superficial of audiences would demand.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

La Tosca (Pauline Frederick), operatic star, because of jealousy follows her lover, Mario Cavardossi (Jules Raucourt) to his villa on the outskirts of Rome, there to surprise him harboring a political fugitive Cesare Angelotti (Henry Hebert). Her foolish jealousy subdued she is about to leave when Baron Scarpia (Frank Losee), chief of police, and the man who holds Rome in a grip of tyranny arrives in pursuit of Angelotti. Mario hides him in an old well. The Baron demands to know his whereabouts and prepares to torture Mario until he confesses it. This he does and finally, La Tosca unable to bear the agony of her lover's suffering any longer tells the Baron. Both are arrested as conspirators. That evening, the Baron tells La Tosca that he will liberate Mario if she will but pay the price with her body. She consents to this and the captain of the firing squad is called and given instructions to load his rifles with powder only, when Mario is stood against the wall. La Tosca then secures passports for herself and Mario from the Baron. When he approaches for his payment she stabs him to the heart. But the Baron's orders to his captain prove merely a trick. Mario is killed and when La Tosca discovers this, she confesses her murder of the Baron in a frenzy of glee. She, too, is made the target of the firing squad as she leaps from a high wall.

" A Daughter of France "

(Fox—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE melodrama of other days was taken by Benjamin S. Kutler and Betta Brouil, authors of " A Daughter of France," and dressed up in a war setting. Without this process of modernization its five reels could be passed by with the mere comment " crude." And at that we are not so sure that its patriotic guise can eliminate its extraordinarily elemental situations and its obvious bids for cheers. It takes something bigger to stir the emotions of an audience than the comparison of Hun brutality and a patriotic daughter of France whose eloquence is displayed in the sub-titles. Here it is a weak effort to awake enthusiasm—an effort that failed to move the writer at any rate and which can hardly be hoped to bring down a house with cheers because of its sheer obviousness. It might seem that only a shot from an animated weekly or the art of Griffith can create the response of patriotic approval desired by producers who manufacture the " war drama " or " patriotic feature."

Furthermore the authors have accentuated the supposedly dominating trait of the German officer—sex lust—to an extent far too great to be dramatic. Too much stress on a single element, otherwise powerful, will often turn the tables, in fact quite reverse them, and the authors evidently unaware of this bit of technique have overstepped their bounds. The principal male character of the Kutler-Brouil story is a German officer from Alsace, consequently with French blood in his veins. He is led to reform by the daughter of France and asserts his willingness to enlist under the tricolor and then, wonder of wonders, it develops that he has been a member of the French Secret Service all the time! This indeed is stretching the point and seems like a last minute amendment made by some sensitive mind who could not countenance the fact of a German reforming. But it only serves to again jolt the observer into a realization of the bare mechanics of the scenario. The revelation that he is a Frenchman in no way excuses his conduct previous to the moment of his reform.

Virginia Pearson takes the title role in her usual style and receives support from Hugh Thompson as the French-German officer Herbert Evans, Ethel Kaufman and Anthony Merlo render fitting performances in prominent roles. Adrian Johnson made the scenario and Edmund Lawrence directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Louise de Ciron (Virginia Pearson), true daughter of France, remains in her chateau despite the German invasion. Her home is made the headquarters of the German general staff. Rudolph von Knorr (Hugh Thompson), the commanding officer, is smitten by Louise's beauty and makes things generally unpleasant for her with his advances. Fritz von Meyring (Herbert Evans), next in command, also takes a liking to Louise and evolves a plan to lure her to the town inn away from Rudolph. Trapped in a room at the inn, Louise is surprised at the entrance of Rudolph, who attacks her. Suddenly, however, he realizes his brutishness and leaves. Fritz thereupon takes up where Rudolph left off but the latter returns to kill him. Later Rudolph apologizes and approaches Louise, but she, still doubtful, stabs him. She is ordered shot by another officer but Rudolph saves her by insisting the wound was accidentally inflicted. Recovered, Louise realizes his worth and urges him to forsake the German cause. This he agrees to and the two escape to the French lines where he reveals himself as a French secret service agent.

George Moss, Maude Hill and Naida Gary are also in the cast.

" Innocent's Progress "

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

PAULINE STARKE who was seen to such advantage some weeks ago in " Until They Get Me," has the featured role in a late Triangle, titled " Innocent's Progress," and she carries off the honors, usually attributed to a star, with the grace and ease of the brightest. Miss Starke's work in this picture is highly commendable and their isn't a patron of a motion picture theatre who will leave after witnessing her performance who will not have complimentary remarks for this little star. She is of the Mae Marsh type and possesses all the ability of her more seasoned contemporary. Her simple plainness and her unaffected actions in the creation of a role, are the personifications of grace and magnetism. She puts this Triangle offering over with the audience with her, never against her.

Some will criticize the picture as containing too much of the sentimental. It certainly arouses the emotions of the most hardened. Perhaps it is a bit too sentimental. The author or director could have arranged for a sprinkling of comedy and have obtained better results. A few comedy situations are developed but in such a mild manner, that they just get over with little leeway.

Frances Quillan has contributed a well constructed story. The action moves in logical sequence and the plot is developed without forced situations. The story is not a world-beater, but it is far above the story that is usually termed " the average." It serves as an excellent vehicle for Miss Starke.

Frank Borzage is entitled to a good bit of credit for the production he has given Miss Quillan's story. He has not attempted the lavish or unusual. He worked for a good production and has obtained one. Pliny Horne's work is seen in the photography. Mr. Horne has done some good work behind the camera and the results he has obtained in shooting " Innocent's Progress " stamp him a " man on the job."

Jack Livingston, opposite Miss Starke, affords excellent support. He is a fine type and works to good advantage when not much smiling is required during the course of production. Alice Knowland, Charles Dorian and Graham Pette are good in minor supporting roles.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Tessa Fayne (Pauline Starke) is an orphan and lives with her crabbed aunt in a small country village. As clerk in the village candy shop, she has realized the height of her ambition. But a traveling show comes to town and after the leading man of the show has told her of the great opportunities on the stage in New York, her one wish is to get to New York. The actor and she become quite chummy during the week of his stay in town, and the village gossips start something.

Tessa is reprimanded and she decides to go to New York and look up the actor who had told her that if she ever came to New York to " look him up." She arrives in the city and goes to the actor's address. She learns that he is married and " down and out." She is alone on the streets when a man approaches her. She runs from him and into the arms of Carey Larned, a wealthy clubman who has contracted lung trouble. He takes her to his apartment and hears her story. He gives her his room and makes arrangements to stop at the club. Before he leaves, a friend of his who has access to the apartment comes in and goes to his room. He finds Tessa there. Larned is writing a letter before leaving for the club. The friend is drunk and takes liberties with Tessa. Larned throws him out and the exertion brought on a hemorrhage of the lungs. He is confined to his bed and barely escapes death as the result. Tessa cares for him.

Madeline Carson (Lillian West), a friend of Larned, comes to see him. Larned arranges to place Tessa in her care and leaves for the West to regain his health. Tessa, under Miss Carson's care, develops into a beautiful girl. Miss Carson loves Larned but realizes that he does not love her. Larned writes that he expects to return and Miss Carson, knowing that Tessa loves Larned and that Larned loves Tessa, purposely arranges an accident in which she loses her life. Larned and Tessa are happily united.

ONE of Bud Fisher's first animated cartoon-comedies to be released through the William Fox Exchanges is " The Leak," in which Mutt and Jeff are as usual the figures of chief importance. Exhibitors are familiar with the excellent quality of the motion in the Mutt and Jeff pictures. They of all others nearest approximate the perfect animation necessary to make such pictures fully pleasing to the eye. " The Leak " is no exception to this rule. The idea of " The Leak " is clever and contains a number of gags that would make Mack Sennett turn green with envy. Mutt and Jeff overhear the city council confering over a certain spot in a certain street where " thousands of dollars have been buried." They get to work to dig for the treasure, but at the first stroke of the pick water gushes into the air. Subsequently the artist has derived considerable amusement from the manner in which Mutt and Jeff, a wagon and a mule, are thrown around on top of the powerful stream. It is all very funny and the finale which reveals the fact that the thousands " sunk " on the spot were expended in an effort to stop the leak caps the half reel with a big laugh.

" The Girl Who Wouldn't Quit "

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

BLUEBIRD'S late contribution to the silent drama is " The Girl Who Wouldn't Quit," with Louise Lovely in the featured role. The screen version is an adaptation from Oliver Curwood's magazine story, " The Quest of Juan," and was produced under the direction of Edgar Jones.

Its predominating features are mystery and the melodramatic element. The action is laid in and around a Western mining field. The story is slow in developing reel, live action, but once started, there is action aplenty. As a dramatic presentment it is not the best example. So much material has been injected into the plot as revealed in the later reels, that the mystery, which has been attempted with too much anxiety, becomes not only mysterious but confusion to the point of uninteresting.

Mr. Curwood has contributed an old-fashioned melodrama. In developing the melodramatic, he has lost sight of the fact that logical reasoning in plot development is essential to a well constructed drama. He has furnished action, galore and material enough to furnish a reason for a ten-reeler, but his ideas have been created in this screen presentation, in such confusion that it is impossible to associate the logical with his methods of revelation.

Louise Lovely is not called upon to give a difficult performance. She presents the role of small girl and has only to laugh and cry with few opportunities to do any real acting. Philo McCullough in the juvenile lead, gives a good performance. Charles H. Mailes is a bit too anxious to impress upon the minds of his audience the fact that he is interpreting a character role. Mark Fenton, Gertrude Aster and William Chester are seen to good advantage in minor supporting roles. The photography is of Class A brand. Director Jones has obtained realistic shots of mining country. He created an average production.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Roscoe Tracy (Henry A. Barrows) is slated for a position as mine superintendent, but the present incumbent, Robert Carter (Charles H. Mailes), objects to his dismissal and arranges to have a murder charged to the fault of Tracy. Tracy's daughter, Joan (Louise Lovely), a slip of a girl, accompanies her father on a trip over the country, their destination being the mining camp. Mailes and his confederate rob and kill the mine owner's messenger, who is delivering a large amount of bullion for his employer. Evidence points to Tracy as the murderer and he is tried and sentenced to life imprisonment. Joan, his daughter, sets out to secure his freedom. Carter, to free himself of all suspicion, starts with a posse and succeeds in bringing Tracy into the hands of the law.

Joan is a friend of Carter's wife and was invited to spend a week or more as her guest. While there she receives a message from the former telegraph operator at the mine. The latter was in code. She sends it to her father in prison and he deciphers the message. It informs him to go to a certain place for the box of bullion which was stolen. Joan takes it upon herself to go in search of the box. She enlists the aid of Jim Younger, son of the mine owner. The box is found but is taken from Joan and her assistants by a gang of men whom Carter had hired to secure the box, he having learned of the fact that Joan was appraised of its existence. After a struggle, the box is recovered, the evidence placed before the authorities and Joan's father is released.

"SPIES WITHIN" introduces a new vein of interest in "The House of Hate," for it develops that Haynes and Ezra Waldon are in favor of accepting munitions contracts from a representative of the German government. Pearl, needless to say, opposes this and insists along with Harvey Gresham that the contract be made with the French government. The action further indicates that Gresham is in the employ of the United States. The fights with the Hooded Terror have their allotted space in the two reels also. The fearless Pearl opens the episode by engaging him in a terrific fight and even as the last reel closes she is again resisting his superhuman strength as Gresham rushes to the rescue.

"Nancy Comes Home"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

"NANCY COMES HOME" is a striking contrast to Triangle's other late offering, "Innocent's Progress." It is as far below the latter in dramatic construction and presentation as the earth is from the stars. Without a substantial story, with a weakness in construction, and most amateurish acting, "Nancy Comes Home," presents a picture that is only a picture and little more. If it were not for the pretty girlishness of Myrtle Lind there would be little to attract an audience's attention. The children will enjoy this picture because in part, it presents a phase of life that they can understand. The criminal aspect that has been revealed may not be the best entertainment for the children, but its development has been done in a mild sort of way, free from sincere suggestion, which fact, should leave the children on the safe side.

was not to present the featured role. Mary Pickford or Marguerite Clarke might, by trying hard, have made something of the part and incidentally of the story, but Miss Lind was working to a great disadvantage. She does not possess the dramatic ability to stand "head and shoulders" above a weak story. She tried hard and is deserving a lot of credit for the try. She is the only bright spot in the production. A lesson to parents who neglect their children is sought to be taught, but it fails to get over owing to the weak argument its propounder puts forth.

Jack Dillon directed and he has delivered a production of quality considering the script he was given to dramatize. Steve Norton did good work at the camera. Jack Gilbert in the juvenile lead, registers. George Pearce is fine in a character role as is Myrtle Rishell. Percy Challenger handle a character role with finesse. Eugene Burr, Anna Dodge and J. P. Wild are seen in minor roles.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nancy Worthing (Myrtle Lind) is at boarding school. She writes her parents that she would like to come home and have a good time. Mr. Worthing (George Pearce) and Mrs. Worthing (Myrtle Rishell), her parents, are society folks, the husband objecting to his wife's spending all her time "gadding." The husband gives the time to business when his wife doesn't drag him to a social affair.

Nancy arrives expecting a good time. Her mother has arranged a children's party for her but Nancy feels that she is grown-up and insists upon cabarets and restaurants. She is disappointed when she finds that she cannot realize her ambition.

Phil Ballou (Jack Gilbert) decides to "strike out for himself." He leaves college and writes his father, who is wealthy, that he is going to work. He hires out to the Worthings as chauffeur. Nancy's father and mother leave one night, she to a social and he to a director's meeting, leaving Nancy alone. She decides to "hit the high spots" along the "lighted way." Having no money, she decides to pawn her mother's furs and jewels. Obtaining the money on the articles she buys beautiful dresses and cloaks, and dresses for the occasion.

She encounters Phil leaving for the night and asks him to take her to a cabaret. She tells him that she will go alone if he doesn't consent to accompany her. He gets the car and they start for the cabaret. While they are "wining and dining" a jealous lover shoots the man whom he sees with his sweetheart. In the rush to get out Nancy takes another's cloak, leaving her own. Phil is arrested for the shooting because as he ran to the rescue, he picked up the revolver which had been dropped—and just then the police arrived. The pawn tickets are found in the pocket of Nancy's coat and the suspicion points to her. The mystery is finally unraveled—Jack is disclosed as the son of wealthy parents, Nancy's mother's cloak and jewels are recovered and the real offender in the shooting is captured.

"A Bit of Jade"

(Mutual-American—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Lisle M. Albright

A STOLEN jade necklace taken from a Hindu idol, and a web of circumstantial evidence that throws its meshes around the pretty heroine, Mary Miles Minter, again and again connecting her up in the eyes of her lover as the thief, furnishes the central theme of this thrilling story.

Although not filled with the clever farce of Miss Minter's previous play, "Powers that Prey," this latest addition to Mutual's stock of pictures featuring the pretty little star, makes up with dramatic interest and suspense what it lacks in comedy. The presence of the Hindu, commissioned by the Indian secret service to secure the necklace at all costs and to return it to the temple from which it was stolen, lends a mystic and oriental atmosphere to the play. The scenario is well put together and affords an admirable vehicle for Mary's smile and innocent gaze. She does, however, get caught so often in unwelcome situations, in trying to save her brother's name, that it is no wonder that Grayson Blair, the wealthy but youthful collector of curios, is just a little puzzled in his attempt to reconcile that smile with the suspicious acting of the girl.

"A Bit of Jade" is another tribute to Miss Minter's ability as an actress, for it is not the single production that makes the star but the high average that counts, and Mary's plays are still on the up-grade, and growing in favor with exhibitors and public all the time. It is not stretching the facts to say that her latest play is way over her own high standard of productions. This, of course, is not all due to her own individual work, for Alan Forrest, who plays opposite her, gives a very likeable rendition of the young collector, Grayson Blair. Others in the picture, which was directed by Edward S. Sloman, are David Howard, Vera Lewis, Alfred Ferguson and Clarence Burton. They all do good work, and their acting is enhanced, as is the effectiveness of the entire production, by good photography.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Phyllis King (Mary Miles Minter) is at lunch in a cafe when her brother, who has lost heavily gambling, comes in and borrows what money she has to settle his debts. When she gets ready to leave, she is embarrassed to find that she hasn't enough left to pay her bill. Grayson Blair (Alan Forrest) comes to her assistance and pays the waiter. In leaving the restaurant her brother puts on Grayson's coat and leaves his own, which was of the same cut and pattern. He does not notice that in the pocket of Grayson's coat there is a jade necklace which the latter is about to take to a dealer's to have repaired.

At her aunt's country home a few days later Phyllis, as a lark, dresses in her brother's clothes and enters the boathouse of an adjoining estate. In the pocket of Cuthbert's (David Howard's) coat she has found the necklace and wears it. She is surprised at the boathouse by Blair, the owner, who grabs her. In the struggle which ensues she escapes but leaves the necklace on the ground and Blair recognizes her as the girl he met in the cafe.

He is puzzled. Rhi (Alfred Ferguson), the crafty Hindu, who has been discharged by Blair, for attempting to steal the jade, is shadowing Blair and notices the struggle. He offers to help Phyllis get the necklace, who upon returning home picks up a paper and notices an account of a theft of a jade necklace from a wealthy clubman. Phyllis concludes that her brother has stolen the necklace and wants to get it and return it to the rightful owner before Cuthbert is branded as a thief.

That evening she breaks into Blair's home and tries to find the jade but is discovered by the owner. After more complications the mystery is finally cleared up, the suspicions Blair has harbored regarding his pretty neighbor evaporate, the Hindu is caught and jailed, and the story ends the way a successful comedy should end with the hero and heroine together and happy.

"Fast Company"

(Bluebird-Universal—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

A MAN may be a mollycoddle until he discovers that he is Irish, reasoned the author of "Fast Company," and when this discovery is made he immediately becomes a true son of the Emerald Isle, a true son being a smiler and a fighter. It is through this transition that Franklyn Farnum goes in his latest Bluebird and it may be said to his benefit that in so doing he is more of a comedian than he has been heretofore. Mr. Farnum has quite an ingratiating personality, a likeable presence and sufficient ability—what he has lacked is good vehicles in which to present these good qualities. And while "Fast Company" is by no means the perfect vehicle it has at least one more wheel than have his former ones. In fact, it might be described as possessed of two wheels but what he really needs is one with four—and in needing thus much substantial support he is no different from any other picture comedian.

"Fast Company" points a good moral in that it shows that even a mollycoddle can be shocked into a man if the shock is great enough. It has a number of good laughs in it but at times the action lags owing to the fact that there is no counter-plot to bridge the gaps in the main line of action. The last part of it, commencing with the scene in which Laurence Percival Van Huyler discovers his real ancestry is pictured with the right amount of pep that makes for good comedy. The whole will pass as average entertainment, inasmuch as good comedies are just now as scarce as hair on a bald head.

Juanita Hansen's doll-like beauty is always a considerable addition to any picture. Lon Chaney has a genial role in which he fits well. By the way, does Lon Chaney ever not fit? The support is adequate. Lynn Reynolds directed. This may account for the picture's improvement over previous Farnum numbers.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Laurence Percival, etc., (Franklyn Farnum) is a mollycoddle and even a college education fails to make a man of him. He realizes his shortcomings, but seems unable to mold himself into anything approaching a human being. Dan McCarty (Lon Chaney), once football coach, again meets Laurence when engaged as a reporter. Dan, naturally enough, is the very antithesis of Laurence. Alicia (Juanita Hansen), Laurence's fiancee, wearies of his attitude and finally neglects him for a boasting arctic explorer. Laurence's old home is being torn down. Exploring the ruins with Dan he discovers an old document in the wall to the effect that his real family name is O'Malley and that his illustrious ancestor spent the greater part of his life pirating on the seas, retiring under an assumed name for safety's sake. The O'Malley part of it tickles Laurence, who straightway becomes Larry and starts a career of fistic violence. His parents are disgusted with the story printed about their line and still further displeased with Larry until they learn the real good the change has wrought. Alicia also notices the change and contrives to make Larry jealous. And jealous he becomes much to the personal discomfort of the boasting explorer, who suddenly finds himself lying in the middle of the road with no automobile and no Alicia. Larry wins her and wins a name for himself as a man.

"The Kaiser" Is Booking Fast

Will Open the Adams Theatre, New Kunsky House in Detroit—Indefinite Runs Begin in Chicago and Boston

H. M. BERMAN, sales manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., reports that the number of telegraphic requests for immediate bookings of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," make it evident that the feature is destined to repeat throughout the country the success it is now said to be scoring at the Broadway theatre in New York. Although but two weeks have elapsed since the initial showing the New York representatives of the big booking organizations are said to have widely heralded the production.

The first booking of "The Kaiser" outside of New York City was that of the Adams theatre in Detroit, the newest of the Kunsky houses. The Adams is to open its doors on April 1, and the Jewel feature will be its premiere offering. There, according to Mr. Berman, it will remain for an indefinite run.

Although the Kunsky interests signed the Jewel contract first, the Globe theatre, of Boston, is the first theatre in the land to actually show it after the Broadway. The picture opened for an indefinite run on March 17.

In Wilmington, Del., the DuPonts have arranged for a week's showing at their Playhouse, the picture opening March 25. The DuPonts are nationally known for their patriotic endeavors and their booking of "The Kaiser" is pointed to as significant.

In Chicago Jewel Productions has taken over the Ziegfeld theatre, and presentation of "The Kaiser" was begun there on Sunday, March 24. Harry Levey, who had charge of the Broadway theatre presentation during its first week, will assume charge of the Ziegfeld theatre and will remain at the helm throughout the length of its run.

Fox Stars at Work on New Productions

WORK on several new productions has been started at the Eastern and West Coast studios of William Fox during the past few days. George Walsh began work at the Kalem studios at Cliffside, N. J., on a play the working title of which is "4:40 at Fort Penn," which is said to afford Walsh an excellent opportunity for his breezy style.

June Caprice, who has been enjoying a rest after making "A Camouflage Kiss," has started work on a new play which has the working title, "Blue Eyed Mary."

After finishing "The Debt of Honor," her first production for William Fox, Peggy Hyland has begun on the exterior scenes for a play which has "Peg of the Pirates" as its working title. In the story Peggy is carried off by pirates and is rescued by her lover, who is a poet and a fine young lad as well. The new subject, like Miss Hyland's first for William Fox, will be under the direction of O. A. C. Lund.

R. A. Walsh, following a brief vacation after finishing "Woman and the Law," is now working on the script for a new play.

Jane and Katherine Lee, after their return from Georgia, where they made exteriors, have resumed work at the Biograph studios on their forthcoming production.

At the West Coast studios Gladys Brockwell has started work on a new play with the tentative title of "Miss Past, Miss Present." "The Honeymooners" is the working title of a new picture which Jewel Carmen is making. William Farnum has begun work on a new de luxe production under the direction of Frank Lloyd.

Able Cast in Petrova's Third Picture

IN Madame Olga Petrova's third starring vehicle, "The Life Mask," soon to be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, a supporting cast of more than ordinary strength is said to have been provided. To Mrs. L. Case Russell is due the credit for the scenario, which is taken from the mystery novel, "To M. L. G.," by an anonymous author. The peculiar nature of the story, it is claimed, required especially skillful interpretation of the characters, and to this end more than the usual consideration was given to the matter of selecting the cast, which is said to be perfect.

Appearing in the leading male role is Thomas Holding, who assumes the character of Captain Hugh Shannon. Second in importance to this role is the character of Woodruffe Clay, around whom the entire plot revolves. For this part Wyndham Standing, who has appeared in support of many Famous Players, World and Lasky stars, was chosen. In the second lead is Christine Mayo, while Lucille La Verne, who will be remembered by older theatregoers for her work with Harrigan and Hart and Thomas Jefferson, will be seen in the character part of Sarah Harden.

The balance of the supporting cast included Matilda Brundage, Edith Hinckle, Gene Burnell, E. J. Burnes, not to mention five natives of Spain especially selected to lend the proper atmosphere to certain scenes of "The Life Mask," presumably laid in that country.

The picture has been directed by Frank Crane, photographed by Messrs. Lane and Harris and filmed in both New York and Florida. The release of "The Life Mask" will mark the third appearance of Madame Olga Petrova as the star of her own production organization.

Raver Speaks for "The Public Defender"

Harry Raver in commenting upon the sales campaign for his production of "The Public Defender," starring Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon and Robert Edeson said:

"I discovered that pretty nearly every organization of state rights buyers and exhibitors' circuits are represented in the ownership of territorial franchises for this production. Among these are: Turner & Dahnken of the First National Exhibitors circuit; Walter E. Greene and Hiram Abrams, prominent figures in the Paramount and Artcraft companies, who operate the Modern Feature Film Co. in New York, and the Boston Photoplay Co. of Boston; The Associated Theatre, Inc., of which Tom Hamlin is the head; and the Doll-Van Film Corporation of Chicago, members of Sol Lesser's buying association.

"In Boston, 'The Public Defender' played a full week on its opening date at Keith's Boston theatre. In Chicago, the picture had its premiere at Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Orpheum. Turner & Dahnken presented the picture at their principal theatre in San Francisco."

Renowned Pictures, Inc., who are handling the sales of Mr. Raver's production anticipate a rapid disposal of the remaining territory now that "The Public Defender" has started off so well in the states already presenting the picture.

No Sunday Shows Here

The Appellate Court at Frankfort, Ky., has decided that it is a violation of the law to conduct a motion picture show on Sunday. This action was taken in affirming the case of the Capital theatre, Frankfort, against the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

A fine of not more than $50 may be assessed for each offense.

KENTUCKY

Wallace Walter has sold the Princess theatre at Lancaster to Prewitt and Renfro, of Harrodsburg. John Renfro has taken charge of the house.

MASSACHUSETTS

Manager Edward P. McCarthy of the New Nickel motion picture house, Westfield, is considering plans to enlarge the theatre so as to include a gallery and good sized lobby.

MINNESOTA

A transaction was closed recently by which J. L. Hasbrouck, of Graceville, purchased the Grand theatre fixtures and business from Henry Sarvis, who has been in the picture business in this city for the past ten years.

The lease and equipment of the Moveum theatre, Aitken, has been sold by the administrators of the estate of the late B. M. Hungerford to Chas. E. Lyons of Leeds, N. D., who also took an option on the building and the lot upon which it stands.

On March 4 Mr. Lyons took possession and closed the theatre for a week, in order to make some important changes and improvements, which include the installation of a second projecting machine which will eliminate waits, and also to change from the use of the alternating electric current to the direct.

Mr. Lyons will be assisted in the operation of the theatre by his wife. They have had some ten years' experience in the theatre business which began in the Orpheum in St. Paul.

NEBRASKA

Frank Dillard has leased the Opera House Auburn and will install motion picture.

J. A. Bentley of Sidney has sold the U. S. A. theatre to H. A. Dubuque.

Bert J. Chipman has succeeded Frank Fehrung as manager of the Oliver theatre, Lincoln.

OHIO

George J. Zegiob, a Cleveland contractor, has bought the Cozy theatre, Lorain, from Rogal and Klick. He intends to make several improvements in the house. Edwin Barnes, former operator, has been manager of the Cozy theatre.

Carlton-Lyric Theatre Company, which owns the Carlton theatre building in Du Bois, has acquired the management of that theatre. The theatre will be under the management and supervision of A. R. Way, manager of the Avenue theatre in Du Bois.

Peter Rettig has purchased the Mystic theatre at Galion from Carl Robinson.

The Majestic theatre, Bucyrus, after being completely remodeled and redecorated, has been opened under the managemnt of Mr. Beach of Bucyrus. Mr. Beach has renamed the theatre, and it will hereafter be known as the Grand.

PENNSYLVANIA

The Star theatre at Mercer was recently sold by R. M. Lynch to Frank A. Wheeler.

B. D. Sechrist, proprietor and owner of the Palace theatre, Middleburg, is having a 30 x 40 feet extension made to his house.

A Musical Success

I HAVE just received the following letter from Leo F. Forbstein, musical director for Frank L. Newman, of Kansas City, Mo. I reproduce this letter because it brings out so clearly the success which Mr. Newman has had, due to his appreciation of the value of music as an addition to motion pictures.

It is of particular interest to note that the policy was started in a house seating ninety-nine patrons and has been continued with the utmost and ever increasing success up to the present day.

"I have your letter of the eighth inst., in reference to giving you my views of what music means to Photo-Plays. Fortunately, I have been connected with a man who has recognized the value of music and knows just what music means to a theatre.

"I well remember when I was just a boy of fifteen years of age, living in St. Louis. I was very anxious to get a position to play in a picture theatre. It was then that I saw my first orchestra in Mr. Newman's picture theatre in St. Louis. At that time, as well as I can remember, there were only ninety-nine chairs in the house, the law prohibiting any more on account of this store room being in the middle of the block.

"At that time, Mr. Newman had four pieces of music in that small theatre. Of course the admission price was then five cents. He has told me many times that he attributes his success a great deal to the music he has always had in his theatres. I am sure that Mr. Newman brought the first orchestra and organ to a picture theatre in St. Louis, though at that time people said he could not afford it.

"I started to work for Mr. Newman in St. Louis in 1907, and then I went to St. Joseph, to his theatre, the Royal, where he had a ten-piece orchestra.

"At that time it was the talk of the town that a theatre seating five hundred and fifty, charging ten cents, could have a ten-piece orchestra. While I was in St. Joseph I conceived the idea of having what we called Concert Night. At that time the theatre was changing pictures three times a week—Sunday, Wednesday and Friday. On account of the size of the town, which was seventy-five thousand population, Tuesday was a very poor day, so we decided to have these concerts on Tuesday nights.

"We had a twenty-five piece orchestra, of which we had about forty-five minutes of music. We never let our patrons get lost at any time, because we had on our screen, the music, each number that we would render, and if we played an overture of any kind or a descriptive number, it was all written out and shown on the screen. To give you an idea of what music would do, we gave concerts twice in one night, and of course, along with that, we used to get the best vocal singer in the city in connection with the three or four that were singing at the theatres at that time. We gave half an hour of pictures and forty-five minutes of music, so it gave us an opportunity to give two concerts a night.

"It was absolutely impossible to get into the theatre on Tuesday night, and at times the street cars could hardly get by the show; in other words, Tuesday, a losing day, was turned into the biggest day of the week. We only had employed ten musicians and the extra fifteen that we had on concert nights was not a very great expense, and it proved a wonderful success.

"I personally have always felt that it is not the size of the orchestra that amounts to a great deal; it is the quality of music and the class of men that you have playing for you, and, of course, the size of the theatre must be considered.

"I have known of instances where a theatre seating a couple of thousand people would have about nine or ten pieces in the orchestra or probably less. You can imagine how that would sound, sitting up in the balcony, the middle part or even the back of the theatre. It simply gets lost, that is in a general way.

"Personally, I think also that the management should take an interest with his leader and co-operate with him—suggest to him anything that can improve his orchestra. As music is forty per cent. of the attraction of a photoplay theatre, then it is certainly big enough for the management to give it some thought and attention. If you will note the theatres that have made a success—music was partly responsible for it, and it is certain that where a theatre has not made a success, that theatre did not have good musical accompaniment."

It is interesting to note on Mr. Newman's letterhead, which contains small reproductions of the Royal and Regent theatres, the statement of the various points which he considers of utmost importance for the comfort of his patrons.

In the first place, the houses are open from 9 a. m. to 11 p. m.

A ten-piece orchestra is on the job in both places.

A "Mammoth Pipe Organ" is installed in both houses. This is used in conjunction with the orchestra, and also alone as an auxiliary when the orchestra is out. This shows the attitude of the progressive exhibitor toward the organ, or the one-man instrument. Remember music is forty per cent. of the entertainment.

A lounging room is provided for the men.

A rest room for ladies, with maid continuously in attendance, adds materially to the popularity of both houses.

A check room for babies is also being run with utmost success. Maids are employed to keep an eye on the children, and give them all necessary attention while their parents are in the theatre enjoying the performance.

A children's playroom has also been established, which is most popular, supplied with toys, etc., so that patrons are not annoyed by others, who, from necessity, are forced to take their children around with them.

With all these conveniences and the character of entertainment given, there is absolutely no excuse for a house modeled on the same plans not to meet with equal success.

E. K. Gillett.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

The Robin Performance Recorder

AMONG the various automatic recording instruments comprising the Cinema Electric Time System, which has been perfected by J. E. Robin of 261-265 West Thirty-sixth street, New York, is a device of special value to managers which is termed the Performance Recorder.

The Robin Performance Recorder, shown in the accompanying illustrations, may be located in the manager's office or in the operating room (preferably the latter), and provides a complete and exact record of the details of each day's performances, as for instance: the number of reels run; the exact time taken in screening each reel; the exact duration of any and all intermissions between reels due to breakdowns, or the interposition of songs, acts, or other features included in the performance. The scope of the Robin Performance Recorder is not limited to the motion picture theatre, however, as it can also be used in the laboratory to record the daily performance of a printer or perforating machine, and it can, in fact, be used wherever a record of the running time of an electrically operated machine is required.

PROGRAM RECORD FOR TIME AND DURATION
THEATRE
ROBINS CINEMA ELECTRIC TIME SYSTEM
PERFORMANCE RECORDER
ROBIN CINEMA ELECTRIC TIME SYSTEM
110 WEST 40TH STREET NEW YORK U.S.A.

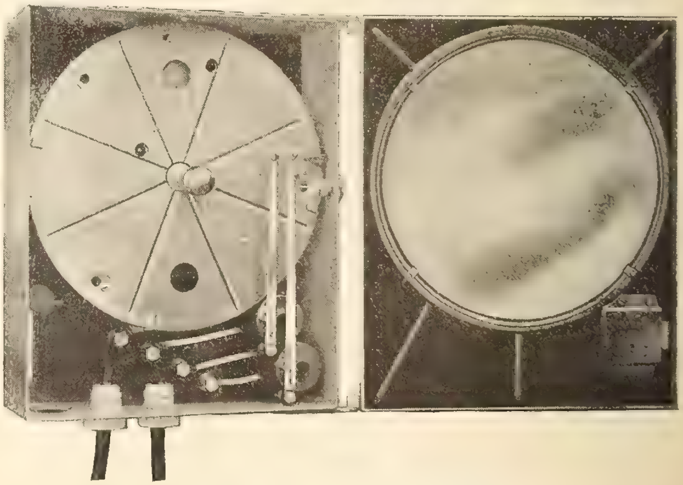
The Robin Performance Recorder

The exterior appearance of the Robin Performance Recorder is well represented by Fig. 1, which shows the recording apparatus mounted in a steel case enameled battleship gray. The door is of iron with full nickel trimmings and is provided with a combined latch and lock, the door being prevented from swinging open too far by two metal stops which are seen at the right of the casing. As is apparent from the illustration, the recording dial is visible through a round glass panel on the door.

Coming now to the mode of operation of the Performance Recorder, the device is shown ready to be put into operation in the illustration Fig. 2. The operation of the recorder depends of course upon the use of a clock, which is contained in the round casing seen in Fig. 2, and the clock supplied is a twelve-hour movement. There is no dial with figures, however, on this time recording clock, but the hand, or pointer, which serves as an index to the time, travels around the edge of the clock case and is seen at the right in Figs. 1 and 2. Fig. 2 also shows two vertical levers which terminate at their upper ends in glass pens, or styli. These pens are electro-magnetically operated from the source of current from which the machine equipped with the Performance Recorded is being run, and the pens are operative in making a record at all times when the machine is working.

Although the clock is not provided with the conventional type of time indicating dial, the record produced by this device is of course traced out by the pen points upon a recording form which consists of a suitable graduated cardboard dial. These cardboard dials, form the record of each day's performance, and a quantity of them are supplied with each Performance Recorder, as a new one must be put in place each day that the device is operated. The recorder is put into operation in the following manner:

The thumb-screw in the centre of the clock is removed and one of the cardboard dials is put into place. By referring to a watch or clock the time of day is ascertained, and the cardboard dial is then rotated around until the pointer (corresponding to a clock hand), seen at the right of the clock mechanism in the illustrations, corresponds with the figure on the edge of the dial which indicates the correct time of day. The cardboard dial is then clamped firmly in place by the central thumb-screw, and the pens which trace out the record of the daily performance of the machines are let down into the contact with the dial by turning the knurled knob on the outside of the case at the right. The recording pen-points are supplied with ink by means of a dropper, and as the pen-points terminate in small reservoirs, sufficient ink may be applied at one time to keep the pens in operative condition for a period of several days. The Performance Recorder outfit includes two additional pen-points, a suitable ink-dropper, and two bottles of indelible ink of different colors, as the recorder will show the daily performance of two machines.



Mechanism of the Performance Recorder

It is seen from Fig. 1 that as soon as the pens are let down into contact with the cardboard dial they commence to trace lines circumferentially around the dial. When, now, the projector, or other machine to which the Performance Recorder is attached, is put into operation, the pens are deflected one-eighth of an inch to the right, and continue to trace out their course around the dial, and it is the outermost portions of the records traced by the two pens which represent the time during which the respective machines are in operation. Thus the record dial supplies, at the end of each day, an accurate and irrefutable record of the progress of a show, or the daily performance of any machine to which it is attached.

The Robin Performance Recorder may be attached to the wall of the operating room in any desired position, and provision is made for bringing in the wires from either the back, the side, or the bottom of the outside steel casing, as knockouts are provided at all of these positions. Fig. 2 makes the method of connecting the wires very clear. As the illustration shows, each of the magnets which control the recording pens is provided with two connecting wires, or leads, which terminate in binding-posts inside of the casing, and by bringing in two wires from the motor switch of each machine, the magnets are connected so as to deflect the pens into the outermost, or recording, position the instant at which the respective machines go into operation. To connect the recorder when two projectors are run from a three-wire system, one wire from the motor switch of the first machine is attached to one of the outer binding-posts of the recorder, and one wire from the motor switch of the second machine is attached to the other outside binding-post. The two middle binding-posts of the recorder are joined by a wire, as are also the remaining two terminals of the machine motor switches. A wire is now run from this jumper between the two motor switches to the wire which joins the two middle binding-posts of the Performance Recorder, care being of course exercised to see that the correct polarity has been maintained in the two circuits.

Ingenious and useful as is this Performance Recording device, it is but one integral in a system of recording indicators perfected by Mr. Robin for use in motion picture theatres. The other devices, including the justly famous Cinema Speed Indicator, will be described in the Projection Department in due course.

Westinghouse Issues Valuable Instruction Booklet on Motor Generators

WE have just received from the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, East Pittsburgh, Pa., a copy of their latest instruction booklet on Motor Generator Equipments for Motion Picture Service.

H. A. Campe of the Westinghouse Company, who sends us the booklet, speaks of the new edition as follows:

"You will note, in comparing this book with our original instruction booklet, that we have gone into the matter considerably more in detail, taking into consideration that operators and persons who install equipments are not familiar with the details of installation and taking care of equipment, and to this end we have put in a larger number of connecting diagrams and cuts, which we find have been much appreciated.

"Another idea in getting our instruction book up in this form is not only to use it as an instruction book but as a hand-book on our equipments, as well as being descriptive of the same. Large numbers have been sent out to Technical Colleges, who use this book as a hand-book, or book of reference."

The instruction booklet well bears out all that Mr. Campe has claimed for it, and a short resumé of its contents may be in order. After the usual instructions with regard to unpacking the generator outfits, suggestions follow as to the sort of foundation upon which a generator should be mounted.

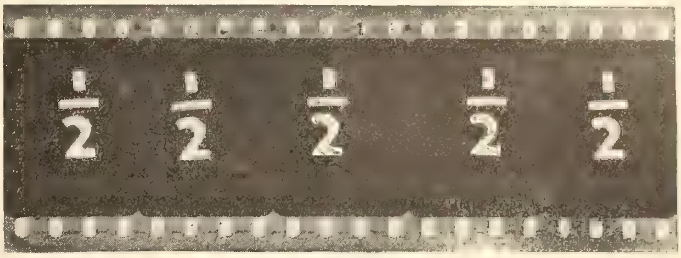
Coming next to the subject of wiring and connecting up, the instructions covering the connections of the Westinghouse motor generator sets are presented in a thoroughly understandable manner and with great attention to detail. A feature of this section is the numerous and carefully prepared wiring diagrams, which include some intimate "close-ups" of the more important terminal connections on the Westinghouse machines. The subject of wire sizes receives proper consideration in this section of the booklet.

The important, and often improperly carried out, operations of starting and stopping a motor generator are correctly explained, and the adjustment and repair of the Westinghouse equipments are also treated in separate sections.

Of great interest to the operator or electrical student are the items dealt with in the section entitled General Pointers, as examples of which may be mentioned the paragraphs on how to make a compound-wound generator pick up voltage, and the care of the commutator and the grinding of brushes. The booklet terminates with a collection of wiring diagrams showing complete connections for the various types of Westinghouse motor generator sets for motion picture work.

Film Mutilation Still Rife in Certain Quarters

THAT the mutilation of new and valuable motion picture films is by no means confined to exchanges is well evidenced by a specimen of film submitted by Mr. Bradley James, operator for the General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y., who comments as follows upon the specimen of vandalism which we reproduce herewith:



An Example of Vandalism

"I am enclosing you a piece of film and a photo of same cut from a reel returned from a theatre in Atlanta, Ga. The former user was a believer in halves also w(holes). There were several feet of this. We also get them with stars punched through. Why do managers allow such vandals to operate? Why not get them a position in a factory on a punch press, and the worst of it is they generally pick out one of the best scenes on which to do their nefarious work. Last week we received a three-reel film from Austin, Texas. It was new when shipped there two weeks ago, but about very four inches, eight or ten sprocket holes were torn out. This ran through the whole 3,000 feet and means the making of a new print. An operator of this kind should either lose his card or be compelled to pay for his carelessness. Let him graduate from his boyish and playful ways before taking a job where a man with common sense is needed, and who also knows how to take care of other people's property, especially when it is loaned to him for nothing. If he has not the realization of the importance of his position he had better become a punch press operator."

Comment: When it is considered that the films referred to by Mr. James are the property of the General Electric Company and are supplied gratis for purposes of exhibition, the force of his remarks is fully justified. When a theatre manager avails himself of the free use of a motion picture, he should feel that if the film is worthy of a place in his program it is also worthy of careful usage by his operator, and in a case of the nature reported by Mr. James the ingratitude of the exhibitor is just as reprehensible as the ignorance and incompetence of the operator.

Mr. James is not the only victim of film mutilation, however, as the practice of punch-marking films still prevails in some cities where such conditions have not as yet been brought to the attention of the National Anti-Misframe League. It has been repeatedly set forth that the receipt of punch-marked films is a sources of great vexation to the careful operator and to the scrupulous manager, but when such matters are reported to the N. A. M. L. there is the chance of improved conditions being brought about. The latest report concerning inadequate film inspection comes from F. J. McIncrow, who submits evidence in the form of film clippings showing the liberal use of diverse forms of punches and remarks as follows:

"I am enclosing punch marks taken from 'The Hopper,' a Triangle picture. There are two criminals who should be brought to justice, the crank turner that puts them there and the inspector that passed them. I also enclose pieces cut from 'The Eternal Temptress,' Paramount. It is a known fact that the film exchange inspector can't find misframes, but the fellow that ran these films before me had no brains at all.

"The Pittsburgh Film Exchanges need an overhauling, and by my enclosure you can see I am doing my share."

Comment: In the instances to which Mr. McIncrow has directed our attention, it is clear that all of the punch-marks had been placed in the films by operators, and we can appreciate that the film exchanges might be loth to continually remove sections from the ends of their films as the same come in day after day bearing new punch marks which have been placed therein as change-over signals by the successive operators who use the films. The duty of the exchange in such cases is clearly defined, however; they should warn every customer who permits his operator to punch-mark the films that service would not be supplied unless the mutilation ceased. If this matter were given attention by all large and representative exchanges, and backed up by concerted action, there would be a noticeable abatement in the use of the punch-mark as a change-over signal.

Demand Strong for De Luxe Motiograph

O. F. SPAHR, general manager of the Enterprise Optical Company, Chicago, manufacturers of the Motiograph and Motiograph De Luxe projection machine, reports that he is in receipt of telegrams every day that actually hurt him to answer.

"We are simply swamped," he said, "and I am forced to turn the business down. I'll be mighty glad when we get caught up sufficiently on back orders so that I don't have to send out telegrams to theatre men, anxious to get one of our De Luxe models, stating that I can't supply them. That hurts."

Mr. Spahr also states that the Motiograph is in demand by schools, universities and institutions. During the past week the Eugene Field school in Rogers Park installed a new model Motiograph and a Hertner Transverter. The University of Wisconsin sent in a request for two machines, one of which is to be used in an armory 250 feet long. Another order that came in from Madison was for the State Capitol building. This outfit is to be used in showing films to large assemblies including the State Legislature.

Operators' Inquiries

E. GARDNER, CAIRO, ILL., "What is the effect of the following: (a) condensing lenses not square with each other, (b) one condenser set higher than the other, (c) entire condenser combination out of square with objective, (d) entire combination higher, or lower, or out of line sidewise with objective?"

REPLY: With an accurately constructed lens system, corrected so as to abolish, or to minimize, the various aberrations commonly associated with spherical refracting surfaces, the decentering of any component lens would upset the corrections and performance of the entire system, and this is likewise true theoretically of the condenser system of the motion picture projector.

The customary motion picture condenser system is not, however, a corrected system, and on account of its extensive aberration slight deviations from the proper positions of its individual components do not exert a noticeable influence upon the resulting screen illumination. In practice, for instance, no apparent bad effects result when the axis of either condenser lens does not coincide with that of the complete projector optical system, but when the complete condenser system is out of line with the axis of projection, then the result is a ghost or lack of complete illumination at some part of the screen, the location of the ghost being governed by the direction in which the condenser system is decentered.

Although slight deviations from the correct centering of individual condenser lenses, with respect to the complete optical system of the projector, do not appear to greatly influence the quality of the screen illumination, it is nevertheless important, from the standpoint of efficiency, that the condenser system, the center of the aperture, and the objective lens should be co-axial at all times.

R. H. HYDE, ANADARKO, OKLA., "Is there a Mercury Arc Rectifier now in use that was purchased six years ago, and has been working all of that time?"

REPLY: We cannot refer to any specific Rectifier installation which has seen six years of uninterrupted service, but there are doubtless many instances in which such is the case. There is no reason why a rectifier should not give indefinite service, if properly taken care of, although the useful life of the bulb is, of course, limited. The bulb will in time lose its vacuum to such an extent that it fails to operate, or does not operate satisfactorily, when it must be replaced by a new one. Several bulbs would be required in the course of six years, but this is no evidence of faulty design or construction.

H. H. COLE, ENDICOTT, N. Y., "Can you tell me about the new Standard machine that is being made?"

Reply: The new Standard machine is of very massive construction, and has two heads, or mechanisms, one for black-and-white projection and one for color projection, the two heads being served by one arc lamp and lamphouse. A detailed and illustrated description of this projector will appear in due course.

L. W. WAIT, CANASTOTA, S. D., "What is the best way to attach a motor to an Edison Model D, and can it be made to work all right?"

REPLY: By having a grooved pulley turned up and attaching the same to the take-up pulley on the Edison head the machine may be run from a motor without imparting strain to any vital part of the mechanism. The normal operating speed may be roughly approximated, when installing the motor, by choosing suitable diameters for the pulleys on the motor spindle and the projector mechanism, but for a wide range of speed regulation, the motor installed should be a variable speed motor, or should be connected to an adjustable resistance, or regulator.

G. S. HEATWOLE, HARRISONBURG, VA., "How do you change the wires to make a motor run in the opposite direction?"

REPLY: Not knowing the exact type and construction of the motor, precise instructions cannot be given. The rule, however, is simple. Reverse the direction of the current through either the armature or the fields, but not through both. The motor will then run in the reverse direction.

M. KIRCHNER, MONETT, MO., "I wish to join some local union and want to study up on electricity. Please refer me to a good book on the subject."

REPLY: A useful set of text books on electricity are the Hawkins Electrical Guides, sold by T. Audel & Co., 72 Fifth Avenue, New York. There are ten volumes in the set, but each can be bought separately, price $1 per volume. Volumes 1, 2, 5 and 6 can be especially recommended to the operator. These treat of General Principles, Dynamos and Motors, Alternating Currents and A. C. Motors, Transformers and Rectifiers, respectively.

League Member Has Misconception of Organization's Aims

Mr. J. A., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: I, member No. 52 of the Anti-Misframe League, would like your idea on the following case:

A few weeks ago while working at the Rivoli theatre, in this city, I received from the Paramount Pictures Corp. a two-reel subject, entitled "Fatty at Coney Island."

The entire two reels were dirty and full of sand and had about one hundred patches like the samples enclosed.

The manager immediately 'phoned the film exchange for another print or some one to come and place the show in first-class condition, since he was paying a very large price for the two reels. The assistant manager of the exchange was unable to do either, so I got on the 'phone and told him if I fixed the show up I wanted to be paid for it. He referred the entire matter to Mr. Clark, the exchange manager, who was not in at the time.

The next day I presented the assistant manager with a bill for $1 for one and one-half hours work. He said when the manager came in he would give the bill to him. A few days later, calling on the manager at his office he told me I had an awful nerve to send his exchange a bill for work that was my duty.

I will say the next week my two-reel comedy had an inspection tag on it and was all right. But here is the question, should I not have been paid for my work inspecting those two reels, as I claim I was doing film exchange work?

Comment: In line with our intention to assist all victims of poor film service, when the facts are in our possession, we communicated the details supplied by Mr. A. to the general manager of the Paramount exchange system. We have a letter from this gentleman assuring us that the Philadelphia situation will be adjusted to the satisfaction of all concerned.

We think, however, that in demanding payment from the exchange, for the work he has done in repairing the film mentioned, Mr. A. has not expressed the aims and ideals of the League in the manner best calculated to win the co-operation and respect of the local exchange for our organization.

Although it might appear at first glance that when an operator repairs his films he is doing the work of the exchange, still it is well known that most all films require some attention before they are screened, and we believe that every competent operator nowadays puts his show in proper running condition before exhibiting the same, or at least immediately after the first show of the day.

The principles which the Anti-Misframe League is striving to realize go a great deal deeper than a dollar or two in the operator's pocket; the very existence of the operator and exhibitor depends on the exhibition of flawless pictures, because the audience must be satisfied if motion pictures are to continue as an extensively patronized form of entertainment.

By the faithful endeavors of the League members the apathetic attitude of the exchanges, as regards the condition of films, is being steadily overcome, and the League member who conscientiously lives up to the pledge will surely be gratified at the subsequent turn of affairs. Isn't every member willing, therefore, to do his bit now without grumbling, and to take a chance on the successful outcome of the League's endeavors, in common with his fellow members of the same organization?

The Fox Method of Preparing Positives for Subtractive Two Color Cinematography

IN the course of our early series of articles on "Color Cinematography" we gave an outline of the methods pursued by William F. Fox of the Kinemacolor Company of America, in preparing film positives by subtractive methods for the purpose of natural color cinematographic reproduction by the so-called "slow Kinemacolor" process. Since our previous article was published a new concern, the Natural Color Pictures Company, Inc., has been organized to exploit the processes devised by Mr. Fox, and as he has considerably modified his methods of preparing the color pictures, a review of his recent patents will be given.

As was stated in our previous description, Mr. Fox first makes his negative by the alternate, or successive, method in which panchromatic negative film is exposed in a camera of the Kinemacolor type, provided with a rotating color-filter having alternate sections of orange-red and blue-green hue. This yields a negative of the customary Kinemacolor variety, bearing alternate red- and green-sensation images. When a print from such a negative is projected in colors by the aid of a rotating color-filter attached to the projecting machine, a projecting speed of at least 32 pictures per second must be maintained, which of course means that to record a scene of given duration requires twice the length of film which would be necessary to reproduce the same scene in black and white.

In order, therefore, to enable the color pictures to be projected at the usual rate of 16 pictures per second, and to do away with the use of the rotating color-filter, Mr. Fox has devised a number of ways of preparing film positives (printed from the color-sensation negatives) by subtractive methods, so that each image on the finished positive strip is a reproduction in approximately natural colors of the subject photographed. When each image on the positive strip is a completely colored reproduction of the subject photographed it is obvious that the film can be projected on an ordinary projector (with no special attachments), and at the usual projecting rate of 16 per second.

After numerous experiments with double emulsion positive films (emulsion on both sides) and by re-emulsioning the ordinary film (making two coatings on the same side), Mr. Fox finally evolved a method whereby two successive printings could be accomplished on the single emulsion of cine positive stock, the two separate printings from corresponding red- and green-sensation negative images being thus superimposed on the positive strip to form a composite image, which, as the result of chemical processing, was made to approximate the coloration of the original subject. In the subtractive processes the positive images corresponding to the red-sensation negatives are colored blue-green (the complementary color to red) while the images corresponding to the green-sensation records are colored with a shade of red which is the complementary to the blue-green hue of the red-sensation images. The original manner in which Mr. Fox carried out these requirements (U. S. Patent No. 1,166,123) was as follows:

A print was first made on positive stock from the red-sensation images alternately recorded on the Kinemacolor negative strip, these red-sensation images being made to follow right after one another on the positive film through the use of an optical or other form of printer which has not been described to date by Mr. Fox. As the original positive emulsion is to be again printed upon, the exposure, when printing through the red-sensation negative, is very slight.

After printing, the positive strip, bearing the red-sensation positive images, is developed until correct density has been attained, whereupon development is stopped by immersing the film in a bath of water containing a slight amount of acetic acid. Keeping the film in the dark-room, the developed red-sensation positive has its images next toned bluish-green in a bath containing Iron Perchloride, Potassium Ferricyanide and Hydrochloric acid. Certain undesirable metallic compounds formed in the emulsion are next removed by chasing the film for about 30 seconds in a 1 per cent Hypo solution, which removes the undesirable products of the toning operation but does not materially affect the balance of the unexposed emulsion remaining on the positive strip.

After washing and drying, the positive, with its red-sensation images developed and toned bluish-green, is again printed upon, this time from the green-sensation images of the original Kinemacolor negative, these latter being printed right over the previously treated red-sensation images. The film is again developed, to bring out the green sensation images, and it is found that the alkaline character of the ordinary developer causes the bluish-green color to bleach out of the previously toned red-sensation images, thereby allowing the progress of the second development to be judged with ease. After fixing and washing, the positive film can now be brought into daylight, where the last printed, or green-sensation, images are subjected to the action of a bath containing Vanadium Chloride, Potassium Ferricyanide and Oxalic Acid, which bleaches the green-sensation image deposits to a yellow color, but at the same time restores to the red-sensation images the bluish-green color which they had lost during the second developing operation.

Besides bleaching the green sensation images to a yellow color, the Vanadium, Ferricyanide and Oxalic Acid bath has mordanted them, thus preparing them to receive and to retain a basic dye. After treatment with the Vanadium solution, fixing in Hypo, and well washing, the next step is the dyeing up of the green-sensation images (those printed last) in a bath containing a red basic dye of such color as would combine with their yellowish tinge to form a hue complementary to the bluish-green tone of the red-sensation images. When the correct result has been attained, the composite images on the positive film appear to approximate the coloration of the subject photographed, and after immersion in a weak bath of Acetic acid and subsequent drying the film is ready to be projected.

When the inherent difficulties of preparing cinematographic color prints by subtractive methods are considered, it is seen that Mr. Fox has evolved a very straightforward and uncomplicated method, but he has still further simplified and improved the method according to some subsequent patents which we proceed to digest.

A variation of the previously outlined method is described in U. S. Patent No. 1,207,527, the procedure being as follows:

As in the former method, the alternating red-sensation images of a Kinemacolor negative are printed from in regular sequence upon positive stock, a scant exposure being given. After development the red-sensation images are toned bluish-green in a bath compounded as follows:

Vanadium Chloride	1 ounce
Ferric Chloride	½ ounce
Ferric Ammonium Oxalate	½ ounce
Potassium Ferricyanide	1 ounce
Oxalic Acid (saturated solution)	60 ounces
Water to	1,000 ounces

When the red-sensation images have been toned to their proper blue-green color, the film is washed, and chased for a brief period in a weak Hypo bath, as in the method previously described, the film being kept in the dark room, of course. After washing and drying, the film is again printed upon, through the green-sensation images of the original negative, these later impressions being exactly superimposed over the previously printed red-sensation images. The green printing exposure is found to be at least twice as much as that necessary for the red-sensation images, as the process of toning the red images blue-green has somewhat reduced the sensitiveness of the remaining silver bromide emulsion. After development of the green-sensation positive impressions, followed by fixing and washing, the film may be brought into daylight, and its images are next mordanted, so that they will take up a basic dye, by immersion in a bath composed of

Potassium Iodide	½ ounce
Water to	500 ounces

After thorough washing, the film is then immersed in a solution of basic dye of a color calculated to impart to the green-sensation image deposits a hue which is the complementary of the bluish-green color of the red-sensation images upon which they are superimposed. Suitable dyes are, for instance, acridine orange or rhodamine, and dyeing is continued until the green-sensation images are thoroughly saturated, after which any surplus dye may be washed out, thus clearing the highlights of the pictures. The red coloration of the green-sensation images is now fixed (or rendered permanent) by immersion in a bath containing tannin, and after thorough fixing in Hypo and washing the film is ready to be dryed and projected.

As a result of further experiments, Mr. Fox has succeeded in improving on the procedure outlined in his patent No. 1,166,123 (the first method here described), his improvements being described in a recently granted patent (U. S. Patent No. 1,256,675).

In the revised method the alternating red-sensation images from the original negative are printed in straight-line sequence upon positive stock. When the red-sensation images are printed care is taken that the exposure is not great enough to affect the entire mass of the sensitive emulsion; therefore the first (red-sensation) images printed are portrayed in the upper layer of the emulsion coating. The underlying emulsion remains sensitive and is subsequently utilized in printing the green-sensation images from the original negative strip.

When the red-sensation images (those first printed) have been developed, they have next to be toned bluish-green, but this is now accomplished by Mr. Fox in a different manner from that described in his earlier patent. The positive film is, of course, kept in the dark-room after the red-sensation images have been developed and then immersed in a weak bath of acetic acid (to stop development), but need not be chased in Hypo as was done in the methods previously described. The developed red-sensation images are toned to their appropriate blue-green color by a two-solution process which is carried out as follows:

The red-sensation positive images are first bleached in a bath of

Potassium Ferricyanide	1 lb.
Water	10 lbs.
Ammonia (.880)	8 oz.

which turns the black silver image white in from three to five minutes. After washing to remove the bleacher, the film is immersed in a bath containing

Ferric Ammonium Oxalate	1 lb.
Water	10 lbs.
Hydrochloric Acid	4 oz.

The action of this bath is to tone the images to a transparent bluish-green color, after which the film is well washed and dryed prior to being again printed upon from the green-sensation negative. It will be noted that the method of toning the red-sensation images blue-green by the use of two separate solutions constitutes one of the improvements over the earlier procedure, for in this way the precipitation is avoided which takes place when the Ferric salts and the Ferricyanide are mixed together.

Passing now to the treatment of the green-sensation images, these are printed in exact superposition over the previously developed and toned red-sensation images, the positive film having remained in the dark room in the interim between printings. The green-sensation image deposits are next brought out by development, after which the film is fixed and thoroughly washed. It is then immersed in the same bleaching bath that was used for bleaching the red-sensation images, and is also washed to remove traces of the bleaching bath. To impart the requisite red-orange color to the green-sensation image deposits the film is now processed in a bath comprising

Uranium Nitrate	8 oz.
Water	10 lbs.
Hydrochloric Acid	4 oz.

The coloring is complete in about five minutes after which the film may be washed and dryed and is then ready for use.

In the practice of this method it is found that when the green-sensation images (those printed last) are developed, the developing solution decolorizes the bluish-green toned red-sensation images, but in coloring the green-sensation images the color is also restored to the red-sensation images by the acid in the Uranium nitrate bath. Mr. Fox also states that if it is found necessary in order to impart the proper hue to the green-sensation images, a .001 per cent solution of a basic dye of the requisite color may be incorporated with the Uranium toning bath. The Uranium will act as a mordant for the basic red dye, allowing it to combine with the green-sensation deposits of the composite colored images.

Modern Photographic Developers

THE most recent number of that valuable series of photographic monographs, the Photo Miniature, is a treatise on "Modern Photographic Developers," and a copy of this number of the Photo Miniature (No. 167) should be in the hands of every up-to-date photographer.

As the title indicates, "Modern Photographic Developers" consists of an intimate description of the chemical constituency, properties, method of manufacture, and use of the numerous developing reagents which have come upon the market since the outbreak of the war, and in addition Editor Tennant has seen to it that some of the better known pre-war developers are also described. The monograph was prepared by Samuel Wein, B.Sc., who has devoted quite some attention to the chemistry of photographic developers, in recent years.

In the early days of the Camera Department we had occasion to prepare a series of articles on the organic developers, and we can testify, from experience, to the extensive amount of research among photographic and chemical literature which must have been necessary in the compilation of such a complete and thorough treatise as is Photo Miniature No. 167.

The amateur, or lay student of photography, gets a proper start in the study of modern developers through the medium of this little book, because the author, Mr. Wein, starts out from the very fundamentals of organic chemistry, and shows how the various developers originate from the benzene ring.

For the elementary chemistry of the subject it would be hard to improve upon Mr. Wein's text, and the descriptions and working instructions for the developers are also immediately suited to the requirements of the practical photographer.

New York City Statistics on Operator Licenses

According to statistics recently given out by the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity of New York City, the number of operators holding New York City license cards has fallen off to the extent of 149 licensees during the past year, and if reports concerning the probable re-examination of all New York license holders, in the near future, have any foundation in fact, it is likely that the list of New York card holders will be still further reduced to a much greater extent.

The statistics, which will doubtless be of great interest, are as follows:

New York City licenses in force January 1st, 1917	2,114
New York City licenses renewed in 1917	1,888
Applications for license received during 1917	598
Applicants summoned for written test	499
Applicants failed in written test	259
Applicants summoned for practical test	218
Applicants passed the practical test	77
New York City licenses in force January 1st, 1918	1,965

That the New York City examination for operators is a fairly rigorous one is evident from the percentage of applicants who fail to pass the practical test.

E. M. Porter Made Honorary Member of Local 306

AT the last executive board session of Local 306, I. A. T. S. E., held on March 12th, E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, was presented with an honorary membership in the organization, and his membership card was accompanied by a silver card case suitably engraved.

Their action in admitting him to the organization in this honorary capacity is also considered by men closely allied to union circles as a recognition of his efforts, covering many years, to maintain a high standard in the manufacture of moving picture projection machines.

Review of Latest Compositions

1—"The Road to France," by S. Lund. A martial composition with the right spirit—which has obtained the first prize of the National Arts Club, in its war song competition, October 31, 1917. The words for this famous hit have been written by M. D. M. Henderson. (Published by G. Schirmer, New York City.)

2—"Venetian Barcarole," by Ernest S. Golden. A beautiful melody in Venetian style. Adapts itself wonderfully for theme use. The interlude is in minor, permitting the most dramatic musical interpretation. A beautiful number with harp accompaniment. (J. W. Stern, 102 W. 38th street, New York City.)

3—Norman (Waltzes), by Ernest Luz. A long concert waltz with a catchy and melodious introduction. Eight minutes of interesting melody that will be remembered. Just the kind of a number needed to fill the intervals during lengthy neutral descriptive action on the photoplay screen. (J. W. Stern, 102 W. 38th street, New York City.)

4—"Garden of Memories," by F. W. Vandersloot. A Reverie Serenade most appropriate for love themes. (Vandersloot Music Co.)

5—"Blue Rose Waltz" and "Moonlight Waltz," both composed by Fred K. Logan and J. V. Eppel, the writers of the famous "Missouri Waltz"; are now obtainable at special reduced prices from the Forster Music Co., Chicago, Ill.

6—"Suite from the Ballet, Salambo," by H. Arends. In six movements, has been recently orchestrated by Otto Langey. (Published by G. Schirmer, New York City.)

Carl Breil's Collection of Dramatic Music

MR. BREIL has had ten years' experience in active association with Daniel Frohman, Adolph Zukor and D. W. Griffith's, the latter producer of the "Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," two of the largest films ever shown; for both of these productions Mr. Breil arranged and composed the music score. On these facts alone we feel that Carl Breil's collection of dramatic music offers a broader and more musicial conception of film interpretation than any other collections on the market.

The twelve numbers contained in this collection are loose leaf and are indispensable to musicians playing for vaudeville, drama or photoplays. They are arranged that they can be played as a piano or organ solo, or by any orchestral combination either large or small; there is no turning of pages, no searching for the proper number, you arrange the loose sheets just as you want them to follow the act, reel or show, and you have them right there in the spot. This collection is published by Chapel & Co., New York.

War Songs Wanted

Not so much by the publishers are they wanted, as the majority of publishers have plenty, but the public seems to be clamoring for more war songs—war songs that vibrate with fight, optimism and victory. The weepy song, unless a real novelty, does not stand much of a chance these days. Hence it is up to all patriotic musicians to see that they get hold of the snappy war songs regardless of publishers.

Some time ago a feeling became general that the public had become tired of war songs and was looking for a rest from them. Performers, jobbers and dealers felt this way. Then peace songs began to crop up in all parts of the country, and some hold that these were part of the Hun's propaganda, a nice little efficiency scheme to keep the public's mind on peace. However, the plan has become a flivver and a boomerang in the bargain causing a reaction to set in, for according to Washington reports the officials there have heartily approved of plenty of war songs of the proper sort. Keep the public, the soldiers, and all connected with the war keyed up to the proper pitch—keep them on edge and ready to fight; and the best way to do this is to feed them good war songs. Sing them, play and shout them. After the war is over there will be ample time to eulogize the beautiful dove of peace, but it won't be safe to let the dove fly until the vultures waiting to rob it of

Better Music

In accordance with our policy of encouraging the use of better music and more up-to-date selections we are planning to publish from time to time thematics such as those appearing below. Should musicians desire full copies of orchestrations of these selections or any others we will be only too glad, through our Music Department, to secure and mail them at once. Charges for these are—piano copies, 15 cents, and orchestrations, 25 cents, plus postage.

Mr. Exhibitor "How Is Your Music?"

"THE exhibitor who thinks it is not necessary to follow the picture with the proper musical accompaniment is far behind the times. If those who are using the best pictures and not getting the proper results would turn their attention to their musical programs, they would no doubt find where the trouble lies. Many theatres are using a poor class of musicians with a small repertoire, and who play the same thing day in and day out, which does not prove an attraction nor add to the receipts. In other theatres are found the musicians of the old school, who imagine that music in a picture theatre is an entirely different part of the program, and do not appreciate that it is an important part of the entertainment which must synchronize and not conflict temperamentally with the action on the screen.

Many times I have seen good pictures spoiled by inappropriate music. Now the question arises as to the kind of music the exhibitor can use that will give him the best results.

I have been arranging music for the film since its infancy and have had the occasion to come in contact with numerous exhibitors. I have come to the conclusion that the one-man orchestra, if played by a proficient operator is the only means by which an exhibitor can obtain best musical results. The great musical problem that confronts the exhibitor of to-day should be a matter of serious consideration, but instead of studying the situation, exhibitors have gone ahead, without the least bit of thinking, and employed cheap piano players and cheap orchestras. It seems that most exhibitors are concentrating their efforts into one direction—"the orchestra." They all dream of "Rialto," "Strand" and "Rivoli," etc., organizations with high-priced orchestras directed by the best conductors of the country, they seem to forget that even these wonderful and perfect organizations would be a complete failure, in case of a daily or even semi-weekly change of program.

Mr. Exhibitor, the one-man player is the solution of your problem, everyone of them is an orchestra in itself.

I did not write this endeavoring to advertise any instrument, but I believe, as do a great many others who have been fortunate enough to choose the proper music that a "One-Man Player," if properly adapted to the size of the theatre is the only instrument capable of rendering a musical program to the entire satisfaction of your patronage.

There is only one word of warning I would offer to any manager who wishes to employ an instrument of this type. To do it justice, it must have a good performer. In other words, do not economize in the salary of the musician who plays it.

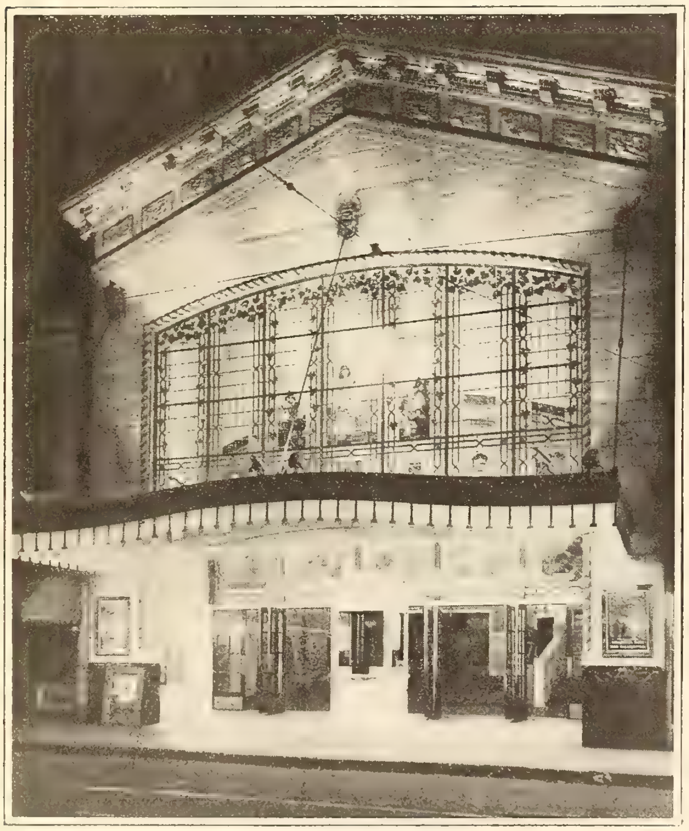
Theatres Worth While

Altoona Strand Nears Anniversary

ON May 29 the Strand theatre, Altoona, Pa., will celebrate the beginning of its third year of successful business. The Strand is owned and managed by Silverman Brothers. It is located at 1512 Eleventh avenue, in the business section of the city.

The building was constructed with an especial care to safety of the patrons and has a lobby 40 by 60 while the auditorium is 60 by 128. It seats 1,600 people. The building is constructed of brick, steel and concrete, the front being in brick decorative effect.

The whole lobby provides entrance to the theatre from Eleventh avenue, through half a dozen double doors. Leading from the lobby on the right are a few steps which give access to the easy incline leading to the balcony. It was the purpose to eliminate steps from the building, but the law of the land made this impossible. There is an elevation of 7 feet on the Sixteenth street side, and this made it necessary to install a few steps. However, there are but fourteen of these, and one may walk from the main entrance on Eleventh avenue to the balcony, by climbing only fourteen steps, each with an easy rise.



Strand Theatre, Altoona, Pa.

The first floor of the theatre, with its 920 seats, presents a most delightful appearance. The decorator has been at his best in his work here, and has provided colorings which are rich without being gaudy. The various color effects are carried out most harmoniously.

The proscenium arch, in which the motion picture screen is installed, is flanked on each side by four boxes, two on each floor, while beautiful paintings over the proscenium are extended around on either side of the balcony. Four loges are also provided, two on each floor, between the boxes and the regular seats.

A magnificent chandelier is suspended from the ceiling, high above the lower floor, and lighting fixtures have been arranged conveniently in all parts of the house.

On the balcony there are 750 seats, and all of them are good seats.

The lighting system of the theatre is indirect and vacuum heating system and exhaust fans are used. Simplex machines throw the picture 120 feet to a Mirror screen. In the lobby there are automatic ticket selling machines while Menger and Ringe display fixtures keep the lobby attractive in appearance.

A Wurlitizer Hope-Jones orchestra is one of the features of the house. It weighs more than six and a half tons and is equivalent in the volume of its tones to an orchestra of twenty-five pieces. Music is one of the many attractive things about the Altoona Strand.

Let Us Know When It Is Ready and We Will Tell You The Data We Want

WE are anxious to print pictures and descriptions of the Worth While theatres in this department—especially the new houses. However, with the present delays that are encountered in the shipment of building materials, it is impossible for us to keep any accurate account of the days for future openings and we invite managers to send in photographs of such new houses, both interior and exterior views, together with description, and we will then send a blank for the additional data that we need.

Established houses which have not been pictured in the NEWS are invited to share these colmuns. This matter is intended not only to give an account of the better houses, no matter the size, but also to give hints which may prove of value in future construction and equipment.

In sending photos be sure to enclose them in cardboard to prevent breakage.

Savoy, Example of the Converted Theatre

IT is not always the case that a comparatively old legitimate playhouse can be converted into a modern moving picture theatre; as was done with the Savoy of San Francisco, Cal. The building dates back to the reconstruction days following the great fire; and no doubt would have been out of service by now had it not fallen into the hands of capable moving picture people, whose insight into business taught them that a magnificent building (while very desirable) is not the most important feature about a modern picture theatre. What they built the reputation of the Savoy on is something too often overlooked by many who design fine theatres—service.

As the cut shows, the exterior of the theatre is attractive, there being a wide lobby with ten doors for entrance and exits and affording opportunity for decoration. The building is constructed on concrete and the front is simple, yet massive.

Looking Toward the Stage of the Savoy Theatre, San Francisco

The interior is tastefully decorated, the ceiling being in panel effects with the indirect lighting system used. The proscenium arch is paneled across the house and creates a pleasing effect. Seats are provided on the lower floor, in two tiers of boxes and in the balcony. It comfortably seats 1,200 people and has a picture 22 by 18 feet (and a good clear steady picture too) at a throw of 125 feet. To produce such a picture at such a throw, the theatre must have the most modern electric equipment obtainable, and it is a real treat to visit the operating room.

There you find two Powers 6 B machines being furnished with a steady flow of direct current from a 5.4 kw. Westinghouse motion picture motor generator set. Just to the rear of the machines is a Westinghouse control panel wired for 110 volt D. C. break down service, thus giving the operator convenient control over the entire equipment. Three 1/6 h. p. Westinghouse motors belted to Albert speed regulators; two Albert arc controls, a Westinghouse automatic moving picture reel transfer system; a rewinder driven by an 1/8 h. p. motor and one Powers two arc dissolver complete the operating room equipment.

One 7½ h. p. inlet and a 3 h. p. exhaust fan keep the place well ventilated and cooled adding greatly to patrons' comfort.

Good pictures, perfectly projected, comfort to patrons is the motto of the Savoy and it is lived up to in every detail. The pleasure of seeing the pictures is blended with the special music from a large photo player organ in such a way that the patrons are sent home with that "come back" feeling instilled into them—and they come back, too.

New Theatre for Scott Circuit

SCOTT circuit which now controls the Apollo theatre for whites and the Dixie theatre for negroes, at Hampton, Va., and the American theatre at Phoebus, Va., announces that the Scott theatre will be opened about the first of July.

The new house will represent an investment of $70,000 and will occupy a space with forty feet frontage and running back 170 feet. There will be two stores in the strong, running back 45 feet and a lobby in the center of the same depth. The stores will be used as ice cream and confectionery parlors by the owners of the theatre. The whole front will be open with the exception of the columns supporting the balcony floor.

The large foyer will provide space for wide steps leading from either side to the balcony where there will be seats for 400. The entire seating capacity, including the 650 seats on the lower floor and the eight boxes will be about 1,200. The stage will be 42 feet wide and 30 feet deep and equipped so as to care for vaudeville and road attractions when desired.

Operating room will be equipped with two Powers 6 B machines, with spotlight, Hallberg's Twentieth Century generator and all the latest appliances. Gold Fiber screen will be used.

George C. Backus, general manager of the circuit, is one of the best known picture men in the South, having been the manager of the Apollo since its construction in 1915. He began his amusement career with the old store shows and ten years ago was operating a motion picture house in Hampton which had ninety camp chairs and a painted sheet for a screen. Mr. Backus has studied the business carefully and that is one of the reasons why he has grown with the industry from its humble beginnings. He contributes his success to having faith in his own ideas and putting them into practice.

Manchester Theatre to Be Greatly Enlarged

STAR THEATRE, Manchester, N. H., is to become one of the largest motion picture houses in New England when the improvements just announced by Manager E. J. Caron are completed. Twenty thousand dollars will be spent in the improvements which will convert the theatre from a 1,094 house to 2,200, making it by far the largest picture house in New Hampshire.

According to reports from Manchester the control of the Auditorium may be taken over by the Star pending the alterations at the latter house.

The increased seating capacity of the Star theatre will be reached, by taking in the entire space of the lobby. This being done the ticket office will be hereafter located on the extreme north end now occupied by toilet rooms. Basement alterations will take care of these and other features heretofore lacking.

It has long been Manager Caron's hope and desire to acquire a large theatre ample in its accommodations to take care of all the people who care to patronize it. The present house is often over-crowded and people on good days are turned away.

Ray E. Means and Frank Draper are contemplating the opening of a new motion picture theatre at Culver City.

Riverside is to have one of the most modern theatres in California. It is said that C. L. Nye, owner of the Loring theatre, and Howe and Merrill, owners of the Regent and Orpheum theatres, will enter into a contract for the rebuilding of the Loring theatre with a view of increasing the seating capacity to 1,100. The old playhouse will be converted into one of the most modern and up-to-date theatres in California.

J. E. Triguerio, of Medocino, has partitioned off his store building for the purpose of providing a hall for moving pictures in the rear half of the same. Ray Valentine has been doing the carpentry work and painting which is nearly completed. Mr. Triguerio plans to give his first picture exhibition on Easter. He will show Triangle pictures.

ILLINOIS

With the intention of erecting thereon a spacious and strictly modern theatre, Tony Serra this week purchased of Harry Colean a lot immediately west of the latter's garage on East Douglas street, Pawnee. The contemplated structure is to be of brick, 30 x 105 feet, with a seating capacity of 400. The plans provide for a fireproof building, with complete ventilating system and other appointments essential to a modern amusement house. In order that the building may meet the requirements of a community house, Mr. Serra has also included a well-equipped stage. He has already placed an order for comfortable opera chairs and a new orchestra piano, the best instrument of its kind to be obtained.

To head off an agitation to permit the opening of the moving picture theatres on Sunday. Rev. J. E. Osborn, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Carlenville, has introduced "movies" in connection with the Sunday evening services.

INDIANA

The old Family theatre, at Indiana Harbor, which has been dark for many moons, has been reopened under the management of Gus Berkson, its former manager. The whole building has been renovated and newly decorated.

R. A. Shobe reopened the New Grand theatre at Wolcott last week with "The Rose of Blood," a Fox feature.

F. H. Gruneberg, Jr., is authority for the statement that the new Terre Haute theatre will be completed on schedule time, and should be ready for its opening on May 1.

KANSAS

Wichita will soon have a $100,000 vaudeville and motion picture house, as plans for it have been made by the incorporators: W. D. Jochems and C. C. McCollister, of that city, and J. H. Cooper and E. D. McKeever, of Topeka.

J. G. Tinsdale, of the Elite, Baxter Springs, has leased a plot of ground at the corner of Military avenue and Cedar street, and will erect a big Airdome thereon as soon as plans are perfected and material is put on the ground. Mr. Tinsdale is planning to put on the best features to be obtained, including vaudeville, musical comedy and up-to-the-minute pictures. Particulars will be given in these columns as plans are developed, but Baxter Springs is assured of a summer playhouse second to none in this section of the country.

KENTUCKY

The Woodruff theatre, Murray, is to be remodeled, more seating capacity, larger and modern entrance and an up-to-date picture house made of it. An effort will be made to keep the show going and repair work at the same time. The new management took charge last week.

MASSACHUSETTS

The new Strand theatre, Fall River, was opened last week. It is an imposing structure and cost $75,000.

MISSOURI

The new theatre being erected by Friend and Riley at Springfield will be ready for opening next week. It has a seating capacity of 550.

MONTANA

Peter Arena has purchased from E. L. Geddes a piece of property at Whitefish, formerly owned by the city and occupied by the city hall upon which he intends to erect a building suitable for the showing of motion pictures.

NEW MEXICO

The new Majestic theatre, at Deming, was opened last week to capacity business. William Menhennet has installed a five-piece orchestra to furnish suitable music. The Majestic theatre is replete with every convenience that can be embodied in a building of this kind. On the ground floor there are seats for 750 people, and the pitch of the floor guarantees a clear view of the stage to every person in the house. The back part of the floor is at least six feet higher than the front, and there is no danger of the spectators having to crane their necks to see around the people in front of them. The loge boxes can be roped off to accommodate parties of twelve or less, and the boxes will seat fifty people. The proscenium arch has a width of twenty-eight feet, and the stage is large enough to permit the presentation of the most ambitious offerings that are traveling to-day. Rising from the stage are three tiers of dressing rooms, and there is also a fly gallery, a painting bridge and a gridiron where the scenery that is not in use can be raised out of sight without having to be rolled. Three ventilators in the ceiling and a battery of big fans keep the air pure, and the electric lighting is the latest kind of indirect system, for which the fixtures were all ordered specially for the Majestic. On the stage there is the most modern electrical equipment for furnishing the lights needed during the performances, and another outfit in the fireproof operating room at the back of the house provides the spotlights at all times. A ladies' rest room with all conveniences is another feature of the house, and everything that can make for the comfort and safety of the patrons of the Majestic has been provided.

WASHINGTON

Lewis Starr is erecting a one-story tile building, 30 x 80 feet in size, on a prominent location on Second street, Washougal, which he recently purchased from Dr. F. C. Price. The building will have an attractive brick front and will be modern in every way. When completed it will be used as a moving picture thefatre.

Seattle's newest picture house, the Flag theatre, at 1413 First avenue near Union, was opened to the public last week, under the management of J. A. Reed.

WISCONSIN

The Lyric theatre, Waupaca, will be reopened to the public about the middle of April, carpenters, plasterers and decorators by then having remodeled the theatre, so that it would hardly be known by former patrons. There will be 280 seats in the new theatre, and the operator will "shoot" from the fireproof cage placed on the right hand of the entrance doors. The theatre will be tastefully decorated and otherwise improved, Chas. Cohen is the owner.

its freedom have been forced to take the count by a few good healthy wallops from the Yanks who will tackle the job while singing regular American war songs with plenty of "pep."

"Darling I'm Kissing Your Photograph because There's No Sugar in the Trenches" is not the kind of a war song that the public or soldiers care to hear just at present. When soldiers wish to dream of home they have the old time ballads that won't desert them, and which mean so much, as well as letters, souvenirs, and pictures. Give them songs like "Over There," "Faugh-A-Ballagh," "It's a Long Way to Berlin," "We'll Follow Pershing Into Old Berlin," "Long Boy," and others.

The Oakland Tribune, Oakland, Calif., ran a feature story on March 7, by Herman Whitaker, the well known war correspondent now in France. The article was headed by the chorus of "Faugh-A-Ballagh," published by the Forster Music Co., and then went on to say in the first three paragraphs:

"'Faugh-A-Ballagh' is the Celtic word for 'clear the way.'

"When General Byng smashed through the Hindenburg lines with his tanks the Irish boys of his division went into battle to the tune of this new battle hymn of the trenches.

"When Farragut shouted his famous order from the shrouds of his ship at Mobile he meant practically the same thing as the Irish boys did when they sang 'Faugh-A-Ballagh" when they drove the wedge into the lines which the Germans claimed could never be broken through."

The story in the Tribune simply shows the kind of songs that soldiers select to sing when they are about to start a drive, and it is this very type of songs that keeps them keyed up while they are getting in trim for the front line trenches, whether they happen to be in this country or France. So if you wish to keep the spirit of victory alive play and sing good war songs whenever you have an opportunity.

"The World will make a beaten path to his door."

That's what Elbert Hubbard said would happen if a man built a better Projector than his neighbor.

As a matter of fact, he didn't say Projector, but Mousetrap; but he might just as well have said Projector.

Anyway, Hubbard sometimes overlooked vital things. For instance, he didn't say a word about telling the World of your better Projector.

That's a serious shortcoming, for the World would know nothing of it. It wouldn't even know where your door was; so how could it wear a beaten path to your door?

But all joking aside, you can't blame us for taking that little remark of Hubbard's to ourselves.

We build the Simplex; it is better; we tell the World about it; the World agrees with us; and now you ought to see the path to our door! (Figuratively speaking, of course.)

Really, it's getting "worse and worse." Again we added thousands of dollars' worth of equipment, and for all that, we've got to work day and night to keep up with the demand.

Nowadays you hardly ever hear of a good House opening up with anything but Simplexes. No wonder; who wants to take chances when he can have a sure thing?

By the way, the million-dollar Grand in Pittsburg, the Grauman in Los Angeles, and the Knickerbocker in New York, showing Gerard's Four Years in Germany, none of these wanted to take chances. Like most others, they preferred to take the Simplex.

There can be only one reason why more and more Exhibitors want the Simplex

IN "OVER THE TOP" Vitagraph scores the greatest scoop in the history of the industry. "Over the Top" comes to the screen with overwhelming success absolutely guaranteed. With it no such element as risk or gamble exists. "Over the Top" is BOX-OFFICE INSURANCE ITSELF. It is a destroyer of losses, a creator of unheard of profits.

No personality has so deeply gripped the American people as its war hero, Sergeant Empey; nor has any book been so universally read as "Over the Top." With the possible exception of President Wilson, no other American has received a scintilla of the enormous volume of newspaper publicity that has been accorded to the "fighting sergeant."

At a conservative estimate, twenty-five millions of people have read "Over the Top," likewise Empey's special articles, or heard his lectures and patriotic appeals. This means that the whole American people, most of whom have relatives, friends or acquaintances in training here or in France, want to know the story of "Over the Top," that they want to see "over there."

"Over the Top" tells them that story as they want to know it and see it. As a photo production alone it is a supreme achievement, and in addition it is one of the most thrilling, intensely dramatic, deeply human stories ever screened.

The unanimous desire of America is to know. "Over the Top" is its fulfillment.

Four Tremendous Publicity Drives to Put You "OVER THE TOP"

First: G. P. Putnam's Sons, the publishers of Empey's books, are carrying Empey advertising to the four corners of the continent. "Over the Top" is the most widely read and talked of book in America, the most successful book of its kind in all history.

250 copies per hour—more than four a minute—for every business hour since publication—is the amazing selling record of "Over the Top."

Second: More than 1200 of the leading newspapers of the country have published or are now running "Over the Top" in serial form or a series of special articles by Empey. This list includes such newspapers as the New York Journal, New York World, New York Tribune, Brooklyn Eagle, Chicago Examiner, Chicago Post, Philadelphia Bulletin, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Boston Post, Baltimore Sun, Cleveland Leader, Cleveland Plain Dealer, Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph, Pittsburgh Gazette-Times, Detroit News-Tribune, Buffalo Courier, Buffalo Times, San Francisco Examiner, Newark Ledger, New Orleans Item, New Orleans Times Picayune, Washington Herald, Washington Star, Los Angeles Tribune-Express, Minneapolis Tribune, Jersey City Journal, Kansas City Post, Seattle Times, Indianapolis Star, Louisville Herald, Denver News-Times, Portland Telegram, Toledo Blade, Atlanta Constitution, Oakland Tribune, Syracuse Herald, Syracuse Post-Standard, New Haven Times-Leader, Birmingham News, Memphis News-Scimiter, Richmond Times-Dispatch, Paterson News, Omaha World-Herald, Dayton Sunday News, Nashville Tennesseean, Nashville American, Spokane Spokesman-Review, Bridgeport Post, Bridgeport Standard-American, Albany Argus, Salt Lake City Herald Republican, Salt Lake City Tribune, etc., etc.

Third: Empey has set the most remarkable record as a lecturer. He has jammed Carnegie Hall, New York, seven times. He has addressed overflow audiences in the largest auditoriums all over the country, notably Orchestra Hall, Chicago, on five occasions, Symphony Hall, Boston, Carnegie Hall, Pittsburgh, Music Fund Hall, Cincinnati, Academy of Music, Philadelphia, etc., etc.

Through his personal appeals, he has sold more than $1,011,000.00 worth of bonds in the Second Liberty Loan Campaign; he has raised over $50,000.00 for Smoke Funds, Red Cross Benefits and similar patriotic causes.

Fourth: For many weeks Vitagraph has been carrying on an intensive publicity campaign for the picture, "Over the Top," and this is now crowned by a national billboard campaign of far reaching proportions and effectiveness. These four separate distinct, yet perfectly coordinated campaigns have been working for you. They have built as no publicity campaign has ever builded.

"Moving Pictures produced to order on a Cost plus a fixed fee basis."

OUR advertisement of two weeks ago meant precisely what it said.

We are ready to undertake the production of " special order " pictures on a basis of cost plus an agreed fee.

Beyond this point, we have no desire to share in the profits.

The negative and all the prints and rights are the absolute property of the man or woman who ordered the work and paid the bill—be he Star or " producer."

On the other hand—we are not merely renting studio space.

Our vast establishment at Culver City is operated and kept at the top notch of efficiency by a great organization. Its property rooms and properties, wardrobe and manufacturing departments render a service far beyond the price we charge.

No plant less completely equipped—less expertly manned—can, in the nature of things, render a producing service anything like as adequate and as " high-speed."

Stars who have felt themselves handicapped by the restrictions incident to the production of pictures to fit into a series with other stars; producers who have found the adequate equipment of studios for a single picture disproportionately expensive—will welcome this offer of broad facilities.

Our departments of publicity and poster-making are also available when desired.

Distribution throughout the world may be arranged on outright purchase or percentage basis with allied interests.

TRIANGLE

A Far Flung Battle Line

TRIANGLE'S far-flung line reaches from Maine to California.

Thousands of TRIANGLE exhibitors stand shoulder to shoulder in the great battle for prosperity and profits.

An impressive exhibition of the success of a Policy.

A policy of frankness, of square methods, of economy, of quality pictures; a policy designed first and last to insure the permanent success and welfare of the exhibitor.

Consider the advantages of TRIANGLE exhibitors—the " men at the front."

TRIANGLE has relieved the exhibitor of the war tax.

TRIANGLE has placed the price of pictures on such a fair and moderate basis that any exhibitor can make money on TRIANGLE pictures.

This price advantage is in part due to the elimination of the enormously burdensome " star " salary extortions:

to the destruction of waste in production and distribution;—
to the elimination of cut-throat competition;—
to the TRIANGLE policy of endeavoring to make each and every TRIANGLE exhibitor a success.

TRIANGLE

The gambling element in the picture business is a thing of the past on the TRIANGLE battle line.

How about "picture quality?"

The TRIANGLE studios are turning out productions of the highest quality and pictures that show PROFITS to exhibitors. Ask any TRIANGLE exhibitor what these late pictures have done for him:—"Until They Get Me," "Indiscreet Corinne," "Real Folks," "Limousine Life," "Keith of the Border," "The Shoes That Danced," "Little Red Decides," and "The Sea Panther."

TRIANGLE exhibitors are successful. The ranks are solid and unshakeable. The battle for prosperity and PROFITS goes merrily on, with new territory constantly being added. There are no pessimists, knockers, gloom-chasers, or woe-wrestlers in TRIANGLE forces.

The Prophet And the Profits

W. W. Hodkinson—Prophet

For years this keen pioneer has prophesied that the motion picture industry must do away with producer-domination. His twentieth century imagination has thought out the way to the ideal arrangement.

W. W. Hodkinson KNOWS every phase of the motion picture industry; particularly the problems of the exhibitor—for he has been one himself. Already several leading exhibitors, whom you know personally or by reputation, have joined him in the Hodkinson Copartnership Plan.

The Profits

Hodkinson Copartnership makes YOU—the exhibitor—a partner in the local exchange corporation in your territory, as well as the central office of the management. By means of this copartnership between you and the central office, the larger part (approximately 70 per cent.) of the distributing profit goes to YOU, instead of going to the producer.

A man with vision has opened up the avenue to greater profits for you. Displaying similar foresight, will you join him?

A NEW EXHIBITOR COOPERATION and ITS DEFINITE ADVANTAGES to YOU

W.W.HODKINSON

DISTRIBUTION PROFITS PLACED where they BELONG

You—the Exhibitor—can now share in approximately 70% of the distribution profits

Through the

Hodkinson Copartnership Plan

MASTER BUILDER, W. W. HODKINSON has at last developed the ideal co-ordination between the producer, the distributor, and YOU —the exhibitor.

The plan is concrete, definite, logical. Evolved by a former exhibitor, it is the natural, ideal arrangement for you. Doubtless it carries out ideas you have had in mind ever since you have been an exhibitor. The plan is a broad-sweeping departure. It is NEW. W. W. Hodkinson will not drive in a rut!

Here are 7 specific reasons why the Hodkinson Copartnership Plan deserves your interest; why it must prompt your immediate investigation:

1. It makes you a partner in the local distributing exchange. It provides a service of Quality only, and assures you productions of determinable box-office value, fair treatment, and a liberal profit margin.
2. Protects you against inferiority of product resulting from producer domination.
3. Freedom from producer-control assures an "open-door" for Quality products from any source.
4. Safeguards you, once and for all, against unfair competition and unfair prices.
5. Effects economies in distribution expense by keeping down the high cost of overhead which exists in other organizations, and which contributes so materially to your high cost of rentals.
6. Cures the so-called "deposit evil."
7. Takes the distribution out of the control of distributing agencies, OWNED AND GOVERNED BY PRODUCERS, and passes on to YOU a fair share of the distribution profits. ("The Prophet and the Profits," on the opposite page, give you the FACTS. Be sure to read it!)

Applied to your own theatre, the Hodkinson Copartnership Plan for bigger, better business will build up your prestige, and increase your profits.

We have only attempted to give you a brief outline in this announcement, as we desire to send you ALL the facts and figures in a CONFIDENTIAL LETTER. Let us send them without delay, for the sooner you investigate the quicker you will profit. Tear out this page NOW so you won't forget to write. Just say "Send all the facts about the Hodkinson Copartnership Plan." Do not put off writing, for each day you delay represents a LOSS to you. Write or wire immediately.

Devil Fish Demonstrate "Frightfulness"

For sheer sinister deviltry nothing could surpass the fight between an octopus and his victims, a devil fish and a huge loggerhead turtle, which forms the dramatic—or, rather, the melodramatic climax of the first reel of a new series of marine pictures called "The Depths of the Sea." Swimming lazily by means of his curious flapper feet, Mr Turtle ventures just too near the rock under which the huge octopus lurks. A long, waving arm wriggles up, then another, and the hapless turtle seems doomed But he pulls and struggles manfully, till a last jerk sets him free Even more exciting is the fight between the octopus and an aggressive devil fish, which looks like a death grapple of sixteen legs in hopeless confusion. This time, however, the octopus is the first to cry quits and retreats "like an umbrella in a wind storm."

Preceding these fine scenes are glimpses of queer creatures that with their transparent, waving fins and filaments are veritable "skirt dancers", of the sea hare, who covers his retreat by a thick cloud, and the smoking caterpillar," who literally "gases the enemy" by ejecting puffs of an acrid poison

Octopus, Devil Fish and Sea Turtle Give Fine Exhibition of Pugilistic Accomplishments in First of Series.

ONE OF the most interesting of zoological films which has recently been exhibited was seen at the Strand Theater New York City, during the week of March 10. It constituted one reel of film and belonged to a series photographed by Raymond L. Ditmars, entitled "The Depths of the Sea." Closeups of the Devil Fish and of the Octopus are intensely interesting. These unlovely creatures are seen in deadly battle, after which one of them attacks a sea turtle and drags it to the very doors of its cave before being obliged to relinquish its hold We are also privileged to see this same turtle feeding glutinously on small fish which it severs easily with the sharp edges of its jaws

The next number of this series will deal with the electric fish, one of the most remarkable of sea freaks

"Little Talks with Foreign Buyers"—No. 7

By Paul H Cromelin

President

"SPEERTALK"

I HAVE laid much stress in previous " Talks " on the fact that the foreign picture patron was discriminating. He wants to see THE BEST films on the screen, and along with his demand for top-notch films is a desire to see them properly projected. Inter-Ocean doesn't fool itself into believing that any sort of projection goes in foreign cinema shows. Because it doesn't so fool itself, it took over the foreign distribution of the SPEER CARBON last year. The sale was slight at first. But we weren't discouraged because we knew what good projection meant in the foreign territories. We know that prospective foreign buyers of SPEER CARBONS were waiting to " be shown." And we knew that the SPEER would show them in due time. Well, the other week we had the keen pleasure of shipping 25,000 SPEER CARBONS to Argentine; 50,000 to South Africa; 50,000 to England; 30,000 to France; 32,000 to India; 20,000 to Peru and Chile; 20,000 to China; and 18,000 to the Dutch East Indies. At the same time Spain and Portugal were " closed " for a minimum of 250,000 a year! It will pay foreign buyers to send a sample shipment of SPEER CARBONS to their territories; it will win them friends amongst exhibitors and picture-goers.

Worth Fighting For?

SHALL this little girl grow up in the sort of American home we know, healthy and happy? Shall she have the advantage of living and learning in a free land, under free institutions? Shall such children develop into Liberty-loving citizens that a free America may be proud of?

For over two hundred years Americans have fought valiantly, and died gallantly, to win for themselves and hand down to their posterity the blessings of liberty, justice, self-government and equal opportunity. This precious heritage, bought at so great a price, is now threatened.

The question which today confronts America as a nation, and you as an individual, is whether or not a free America is worth fighting for

Are American children in this and all future generations to receive unimpaired the legacy of freedom of which we are now the custodians, or shall their country be turned over bodily to the brutal, rapacious, power-mad enemy which has forced us into this war?

This question cannot be answered by word of mouth, but by deeds alone.

Let your answer be your investment in Liberty Bonds!

Metro Pictures Corporation

subscribes with all its earnestness to this patriotic principle and urges the full co-operation of the Motion Picture Industry with the Liberty Loan Committee.

How Much of Your Pay Do You Think You Can Keep if Germany Wins This War?

If, to help America win this war, you buy to the very limit of your ability you are not merely helping America. You are not merely making a good investment. You are not merely helping to bring peace nearer. You are doing all these things, and in addition you are buying the best protection for your own individual prosperity—yes, the only real protection you can buy.

Universal Support of the Government is loyalty and patriotism and besides—if Uncle Sam is not victorious in this war there will be mighty little profit in business for U. S.—Autocracy is a close collector.

What will become of you and yours if these protectors are weakened and rendered insufficient to their task?

They will not be defeated by the enemy.

The only way they can be defeated or weakened is through your failure to support them with ships, food, weapons, ammunitions, clothing and supplies.

Your life, your business, the future of your family, may depend upon how much real effort and sacrifice you make to invest in

Liberty Bonds

In utilizing this advertisement to talk Liberty Bonds rather than our own business, we do so in the firm belief that there will be little of either pleasure or profit in our business or any American business unless Liberty wins this war.

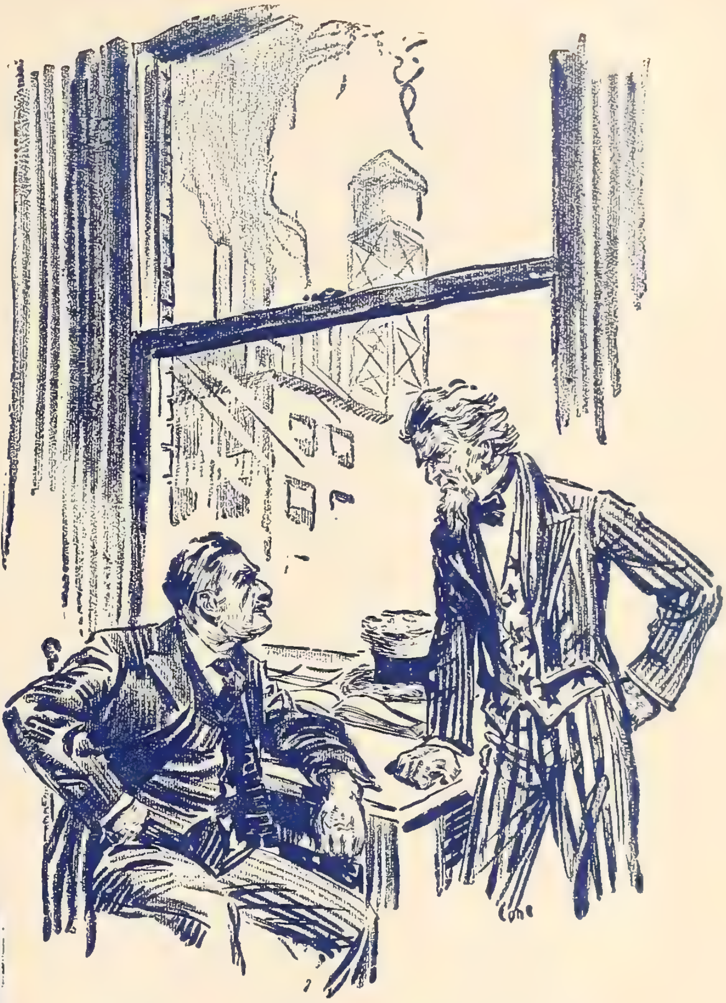
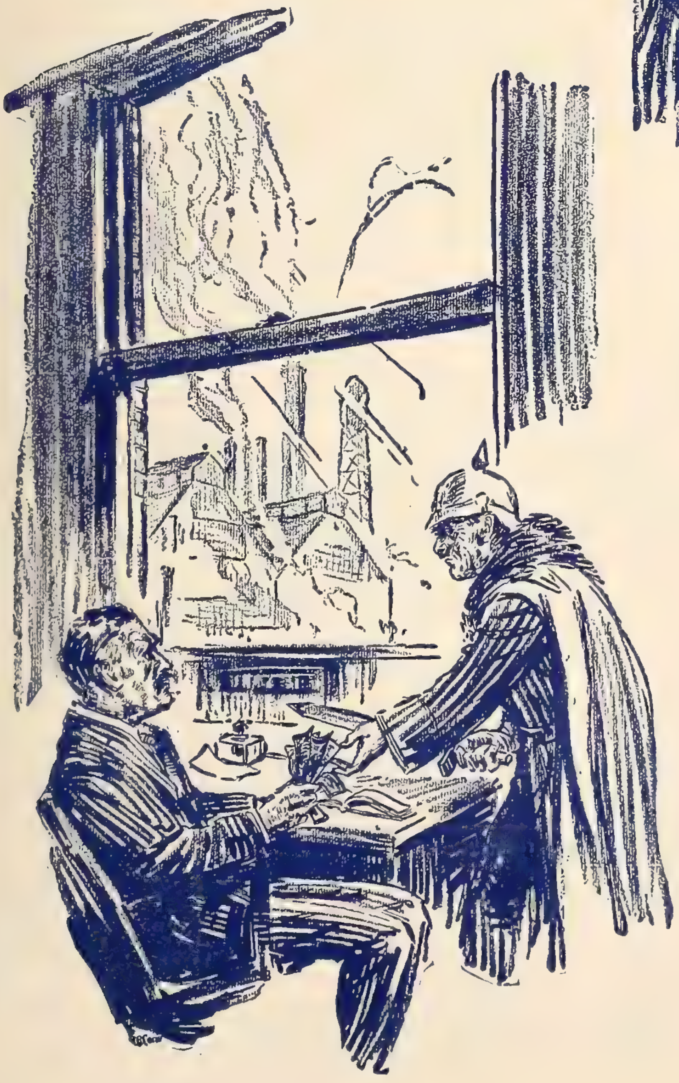
Will You Invest Your Money With Uncle Sam Now?



Or Let Germany Take It Away From You Later?



Be practical. Look squarely at the facts. We will either invest our money with Uncle Sam now, at good interest rates, to help him win this war, or we will give it up later to pay Germany's war cost—and as much more as Germany chooses to collect. Invest in

An official photograph of the club which is used to "finish off" wounded Italian soldiers. 32,000 of these were recently captured by the Italians.

The Destruction of Civilization is in grim and sober reality what we are fighting this war to prevent. The club pictured above—from an actual official photograph—might be the weapon of a savage cave man of five thousand years ago. It is in fact the weapon with which German soldiers "finish off" enemy wounded who have fallen on the battlefield.

There is only one answer to make to such methods—the defeat of the German armies. America has taken up the sword to give that answer. Our army is in France to help win this war on the battlefield—that civilization may be safe, that America may be safe.

You Can Have Your Share in America's Answer to German Savagery

The Third Liberty Loan is your opportunity. It is the most direct blow that can be struck at German military supremacy. It is the most powerful aid that can be given our soldiers in France. It means rifles and helmets and gas-masks—the best protection for our men from German brutality. It means big guns and shells and airplanes—and VICTORY.

Invest today in bonds of the Third Liberty Loan, and save the lives of American soldiers.

THRIFT requires the exercise of restraint and self-denial—qualities without which you cannot achieve the success in life which it is your ambition to achieve, and for the lack of which you are likely to suffer in later years.

The money you acquire by thrift you are asked to loan—not give—to your country. It will come back to you when you may need it far more than you do now, and you will be paid interest for its use.

This war is a frightful thing, but it may prove of inestimable benefit to you, if it teaches you the good habit of thrift. Start the habit by investing in

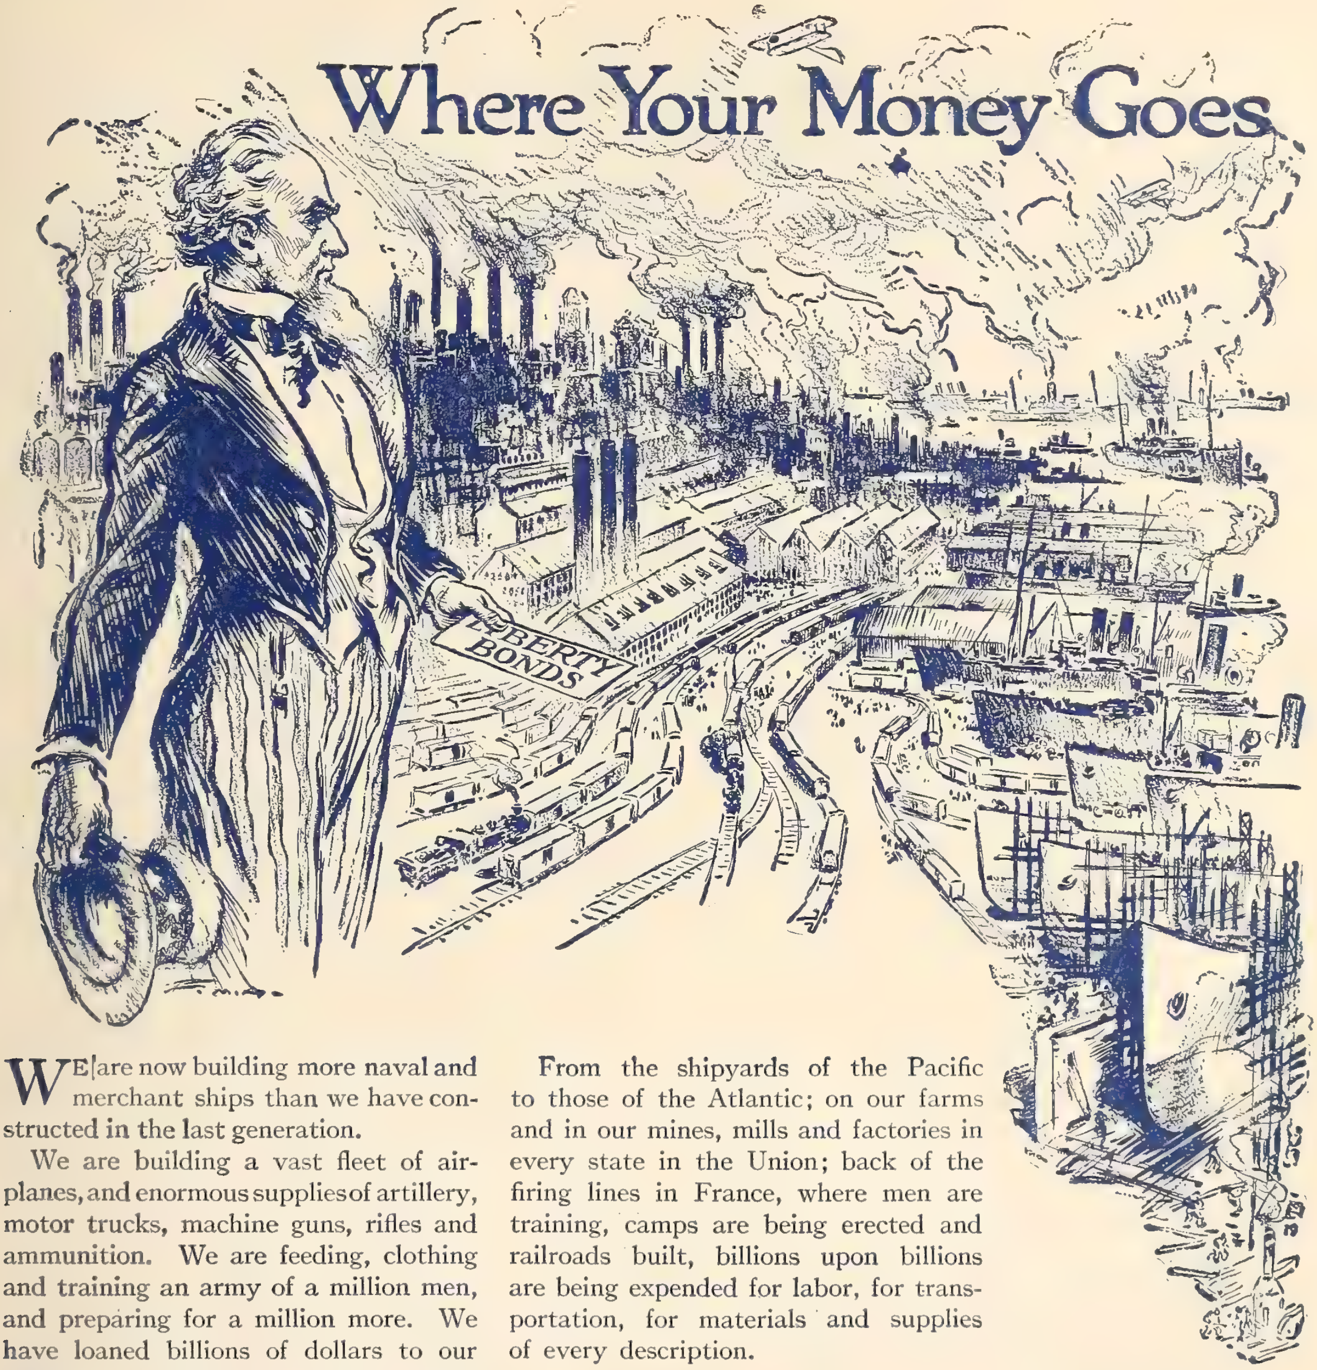
Where Your Money Goes



WE are now building more naval and merchant ships than we have constructed in the last generation.

We are building a vast fleet of airplanes, and enormous supplies of artillery, motor trucks, machine guns, rifles and ammunition. We are feeding, clothing and training an army of a million men, and preparing for a million more. We have loaned billions of dollars to our allies to be spent in the United States.

From the shipyards of the Pacific to those of the Atlantic; on our farms and in our mines, mills and factories in every state in the Union; back of the firing lines in France, where men are training, camps are being erected and railroads built, billions upon billions are being expended for labor, for transportation, for materials and supplies of every description.

The mind can hardly conceive the sums of money required for our war preparations. Yet these expenditures are absolutely essential. We must win the war quickly if possible; we must carry it on for years if necessary. We must do the job with American thoroughness, let the cost be what it may.

Remember, when you invest in your Liberty Bonds, that there is immediate, urgent, imperative need for every dollar you can possibly spare.

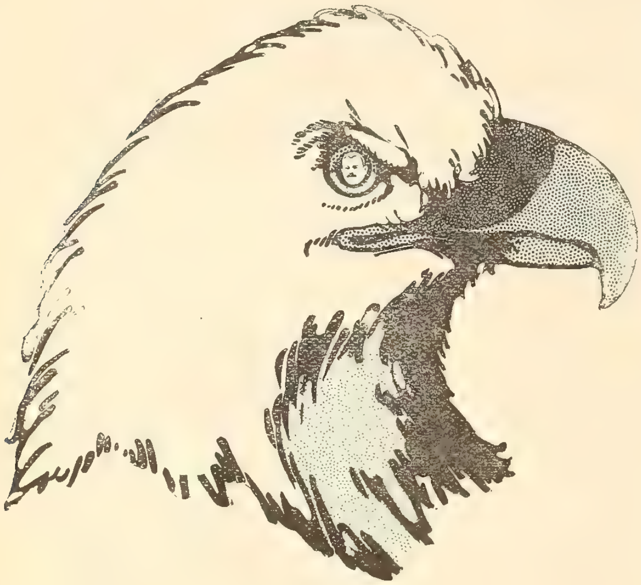
SELLING "THE EAGLE'S



MR. PHELPS SASSEEN, manager of the Anderson Theatre, Anderson, S. C., is a practical retailer of motion pictures.

He is a salesman of real ability. He knows his profit is not alone in merely booking pictures and showing them. He sells his pictures to the public of Anderson.

This slight tribute is not given because he booked "The Eagle's Eye." That was a matter of business judgment.

But because he made "The Eagle's Eye" pay him a mighty handsome profit on his rental investment.

How and what he did is worth the attention of every exhibitor.

Anderson has a population of 9,600. Mr. Sasseen showed the first episode of "The Eagle's Eye" to 2,011 persons. Twenty per cent of the total population.

That is a record.

He knew that "The Eagle's Eye" was a special production. He analyzed further. He handled it as a special. And the results on every episode shown are bigger profits than he believed possible.

He told the people of Anderson just what you and every other exhibitor has been told in trade journal advertising for "The Eagle's Eye."

He told them it was a special production. That it had a tremendous theme. That it was a stirring revelation of the facts of Imperial Germany's spies and plots in America.

That Chief Flynn was the author. That no man in America knows more about the Kaiser's spy army here than Chief Flynn. That Chief Flynn's work, pictured so vividly in "The Eagle's Eye," has made him a figure of international importance.

He made the public of Anderson realize that "The Eagle's Eye" was so unusual, so different from the usual interpretation of a serial, so vastly superior to anything else he could offer, that they came to see.

He had successfully merchandised "The Eagle's Eye."

The admissions, 2,011 of them, flowed into Mr. Sasseen's box office in one day.. "The Eagle's Eye" satisfied every claim he had made for it.

You can make "The Eagle's Eye" just as successful for yourself. It is a subject that is popular everywhere.

You can realize better than an average return by just booking and showing it. Give each episode the usual lobby display, a couple of announcement slides, and you will get splendid returns. But if you want a maximum profit, treat "The Eagle's Eye" for what it is—a special production.

That does not require extra effort for you. It simply needs a different attitude than you have for the ordinary features and serials you book.

Everything for you to work with is prepared and immediately available. Book "The Eagle's Eye," and sell it to your patrons as a special. It is bringing other exhibitors surprising returns. It will do the same for you.

Following is a list of advertising and publicity matter, prepared and ready for you.

Six styles of one column, illustrated teaser cuts.

Four styles of one column, illustrated text cuts.

One three column, illustrated ad, climaxing the single column cuts.

A stock twenty-four sheet, from a design by Fuertes, the world's greatest ornithological artist. (These sheets are supplied to you, free.)

Stock one sheets, two styles.

One, three and six sheets on each episode.

EYE" TO YOUR PUBLIC

Stock 22 x 28 sepia and colored photos of King Baggot and Marguerite Snow.

A set of 11 x 14 lobby display photos, both in sepia and colors, for each episode.

A slide of Chief Flynn, a stock announcement slide and a new "coming" slide for each episode.

A five color, lithographed window card, 22 x 14, with the same design as the twenty-four sheet.

A heavy, canvas waterproof banner, in four colors, for use on each episode. Built of materials that will withstand twenty weeks of any kind of weather.

5 x 7 four page, rotogravure heralds for each episode.

Buttons for "The Order of the Eagle's Eye," an exceptionally practical novelty judging by orders for several hundred thousand already received from exhibitors.

A magic X-ray novelty, fascinating because it is mysterious.

Four stock one column publicity cuts for newspaper use.

Four stock two column publicity cuts for newspaper use.

Two styles of single and double column newspaper cuts of Chief Flynn.

Three styles of two column newspaper cuts for publicity work on each episode.

A special press sheet for each episode.

Music cues for each episode.

Use this exceptional supply of practical advertising and publicity material to tell your patrons that "The Eagle's Eye" is a special production, too big, too tremendous, too vital and startling in its astounding revelations to be missed by one of them.

YOU WILL GET ESPECIALLY BIG RETURNS FROM THIS BIG SPECIAL PRODUCTION IN TWENTY CHAPTERS ONLY BY HANDLING IT AS A SPECIAL—NOT AS A REGULAR, ORDINARY RELEASE.

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 17. No. 15 April 13, 1918

Tomorrow and Today

"IN ten years from now," says an advertising expert, in whose judgment we have much faith, "the motion picture will be the most heavily advertised commodity in the world."

No other commodity is used so widely and so often.

No other commodity so lends itself to popular advertising.

Good pictures are obviously demanded by the millions, and national advertising will bring the millions to good pictures.

There it is in a nutshell!

The motion picture will be the most heavily advertised commodity in the world. And, in our belief, it won't take ten years, nor even five years to arrive at this very important commercial development.

Important it is—and inevitable.

Worth while waiting for—and being patient about. But —particularly—worth while preparing for.

* * * *

JUST now the frequent change of pictures is against the advertising of them. In order to direct people where to go and get something good, you've got to be sure that the goods will be there.

On the one hand today you have, in pictures, something that everyone wants; and on the other, you have in advertising a tremendous force which will bring pictures and the public together; but holding both apart today is the scheme of shooting pictures out and into oblivion faster than the published word can tell of them.

But this is changing. The correct order—of fewer pictures, better pictures, longer runs—is fast approaching.

And when this order is here, and national advertising gets its grip upon so potentially a nationally desired commodity—then look out.

Look out for a change in the making and selling of pictures that the present can give little idea of.

In the meantime, however—and right now—much can be done toward the better advertising of pictures. Much money can be saved; much more money can be earned.

* * * *

LET us take the trade advertising of pictures alone.

There are several big fallacies today in trade advertising.

One is that pictures should be ballyhooed to the trade.

Another is that advertising pages in trade papers are bought to gain access to the reading pages in the supine belief that statements made therein go out with the paper's own backing for their veracity.

A third is the belief that the maker's interest in pictures ends with their rental to the exhibitor.

Pictures should be merchandized, not circused. And they can be merchandized—quite successfully—even today.

Take, for instance, one of the big, special pictures.

THE present policy is simply one of sustained boastfulness. First comes the announcement; then the opinion of the New York press (meaning little to the exhibitor, by the way, since there isn't a competent reviewer of pictures on a single New York daily); then the announcement of the opinion of the trade press reviewers (already known to the exhibitor); then announcement of bookings, etc., etc.

In the meantime the early run houses have the picture. A special picture, to be put over, to get the money, must be specially advertised. A plan book, containing complete advertising aids, has undoubtedly been prepared and sent broadcast, at much expense and to several thousand exhibitors in excess of those who will book the picture.

Why not use the trade paper advertising pages—after the announcement has been made—to advertise this very material? Why not stop circusing the picture and get right down to merchandizing it? Why not—at the earliest moment—jump in and help the exhibitor resell his picture—your picture still—to the public?

Trade papers advertising pages are for merchandizing, not ballyhooing. It's about time ballyhooing ceased; and it's about time merchandizing began. The exhibitor is sick and tired of the one, and he is mighty anxious to have the other help his box office receipts.

* * * *

IF a trade paper is what it should be, it maintains an effective and economical avenue between the maker and exhibitor of pictures. Let this avenue be used for what it can best do, namely the cooperative merchandizing—manufacturer to exhibitor—exhibitor to public—of motion pictures.

Speaking Editorially:

What is Your Guaranty?

IN view of the meeting of producers and exhibitors called for April 8th at the Hotel Astor to consider ways and means of business co-operation, it may be well to reiterate our views on exhibitors' booking circuits as published editorially in the March 16th issue.

In considering any plan he (the exhibitor) must consider these points:

First, the integrity, ability and experience of the executives behind the plan. He is in effect making these men his business partners. He should consider them in this practical light.

Secondly, he ought to investigate the history of co-operative dealers' movements in this country and abroad—their success or failure and the reasons therefor.

He will have to decide whether or not it is safe and businesslike for production and exhibition to be placed in the same hands.

Thirdly, and this is of the utmost importance, he must consider the matter of product.

We need not tell you—the exhibitor—what product means to you.

Product means pictures. Pictures are your attraction—for the public. What the public wants you must give them if you are to fill your seats.

Any number of plans will promise good pictures. In fact, all plans will naturally proceed upon the ready-made assumption that the pictures proposed will be the kind you want,—and secondly, as many as you want.

But what guaranty have you? What is going to assure you enough and enough good pictures? That is the point for you to consider.

And there is also the related question: What service will you get with the picture?

Two factors stand out above everything else.

What guaranty have you—the exhibitor—of getting good pictures?

What guaranty have you of the men to whom you will entrust your money?

Herein is involved your business future.

Coming Without Pulling

OFF and on, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has done considerable agitating for longer runs of worth-while pictures. We don't intend now to repeat conceded facts in pointing out the constructive tonic to the industry that longer runs would bring.

At times the fight appeared hopeless. The daily change seemed ingrained and unalterable.

But we have found cheer. If the hundreds of report cards coming in to our "Box Office Reports" department each week are any indication the longer run seems to be coming with a whoop—and coming without pulling.

Any number of houses may be named that are showing pictures for a week—when it wasn't many moons ago that they were a paltry two or three. Houses with but two changes a week are as numerous as film salesmen; the two-day run seems almost the rule among the theatres of average grade.

What will be the result? Less and less room for the mediocre picture. What has brought it about? The good pictures.

At a Desk in New York

HOW often—even to the point of triteness—have you heard it said, "One of the main troubles of this business is that the big men never get away from their desks in New York. They don't know what the men out over the country think of their pictures and their policies. They don't benefit by contact with the best thought of the entire country."

This has been said, we repeat, to the point of becoming the signal for laughter. But someone said it to us again last week. And our mind turned to the Exhibitors' Advisory Board co-operating in the work of our Exhibitors' Service Bureau.

A score of men representing combined investment that would make the capital of some producing organizations look like a huckster's cart in comparison.

Just now they are discussing in the Service Bureau the broad question, "What is the Matter with Pictures?" Not a theoretical discussion, but down to the ground, straight from the shoulder, exhibitor talk.

The man at a desk in New York doesn't have to feel out of touch now. The Advisory Board will bring to him each week more of the views of the country's big exhibitors than a month's swing around the circle would give.

To this extent perhaps it isn't the "Exhibitors' Service Bureau." It's the "Manufacturers' Service Bureau."

The manufacturer who simply boasts to the exhibitor and lets the exhibitor, unaided, resell his product to the public is only cutting down his own gross.

The same sane policy of merchandizing applies to the reading pages of the trade paper. The trade paper wants to know what houses have booked the picture, what original and successful advertising stunts these houses have employed, what methods of presentation were used; and of course we want straightforward news of new pictures in the making.

What we don't want—and what the exhibitor doesn't want—is a repetition of the boastful advertising, a duplication of a previous announcement, a silly story about a star in the picture,—and, least of all, a statement from some executive designed not to help the picture along, or indeed any other picture, but simply to get the latter's name into print.

The exhibitor knows these truths just as well as we do. He isn't fooled one iota by boastful advertising or by reading matter which is obviously and only a bonus for paid advertising.

"The motion picture will be the most heavily advertised commodity in the world."

And then, as certainly, the advertising pages of MOTION PICTURE NEWS will be strictly used for the merchandizing of pictures and editorially the publication will be even more of a strictly service paper than it is today,—and today it is setting the pace.

Serving It with Speed and Ginger

ABOUT the time this issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS appears on Broadway a delegation of picture men will be face to face with the Senate committee which holds the fate of New York's Sunday Option Bill in its hands.

It's our private hope that there isn't a film man on Broadway Tuesday morning to read this page, that every one with the price of the railroad ticket—or an expense account—is marching up Albany's State Street hill with the Motion Picture Brigade.

At that, from all we heard along Broadway last week, there is certain to be a good-sized representation on hand from New York City, not to speak of the hustling up-State exhibitors. And while on the subject let us extend our hearty congratulations to all the men who have handled the battle for a sane Sunday in New York State.

There has been a cool method and efficiency about their work that—perhaps we shouldn't say it—has not always been present when picture men have had to battle. The prospects for success were never so bright.

And—whether it be success or failure that comes—they have certainly laid a concrete foundation for a real organization of exhibitors in New York State.

* * * *

WILL you be on hand at the Astor next week for the meeting called by Frank Rembusch to discuss the fifty-seven varieties of cooperative booking organizations?

"What's it all about?" you say. We don't know any more than you do.

But we're going to be there without fail—and you had better be.

For one thing is certain. No matter what it is all about it is all going to be a lot of fun.

Just imagine two score or more exhibitors, and, mayhap, a few producers, picking about over the bones of the various cooperatives.

Maybe we are a bit optimistic—but if every cooperative promoter has a representative on hand we'd almost gamble that the gab-fest won't be on more than fifteen minutes before some one will be looking for the nearest police signal station.

And still we have a friend trying to lure us to such a tame thing as a dog fight for next Monday.

* * * *

THE formation of that Greater New York Booking Syndicate looks interesting to us. The roster of directors includes some of the most prominent exhibitors in New York and many of the officers of the city and State organizations.

So far the directors are sawing wood and saying little—except that they have no intention of tying up to the Ochs plan and do "look with favor" on the Manufacturers to Exhibitors proposition.

* * * *

YOU exhibitors who have been writing for another article by "Anarchist" get it this week.

It has been a long time coming. We have a suspicion that "Anarchist" has been busy buying drinks for the Sheriff or filling out his excess profits tax blank.

We know it must be either of the extremes. For no exhibitor who can throw language with such reckless abandon as "Anarchist" could have an "average" theatre.

We're not sure yet whether we want to be responsible for what "Anarchist" says. This week he talks about "Salvationizing the Industry"—about the willing workers who always have a new scheme to help the poor, downtrodden exhibitor.

And many of the things he says are "true talk."

NEW YORK will certainly get its fill of big pictures this week. "Over the Top," the Vitagraph's production of Sergeant Empey's book, went over the top on Sunday evening, while Griffith's "Hearts of the World" comes to the Forty-Fourth Street theatre after Los Angeles triumphs on Thursday evening.

While "The Bluebird" is the week's attraction at the Rivoli.

Quite some week. And by the way, after hearing the lavish praise given "The Bluebird" after the trade showing we were wishing that the Service Bureau could have given you a special section on the Artcraft production such as we offer on "Over the Top" this week.

But all things must have a beginning—and we can do only one thing at a time. It is our hope that the future will enable us to give exhibitors this sort of special aid on all the future's big productions of out of the ordinary types that need and deserve out of the ordinary handling, such as "Over the Top," "The Bluebird," "My Four Years in Germany," "The Kaiser," "The Eagle's Eye," "The Lincoln Cycle," and so forth.

MEETINGS seem to be the fashion. The Society of Motion Picture Engineers has one scheduled to open next Monday. A three-day program of more than ordinary interest has been arranged for those in attendance. The Hotel Seneca will be the headquarters.

We suppose the atmosphere will be largely technical, but frankly, we don't think it would do any of the producers any harm to make the trip to Rochester. This society is doing a real big work for the technical side of the motion picture, especially in moves towards standardization, and their proceedings are usually among the most interesting gatherings we have attended in the picture field.

"Salvationizing" the Exhibitor

As Seen By "Anarchist"

EVERYONE in the industry is familiar with the well-known vaudeville team, which seems to have a solid booking on the FILM CIRCUIT. I refer to "Revolutionizing the Industry" and "Salvationizing the Exhibitor." They originally worked single, but found that their stuff was so similar and their lines so much alike that they finally teamed up, and now you seldom hear of the one without the other. Every time we hear of someone who is going to "Save the Exhibitor" we find that he is going to do it by "Revolutionizing the Industry."

This threat to revolutionize the industry never seems to get beyond the threatening stage (or promising). It seems to be a sort of Spiggoty revolution, mostly blank cartridges and laryngital lunacies. No one would object if these revolutions were absolutely harmless, but a blank cartridge can inflict a painful wound if you get too close, and some of these bombardments of type and verbal shrapnel HAVE done damage.

My aversion to the word "salvation" dates back to a time when motion pictures were unthought of, and I am going back to these days for a moment because the way "salvations" usually worked out for me somewhat parallels the way they usually work out for exhibitors today. As far back as I can remember this word "salvation" always meant that some hideous misfortune was headed in my general direction. Sometimes it was Pop armed with a strap, sometimes Elder Higgins armed with a tract. In any event, I got so that I fairly abominated the word, because I found that it usually worked out with reverse English, unless being larruped across the differential with a hard strap is synonymous with being saved. If it is I would have much preferred to side-step the rescue.

Eventually I adopted the word "salvationizing" as completely covering the situation, and it seems to me that it still satisfies in describing what usually happens to us exhibitors at each attempt to lead us out of the wilderness. Actually I believe we have more self-appointed Moseses (is that right, Mr. Editor?) in the film business than in any other line of human endeavor; and they all seem to be suffering from astigmatism, or some sort of disease, which causes them to move in a circle, bringing us back toward our starting point, with the possible exception that we seem to be just a little bit deeper "in" each time we are "saved."

I divide the people engaged in the joyful occupation of "salvationizing" into two classes; first, those well-intentioned, but misguided individuals who conscientiously believe that they are doing things which must eventually work out for your good, and, second, a totally different type who do things which they pretend to believe will militate in your favor, when really they know to the contrary. I think that under one or the other of these heads you can classify most of the efforts to date to "save the exhibitor," and I will be charitable enough to say that I believe that the former class predominates.

And this refers only to the men who are earnest, though mistaken, in their attempts at salvation. THEIR motto is "HELP US TO HELP YOU," and they really mean it that way, while the other type have for THEIR motto "HELP US TO HELP OURSELVES," and, believe me, they DO help themselves, and invariably find any number of fool exhibitors who are willing to assist them, thus making the "helpings" good.

I think that the first really loudly heralded "salvation" movement I can remember was the "open market." We exhibitors had been beefing loudly against the rigid program system of booking, which compelled us to accept the Roquefort as well as the really high-class stuff, on the plea that we were paying an average price for an average service and must expect an occasional lime to balance off against the world-beaters we ALSO got at program prices. We objected to the flivvers, but we had to pay for them whether we ran them or not. We felt (quite rightly) that the producers ought to make 'em all world-beaters. Then, with a clashing of cymbals and a loud roll of drums, came the open market, widely advertised as "the exhibitor's salvation." At last we were to be allowed to throw off the yoke of the program distributor with his inevitable percentage of mediocre features.

Say, we exhibitors fairly wept for joy. We could take our pick and reject the rest. It sounded too good to be true. (And it was.) I rushed down to New York and cast myself into the open marketman's welcoming arms and, you can take it from me, I had company. The line had to form on the right; exhibitors couldn't come in quick enough. At last we were to be really "saved." We looked joyously ahead to an era of undisturbed prosperity. (Just a minute, please, I see my big, husky operator coming in the door and I want to pause long enough to enable him to hit me where my brains ought to be and kick me where they are.)

Since that day "salvation" movements have been frequent, and, invariably, fatal (to exhibitors). And the worse conditions have gotten the more numerous the "saviors." Some of the schemes advanced have looked abso-tively wonderful in type, but, strange to relate, they have always failed to work out when put into practical operation. In theory, immense; in practise, OUCH! As a rule the exhibitor is only asked to invest his money, take all the chances and hold the bag in case of failure. The "savior" assumes all the other risks.

Since "salvationizing" has become one of our leading film professions, it has gotten to be quite the usual thing to have some "leader" step forth into the limelight with the announcement that he has hatched an idea and request that all good exhibitors rally 'round him and back his hunch to the limit. These gentry rarely have anything but the idea, but that is neither here nor there; the exhibitors have the money (some of them).

Of late the rescue game has been handled along rather original lines, and the slogan now is: "Exhibitors, produce and distribute your own pictures." A fine, inspiring thought, I grant you, and I am sure that the average exhibitor would make almost as good a producer or distributor as he would a screen actor. This is a favorite bait these days, assuring the exhibitor that he OUGHT to be the whole works; that he is entitled to production and distribution profits in addition to the profits of exhibition. Now, I don't believe that the average exhibitor is the least bit interested in the functions of production and distribution. He may kick like a steer and insist that he could do so better than those at present handling these duties, but he wouldn't tackle the proposition if it was offered to him. All the average exhibitor wants is good pictures at a fair price, and relief from the un-ethical competition usually fostered by greedy distributors. He doesn't care a tinker's damn about the legitimate profits accruing to any of the other factors in the business. He wants PICTURES, SERVICE and PROTECTION, and for these things he is perfectly willing to pay a reasonable price.

Whenever I am asked to invest in any of these rescue missions I try and give the proposition a fair east and west before I condemn it, although I WILL admit that I am somewhat biased from the start. I have seen too many similar attempts in other lines bump the bumps. After I have tossed a brick in the air a half dozen times and seen it come down each time with a bump it is but natural that I should arrive at the brilliant conclusion that it won't stay up there without something solid and tangible for it to rest on. I told an exponent of one proposition once that I couldn't see his scheme with binoculars and he was deeply grieved, so we argued the question. He had promised so MUCH (promissory note stuff, undated, maturing "some time in the future when the plan works out"), that it wasn't reasonable to believe him. I had much the same feeling I would have if some man offered me a nice, pretty gold brick for about a quarter of the going price for gold.

"You are asking me to lend my financial and moral support to an untried proposition," I protested. "I'll admit that it listens well, but so do oil and gold mine projects, else they wouldn't get across as they do. When I go into anything which offers so many unknown possibilities as this proposition of yours I should at least take the precautions which the average bank does before it lends money. A national bank lends money on three bases. First, on solid, negotiable securities (and, even though your proposition was already a proven success, it could hardly class that high; being untried, it doesn't class as a security of any kind). Second, on the record of past performances by the men who are at the helm of

Exhibitors Await Sunday Verdict

Optimism Uppermost as Bill Comes Up April 2 to Decide Either for or Against Open Sabbaths for Picture Theatres—Newspapers Favor the Measure Editorially

EXHIBITORS of New York State set their clocks one hour ahead on Saturday night of last week with the feeling that the motion picture option bill, which has its hearing before the Senate Committee April 2, as MOTION PICTURE NEWS goes to press, will be decided in their favor. Many hours of ceaseless efforts were contributed to the cause by the exhibitors before the measure came up for final hearing, and that these combined "bits" will carry the day is confidently felt.

The bill, if passed, will provide for motion picture shows in New York State on Sunday after 2 P. M. This is satisfactory to the majority of exhibitors, who have expressed themselves as averse to opening their houses in the morning.

MONTHLY INDEX

PRESSURE on our news columns has made it necessary to postpone the Monthly Index to all picture releases, which usually appears in the issue carrying the second date of each month till next week's Motion Picture News.

By the way—do you get the full benefit of this Monthly Index feature? Remember, it gives you every release of the month, the page on which the News review appeared, the page of the music chart, the ad-talk, the release date, producing company, etc.

It's a wonderful time saver when you are looking up an old picture.

Newspapers Pull for Bill

The exhibitors have not been alone in their campaign to bring the option bill over the top in good shape. Nearly all the newspapers of the state have commented favorably upon the measure, both in the news columns and on the editorial page. Six Buffalo newspapers carried long editorials, setting forth the great need of motion picture performances on Sunday. The Buffalo Times gave four excellent reasons why the bill should pass, the second of which was as follows: "The measure, though progressive, is modified with a sterling conservatism, which provides with sedulous care against interference with the spirit of the Sabbath. Under its provision, no motion picture exhibits would be opened before two o'clock in the afternoon. Thus the morning hours of worship, and they are the principal hours for religious observance, are preserved intact."

The Buffalo Commercial said: "The bill will be opposed by persons of narrow views and strong prejudices, but if the legislators mirror the opinions of the great majority of their constituents they will enact the measure."

Other Buffalo newspapers were of the same opinion, and these views were echoed all over the state through the press and in letters to statesmen and others. One form of calling the attention of the public to the bill, to enlist their support in putting the bill through, was large advertisements in the papers, headed "Do You Want Pictures on Sunday?" That these had the desired effect is believed generally by exhibitors.

Passed Committee Easily

Since the bill was introduced simultaneously in the Senate and Assembly it has been acted upon favorably by the Assembly Codes Committee. On March 28 it came up for third reading and was passed 54 to 40. When the bill was acted upon favorably by the Code Committee, Assemblyman Welsh, one of the framers of the measure, said:

"I have no fear that the bill will not receive the support of the Assembly and will be passed and also that the Senate will favor this legislation.

"There can be no reasonable objection to my bill as it now reads for the fact that the entire question of Sunday film is put up to the various cities and towns and it rests with them whether or not they will pass ordinances to prohibit Sunday shows. This is a home rule or local option proposition and will be the means of solving a much discussed subject.

"Furthermore, the placing of this proposed law on the statute books will establish a specific law on the subject of motion pictures as the courts have been divided on their decisions on Sunday shows."

Big Attendance Expected

It is expected that a very large delegation of exhibitors, in fact, the largest ever invading the capitol at Albany, will be present when the bill is up for its hearing Tuesday, April 2. This point is considered very important, and for several days calls have been going out throughout the country to exhibitors to put their shoulder to the wheel and attend in force. In addition to this they have been urged to send letters, telegrams and anything that will draw attention to the desire for Sunday shows, to their representatives.

On March 29 a meeting was called in New York at Wurlitzer Hall, which was attended by about fifty exhibitors. Sidney Cohen, president of the state body, called attention to the necessity of quick action before the bill went before the Senate, and urged that nothing be left undone to assist the up-State exhibitors in their worthy efforts in campaigning, for which a well oiled organism was formed. The feeling at this meeting was about equally divided between optimism and pessimism but rays of hope shone through all the while, and the opinion prevalent was that the "volcano," as termed by Max Spiegel, would fail to erupt, with its attendant lava of Sundayless shows. Frederick H. Elliott was also present at this meeting, and got in a good word or two. He urged that every Greater New York legislator be seen during the Easter recess, as well as showered with letters and telegrams. Others who spoke were President Saunders, of the Brooklyn local, and Sam Trigger. About $1,000 was raised on the spot to assist in the campaign.

Freuler Speaks of Bill

John R. Freuler, of Mutual, late last week made an announcement in connection with the measure, in which he declared this is an inopportune time for reformers to meddle with the smooth-running gears of the theatres.

Mr. Freuler said: "These are days of harrowing suffering and superlative sacrifice, days when the great mass of the people are entitled to get from life every atom of happiness and pleasure—entitled to every moment that will take them from the horror of reality to the realm of even momentary enjoyment.

"It is a time when any effort to curtail entertainment is out of place. The morale of the people is of utmost importance in the struggle for endurance through which the nation is passing. To deprive them of any of their few chances to enjoy life is to invite calamity within our own borders.

"The time is particularly and peculiarly inopportune for meddling reformers to be urging upon the legislative bodies of our states and municipalities laws for the Sunday closing of the motion picture theatre. The men who legislate for us are carrying a greater responsibility than ever and they can ill afford to tamper with the existing social order.

"It is unfortunate that we have in many communities people who are so thoroughly saturated with the notion that they must make everybody else live as they themselves live, that the question of Sunday closing of motion picture theatres is forever agitated.

"I maintain that the American citizen is as much entitled to his Sunday picture as he is to his Sunday newspaper. The Sunday newspaper is a form of enlightenment and entertainment, more of entertainment than enlightenment. The motion picture is too a form of enlightenment and entertainment."

Belasco May Direct at Universal

Universal Film Company announced last week through its publicity department that David Belasco may direct a picture at Universal City after he finishes the two stage productions upon which he is now working.

Carl Laemmle and Mr. Belasco are carrying on negotiations, it is said.

Orleans Co. Makes Comedies

General Film Company to Distribute Product of the Standard—Something New in One-Reelers Is Promised By Southern Producers

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week of completion of negotiations between the General Film Company and the Diamond Film Company of New Orleans, as the result of which the General will distribute the one-reel comedies to be made by the New Orleans company. Production will start April first and the first release will be about one month later. The Diamond has assembled a high class company, headed by a comedian of high standing and embracing a number of pretty girls. It promises the production of something new in the way of comedies.

R. M. Chisholm, president; W. J. Hannon, vice-president and general manager, and Arthur J. Leopold, attorney for the company, have just returned to New Orleans after completing the arrangements with the General.

The Diamond Company, which was recently reorganized, has taken over the plant of the Nola Film Company. This plant occupies a large tract on Bayou St. John in New Orleans, and is capable of accommodating several working companies. The plant is adjacent to City Park, one of the finest public playgrounds in the United States, and this will be used when necessary. On its own property the Diamond has ample facilities for all ground, water and air effects. It is one of the most complete studios in the country, having been fully equipped with the most modern apparatus.

New Orleans is held to be an ideal producing location. During the past two years many of the leading companies have sent stars there to take portions of pictures and in some cases the entire productions have been made in the Crescent City.

Officers of the company include some of the most prominent men in New Orleans. Mr. Chisholm brings to the organization the advantage of having been a successful exhibitor. He formerly managed the Diamond theatre, New Orleans, which scored a big success from the opening night, and until he sold the lease to a vaudeville concern. Mr. Hannon was formerly interested in the Nola company and is a capitalist and insurance man. Mr. Leopold is one of the most prominent lawyers in New Orleans. The company is said to have behind it ample funds to insure permanent operation.

Stars in Liberty Loan Drive

All Roads Lead to Washington for Grand Opening with Plenty of Fire-works—Tours Included in Campaign

THE third Liberty Loan drive, whose grand opening has been set for April 6 in Washington, will have the assistance of several motion picture stars not alone throughout the campaign, but at the very send-off, it became known last week.

Already Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and Charlie Chaplin, in the West, had discarded make-up when the announcement was made, and were en route toward New York, where a sort of preparatory shot to the drive was scheduled to be fired. Following this the stars planned to entrain for Washington, to be on hand bright and early on April 6.

Marie Dressler is another of the picture stars who plans to be in Washington at the opening of the campaign. A tour has been laid out for Miss Dressler which includes visits to Philadelphia, New York, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, St. Paul, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Louisville.

Miss Pickford also expects to tour the East in behalf of the loan, while Fairbanks will "work" the Middle West, with Chaplin visiting the cities of the South. All of the month of April, it is expected, will be given over by the stars for the campaign work.

That the motion picture industry is solidly behind the third loan is evident on every side, not only through the patriotic work of the stars, but through the earnest endeavor of producers, exhibitors and others to put the drive over "with a bang."

Adolph Zukor, chairman of the committee from the National Association, formed to co-operate with the Treasury Department, last week announced that Secretary McAdoo is sending an appeal direct to every exhibitor in the country in connection with the campaign. Trailers and posters are being mailed to exhibitors by the government.

In Philadelphia motion picture men have been most active in preparation for the Liberty Loan. The motion picture committee of the Third Federal Reserve District met recently in the headquarters of the Exhibitors' League, with Judge O'Donnell presiding as chairman. All the exchangemen and theatrical men were invited to attend, and over thirty connected with motion pictures were present.

Magnet Releases Second Hart Feature

Magnet Film Exchange announces the release of the second W. H. Productions Company Hart feature, "The Bandit and the Preacher." The Eighty-First Street theatre will play this production for the week of April first. Moss and Keeney theatres have also contracted for long runs. These theatres have shown the first production, "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain."

Tobacco Fund Grows

The total amount of contributions to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund," as announced last week, is $186,754.51.

In and Out of Town

Edward L. Hyman, manager, Victoria theatre, Buffalo, accompanied by Mrs. Hyman, arrived in New York, last week, for several days stay.

H. Staunton Wallach, South American agent for the North American Motion Pictures, Inc., one of the largest distributing concerns in Buenos Aires, Argentina, is en route to New York, and expected to arrive this week. Mr. Wallach will be in New York for five or more weeks, with headquarters at 729 Seventh avenue.

Harry Reichenbach, exploitation expert, left New York last week for Los Angeles, where he will remain for several weeks. Mr. Reichenbach opened "Tarzan of the Apes" at the Broadway.

Charles C. Pettijohn, general manager, Producers and Exhibitors-Affiliated, returned to New York last week, after an extensive trip through the Middle West in the interest of the direct-to-the-exhibitor plan.

R. M. Chisholm, president; W. J. Hannon, vice-president and general manager, and Arthur J. Leopold, counsel of the Diamond Film Company, New Orleans, left New York last week for New Orleans, after several days spent in the city, making arrangements with the General Film Company for the release of Diamond productions. One feature a month will be released, commencing April 1.

Hart Re-Issues Going Good in New England

Nathan Gordon, president of the Globe Feature Film Corporation, Boston, which controls the rights to W. H. Productions Company, Hart features, and the series of Mack Sennett Keystone Comedies, advises that booking on these features are more than satisfactory, and that the theatres that have already played the first feature, "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," have been successful with their showing. All these theatres have booked "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska." The first Mack Sennett Keystone Comedy, "A Small Town Bully," has also proved satisfactory in this territory, Mr. Gordon reports.

Saunders Perfect Physical Specimen

Edward C. Saunders, Balboa cameraman and juvenile lead in Gloria Joy features, who recently joined the photographic division of the U. S. Air Service, passed a 100 per cent physical examination on the 21st of March. He is now awaiting orders from the War Department.

A Son and Heir

Ashley Miller, well-known director, and Mrs. Miller announce the birth on March 22, of a son, Ashley Browning Miller.

Lasky Confirms Pickford's Enlistment

The report that Jack Pickford, Paramount star, has enlisted, has been confirmed at the Famous Players-Lasky offices in New York. It is Jack's desire to become connected with the aviation service of the Army. Although he is Canadian born and under draft age he has never ceased to wish for an opportunity to join the colors and the flying wing of the service has always been his mark.

A large number of the motion picture folk, in addition to his own family, were on hand at the station at Los Angeles to see the young soldier off. In the party were Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, his mother; Mary and Lottie, his sisters; Olive Thomas, his bride of a year; Owen Moore, husband of Mary; Mary Pickford Rupp, daughter of Lottie; Blanche Sweet, Robert Harron, Dorothy Gish, Elliott Dexter, W. D. Taylor (who was Jack's director), Jack Dillon, Jack Quinn, Thomas Meighan and E. J. Patterson.

Get-Together Banquet at New Haven

The exhibitors and exchange men of New Haven and vicinity will hold an informal banquet on Tuesday evening, April 9, at 9 o'clock, at Mainster's Cafe Heublein, New Haven. His Honor, the Mayor of New Haven, the chief of police, the motion picture censor and representatives of the press and trade journals, will be present.

The object of the banquet is to get together all who are interested in any way in the film industry of New Haven and vicinity, for the purpose of promoting that co-operation and good fellowship which comes from meeting and mingling with one another.

W. H. Features Running Good in South

Tom Moore, president of the First National Exhibitors Circuit Exchange, in Washington, D. C., having just finished a run of "The Bandit and the Preacher" in his Strand theatre, in Washington, states that he did a turn-away business. Mr. Moore also controls the rights to "The Hell Hound of Alaska," the third Hart feature, for the territory consisting of Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia, and he states that his salesmen have already booked all the prominent exhibitors in this territory on both productions.

"God's Man" Opens in Baltimore

"God's Man," featuring H. B. Warner, has been placed in the New theatre at Baltimore for three days by General Film Company, which handles distribution of this feature in Washington and Baltimore territory, reports Branch Manager A. J. Nelson. This picture was passed by the Maryland Censor Board after a few minor eliminations. The outlook for the picture in other parts of the territory is very promising, it is reported.

Chicago Up Against Operators

Exhibitors, Exchanges and Manufacturers in Move for Injunction Restraining Union from Interfering with the Industry

EVERY exhibitor of any prominence whatever in Chicago—nearly 300 of them in all—in addition to all the film exchanges and fourteen manufacturers of projection machines and other accessories, were represented at a meeting held Thursday morning, March 28, in the Masonic building, in making an injunction move restraining the Operators' Union No. 110 from interfering with the industry in the city. The injunction proceedings were filed by Attorney Louis F. Jacobson. In it also was alleged that the operator's union had sought alleged illegal control of the theatres and film business. The officers of the union particularly were mentioned in the petition. Among the complaintants listed in the petition for an injunction, which covers more than fifty typewritten pages, are all of the big theatre firms in the city, together with the local national exchanges, as well as the representatives in Chicago of the makers of accessories. The defendants named are Joseph P. Armstrong, president of Local No. 110, and John G. Shafrank, said to be associated with Armstrong in the National Advertising Film Company. This firm, the exhibitors and producers allege, has organized for the purpose of controlling theatre picture advertising in Chicago. Others named in the bill are H. McCullough, vice-president of the union; H. Mitz, recording secretary; Hal Johnston, financial secretary and treasurer; T. E. Malloy, business manager, and Fred Havell, Peter Kuniff, C. T. Shea and S. E. Kelleher, business agents of the union. The control of the picture theatres by the union representatives, the bill declares, has become so absolute that the owner of a motion picture house has no choice in hiring of the employees. In fact, it was said that the only thing they had to do with the conduct of their theatres was the payment of employees.

The placing of the union label on film cans, projection machines and the organization of a union repair board are chief among the onerous demands made by the union. Early in the week, however, it was said the union had backed down a bit when the exhibitors showed fight by sending a postcard to the trade announcing that their alleged demand for taxation on slides and commercial film was unfounded. One of the instances cited in the injunction petition was that the union had demanded $5.00 a day from each theatre for showing the Ford week, a method used by Henry Ford to push national propaganda and which is distributed free to the theatres. Griever Herz, who controls the distribution in Chicago territory of the Ford weekly, claimed that the union had demanded the $5.00 a reel tax for every Ford weekly used.

Gerard Film to First National

"My Four Years in Germany" Announced for Release April 29—Has Good Run on Broadway

THE First National Exhibitors' Circuit has secured full distribution rights for the United States and Canada to Ambassador James W. Gerard's authorized film version of "My Four Years in Germany," which has been running at the Knickerbocker theatre on Broadway since March 10, it was announced last week.

Prior to the acquisition of the feature, negotiations were carried on for several days between Mark M. Dintenfass and H. M. Warner, representing My Four Years in Germany, Inc., and Harry O. Schwalbe and James D. Williams, representing the First National. When the final papers in the transaction were signed last Wednesday afternoon, it was stated by both parties to the contract that Ambassador Gerard and his associates had been presented with the largest check ever drawn as an advance payment in a motion picture deal.

The Gerard picture will be released on April 29, although earlier bookings can be arranged if necessary, prior to that date. In the larger cities the film will first be shown in legitimate houses, wherever available, at advanced prices. Judging from its success at the Knickerbocker theatre, the expose of German political and military intrigue will be good for an extensive run in any city.

"My Four Years in Germany" must be projected in its full ten-reel form wherever booked, as Ambassador Gerard has expressly stipulated in his contract with the distributors that the film is not to be cut or changed in any particular without his consent.

Practically every amusement circuit in the United States has put in a bid for the picture since it has been taken over by the First National, that company said. A definite announcement of the first-run houses that will show the big feature will be made within the course of a few days, it is expected.

South American Representative in New York

H. Staunton Wallach, South American agent for the North American Motion Pictures, Inc., is on his way from Buenos Aires, Argentine Republic, and is expected to arrive in New York this week. Mr. Wallach will be in New York for five weeks and announces that he will be at offices at 729 Seventh avenue. Mr. Wallach represents one of the most prominent picture concerns in South America.

Allan Rock Establishes Own Press Bureau

Allan Rock, who for five years served the interests of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has organized the Press Service Bureau, with headquarters in the Knickerbocker Theatre building.

Gaumont Starts Beauty Contest

Leading Newspaper in Each State Will Co-operate—Winners to Play in Feature Production which Gaumont Will Produce

THE GAUMONT COMPANY, of New York, Paris and London with studios at Flushing, L. I., producers of Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic, has completed plans for a Motion Picture Beauty Contest which will be carried out with the cooperation of the leading newspapers of each state in the United States, it is announced. The contest, it is said, will be different from any other contest, of this nature, ever held and will afford opportunity to every girl in the United States, who, according to the judges' decision has the "ear marks" of a screen actress, to appear in Gaumont pictures.

The Gaumont Company is one of the largest motion picture firms in the world, with more than fifty branches over the world. Fulfilling a promise made some time ago to the independent exhibitors of the country, Gaumont will produce a series of feature pictures. In view of this, new "stars" between the ages of fifteen and twenty are needed. The only requirement is that the successful contestants must possess beauty which will register to good advantage on the screen. Quoting the announcement made: "They may be blonde or brunette, short or tall, slim or—well—not too stout."

The newspapers in each state which will co-operate with Gaumont in this contest, will be announced within a week or two. Any girl ambitious to be a motion picture star who possesses the requisite beauty and talent should submit photographs of herself to the Beauty Contest Editor of the paper in her state which is conducting the contest. The contest will be national in scope. A committee appointed by the newspaper, composed of a well known artist, a capable motion picture photographer, and others, will select the five prettiest girls in each state from photographs submitted. The Gaumont Company will make cinematographic tests of all the girls selected, from which list will be determined, the girls who are the most beautiful. The company will pay the expenses of the girls selected from the total to its studios and will pay the winners adequate salaries during the production of the picture in which they work. Further announcement as to the details of the contest will be made later. The pictures of the winners will appear in the news weeklies, news reels, The Gaumont News and the Gaumont Graphic.

Speaking of the decision to produce special features, an official of the Gaumont Company said:

"While prominent stars will be featured, the drawing power of these dramas will not depend alone upon the names of the stars but will be made doubly sure by strong stories written by famous authors and produced in the most attractive manner possible.

"The Gaumont Company makes no extravagant claims that these dramas will be the most expensive or the most spectacular ever produced, but it does promise that they will not be surpassed by any dramas now being offered through the independent or any other market.

"No insipid stories will be filmed, but the themes used will be powerful and dramatic enough to grip the attention even without the excellent casts which will interpret them.

"Two of the stories, alreadv chosen, call for hundreds of girls of exceptional beauty. To secure the proper types, the Gaumont Company has inaugurated a nation-wide beauty contest which is being conducted by the leading daily paper in each of the United States. Five girls between the ages of 15 and 25 will be selected by each paper, and the Gaumont Company will make film tests of these girls to find out which have the best screen talent and personality. The girls selected for these two spectacular productions will have their transportation and expenses paid to the Gaumont studios, and will also be paid good salaries while engaged in the filming of these stories. The Gaumont Company confidently expects to find a number of girls of unusual types of beauty who possess sufficient screen talent to make them the successful film stars of the future.

"An interesting phase of this contest, which stamps it as the best of its kind, is that motion pictures of the most attractive of the contestants will be run in each state during the contest in the two Gaumont news-reels, the Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic, so that the girls will not have to wait very long to see how they appear in cinematic section. This feature, which will result in filling the theatres on the nights these news reels are shown, will undoubtedly appeal to exhibitors who have booked the News and Graphic."

Heavy Business Reported by Hodkinson

"A million dollars' business signed up in ninety days," was the announcement made last week by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"It may seem hard to credit," said an official in charge of the financial destinies of the company, "but nevertheless it is true. In checking up our books we find that the total amount of business we have signed up to date on our three available stars Bessie Barriscale, Warren Kerrigan and Henry B. Walthall, will reach $1,000,000.

W. H. Have Shorty Hamilton Reissues

W. H. Productions Company announces its intention to reissue to the independent exchange men, on a state right basis, a series of sixteen Shorty Hamilton two-reel Western comedy dramas. A further announcement to the trade will be made next week.

War Camp Pictures for the Navy

Steps have been taken to make the pictures chosen for use in the training camps and through the War Camp Motion Picture Committee available also for the battleships of the Navy. P. A. Powers, the chairman, when in Washington, recently, was in conference with Secretary Daniels of the Navy Department. As a result, the Committee is in a position to supply films to naval vessels whose chaplains desire them in the same manner in which it makes them available for the training capms.

The committee, having completed its plans for the distribution of pictures to the social welfare agencies in the training camps, has sent to all of the exchanges of the various companies the rates on which the selected pictures are to be issned and the lists of the pictures chosen by the National Board of Review from the product of the various companies represented. These lists cover the period since January 1, 1917.

Famous Players Names Rate to Liberty Theatres

Walter E. Greene, managing director of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, last week advised the exchange district managers of the company of the rates which have been arranged for any of its films which the Liberty Theatres may use.

Paramount and Artcraft pictures will be supplied to the cantonment theatres on the following basis: Star series from one to thirty days after release, $25; to three months, $20; to six months, $10, and thereafter, $5. Sennett and Arbuckle comedies from one to thirty days, $10; to three months, $7.50; to six months, $5, and thereafter, $5. Bray Pictographs, from one to thirty days, $4; to three months, $3; to six months, $2, and thereafter, $1.

To Ask Free Admission for Soldiers in El Paso

Advance information from the local committee of the War Camp Community Service is to the effect that a surprise offensive will be launched at the managers of the eighteen theatres in El Paso, Texas, to the end that they shall allow soldiers in uniform free entrance, or at least a five-cent admission, to their theatres between the opening hour of 11 and 3 or 4 P. M. The plan has been tried in other cities, it is reported, with success. There are now about 12,000 soldiers at Fort Bliss, a Regular Army post at El Paso.

First William Russell Play Due April 22

William Russell has completed work on "Hearts or Diamonds," the first of his pictures for William Russell Productions, Inc., and it has been set for release by the Mutual Film Corporation, through which the Russell productions will be distributed, for April 22.

League Leaders In New Booking Plan

"Exhibitors' Booking Syndicate of Greater New York" Files Papers—No Connection with Ochs Plan—Other Activities in the Co-operative Field

INCORPORATION papers have been filed at Albany of the Exhibitors' Booking Syndicate of Greater New York with the following well-known exhibitors named as directors: Sydney S. Cohen, Charles L. O'Reilly, John Mannheimer, Isador Edelstein, Rudolph Sanders, John J. Wittman and Charles Stern.

Sydney S. Cohen is president of the Exhibitors' League of New York State, John Mannheimer is president of the Manhattan local, and Charles J. O'Reilly first vice-president of the State body. John J. Wittman is president of the Bronx League and treasurer of the New York State League.

Not Tied to Any Yet

When interviewed by a representative of Motion Picture News, Messrs. Cohen, Mannheimer and O'Reilly declared that the announcement of the new syndicate's formation was premature. "Definite plans have not been formulated," they declared, "except that we look favorably upon the Manufacturer to Exhibitor plan, or some other such proposition which will to our minds bring about the desired efficiency and harmony between producer and exhibitor. We have no connection with the recently formed United Theaters proposition."

Offices of the Exhibitors Booking Syndicate will be opened at 729 Seventh avenue, in the rooms now used by the Exhibitors Board of Trade, which the new organization will absorb.

Interest now awaits the coming meeting of exhibitors and producers at the Hotel Astor next Monday to discuss the many different co-operative proposals. Charles C. Pettijohn of the Manufacturer to Exhibitor Plan, and Frank Rembusch are boosting for a large attendance, and a good-sized gathering seems certain.

Louis F. Blumenthal of the United Picture Theatres of America makes his first official statement this week since the exhibitors' co-operative organization was launched. Mr. Blumenthal said that he felt that he should make a statement in order to challenge widely circulated misstatements and half-truths and to set forth the fundamentals of United theatres policy. He said:

"In the face of reports from all over the United States of a growing friendly sentiment for our plan, the signing up of many exhibitors and the reasonable prospect of securing the booking days we desire it is annoying to be attacked by innuendo or direct misstatements that questions our motives and casts discredit by raising false issues.

"We who incorporated the United Picture Theatres of America do not control the capital stock. Control is vested in the general body of exhibitors who become members. In other words, this is a genuine co-operative society, exhibitor-controlled in every sense of the word. All but a small fraction of the stock belongs to the members who vote according to the amount of their holdings and who elect directors yearly. The plan is as democratic as the town meeting or popular suffrage or the co-operative building and loan association or the mutual insurance society.

"We seek the establishment of a big open market for the purchase of films, being confident that our collective buying power will bring this about. We have no axes to grind nor any entanglements with other branches of the trade. Were we affiliated with producers, we would be controlled to a certain extent by them. Were we dealing with only the first exhibitor in each important city, we would be making him the jobber and to that extent increasing the prices of films to the members. Did we derive our capital from outside sources instead of from the members, we would be financier-controlled and not exhibitor-controlled. But we have avoided all the above pitfalls and founded our organization with an eye to the interests of exhibitors, and therefore we sincerely believe that we shall be successful in making it practicable.

"All signs in the business world point to the coming of true co-operation in every line of industry during or soon after the war. The day has gone by for individual profiteers to make big fortunes out of the efforts of the many. Everybody is going to participate in the fruits of industry to the extent of the amount of wealth created by his earnings. Enormous salaries are going to be cut down, duplications of effort abolished, roundabout ways of doing business replaced by simple, economical ones. The average man will benefit. There are many reforms that co-operative buying will bring about, selection of star, director and story in accordance with exhibitors' wishes; the elimination of superfluous footage, waste or idle prints, and poorly balanced bills; direct distribution from maker to exhibitor, with overhead and salesmanship charges sharply cut; the wholesale purchase of theatre supplies as well as of pictures; the distribution of profits favored to the whole membership, first, indirectly through reduced rentals, and secondly, directly in the shape of dividends."

Goldwyn and Capitol Comedies

Parsons Comedy Production Praised by Officials of Goldwyn—Twenty-six Contracted For—First a Success at Strand

OFFICIALS of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation express great satisfaction with the success of the first release of Capitol Comedies, produced by William Parsons, the first issue of which was shown last week at the Strand Theatre, New York and has received favorable comment from the New Yorkers who visited the Strand.

The series of Capitol Comedies, contracted for by Goldwyn, contains twenty-six in number, and will be released every Monday, beginning April 15th. The Strand showing was a pre-release showing. The first is titled "Bill's Baby." The comedies will be two reels in length.

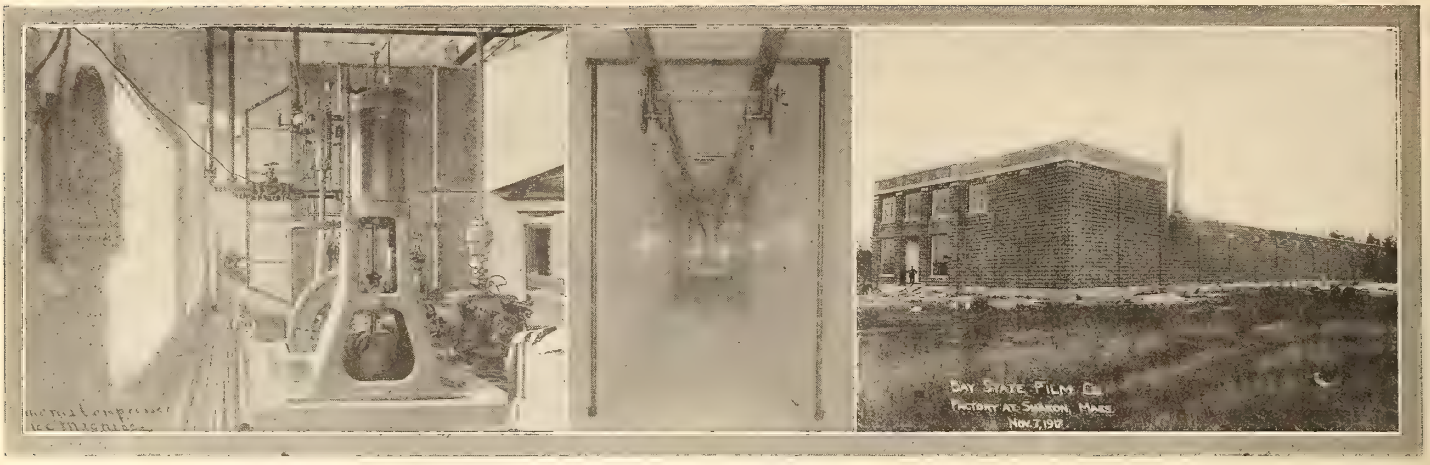
Mr. Parsons says that he made his first comedy as a lark. His friends persuaded him to make another when they saw his first attempt. He then produced, "Bill's Predicament." When he came to New York from Los Angeles with "Tarzan of the Apes," he brought prints of the two comedies with him. He showed them to Samuel Goldfish and Mr. Weiss of Goldwyn both of whom were more than satisfied with the brand of comedy contained. A contract for twenty-six of the same brand resulted. Mr. Parsons is now busily engaged in producing at the studios in Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood, with executive office at 1604 Broadway, under the management of Harry Reichenbach. Billy Rhoades, Molly Malone and Sylvia Dey will work opposite Mr. Parsons, who is the featured comedian, in Capitol Comedies.

In commenting upon these comedies, an official of the Goldwyn Company said in a recent interview:

"I am satisfied that Capitol Comedies will be received with enthusiasm by the American public. I have never looked at clearer, more refined and more humorous comedies, than the first two Capitol Comedies which I have seen. Bill Parsons is a natural-born comedian and his sense of humor should meet the approval of every motion picture patron. In contracting for twenty-six Capitol Comedies, I believe that Goldwyn has secured a brand of comedy pictures that will "go over," and "go over" big. The Strand audience received every scene depicted in the first release, "Bill's Baby," with laughter, and a reception by a New York audience is a pretty good criterion upon which to form one's judgment.

White Back at Triangle

Philip H. White, who recently severed his connection with motion pictures to become a free lance writer, is again at the Triangle studios, where he has joined the film editing department.



Two Interiors and An Exterior View of the Bay State Film Company, at Sharon, Mass., Which Company's Plant Is Equipped to Turn Out Millions of Feet of Film Each Week

Bay State Opens Big Factory

Begins Manufacture of Films on Large Scale with Well Organized Staff —Chester D. Coram at the Head

WITH a view to sharing in the enormous business in motion picture positive film which has sprung up as a result of the expansion of the country's "fifth greatest industry," the Bay State Film Company of 10 High street, Boston, Mass., have just opened a large factory for the manufacture of film at Sharon, Mass.

Without saying much to the outside world, Chester D. Coram of Boston, Mass., has gotten together, within the last few years, an organization of capable technical men, and has erected a thoroughly modern factory for the production of raw stock for motion pictures.

The factory of the Bay State Film Company at Sharon, Mass., is located on a 17-acre piece of ground, and the building is 90 feet wide and 253 feet long. The plant is fully equipped in every way for the turning out of cinematographic film stock. All of the most up-to-date devices are installed therein, including the latest type of air-conditioning plant which was installed under the supervision of the well-known expert, D. P. Gosline of Boston, Mass.

Chester D. Coram, Of The Bay State Film Co., With Plant At Sharon, Mass., And Offices In Boston

The Bay State factory has its own electric power house, and derives its water supply from a specially driven artesian well, while the ice plant and its accompanying ammonia compressors, shown in the illustration, are also features of the equipment.

In another of the accompanying illustrations is shown one of the drying alleys at the Bay State Film Company's plant, through which the film passes after leaving the emulsion-coating machine. The alley shown in the photo is well over 200 feet in length, and there are said to be two other alleys which will contribute their share to the output of the factory.

Associated with Mr. Coram in the operation of the Bay State Film Company are a number of technical men well known in photographic and motion picture circles, while the personnel of the company also includes some gentlemen of experience in the financial world.

By reason of his untiring efforts in bringing the Bay State organization to its present promising condition Mr. Coram has been termed by the members of his organization "the daddy of Bay State Film." Commenting upon the present outlook for the concern, Mr. Coram said:

"The making of raw stock for motion pictures is a very unfamiliar process to the public in general but the raw film stock is the basis of the entire industry. The sensitizing of the celluloid strips, which, when exposed to light, record the pictures, is a most fascinating process, but a most difficult one to carry out successfully. Consequently, while there are scores of producers and hundreds of distributors of motion pictures, this field has been less embarked upon than any other branch of the industry. The processes employed in the manufacture of Bay State Film have only been perfected after several years of extensive research, which gives our product a dependability that should assure its favorable reception by the producers."

It is stated that the first run of positive stock for commercial use will be shortly put through at the Bay State Factory which will thereafter be kept in continuous operation, as the company is said to have its entire production contracted for in advance.

Street Parade Heralds New Theatre

A street parade with band, banners and marchers signalized the opening on Sunday afternoon, March 24, of the new Eden theatre in Juarez, Mexico. The new theatre, which cost $6,000 gold and seats 600 persons, is situated on West Comercio street opposite Constitution plaza. It is 35x100 feet in size and modernly equipped, and is built with a stage for the accommodation of dramatic attractions.

A Los Angeles film service is being used, with a device by which a Spanish version of the English title appears on the lower margin of the screen, an addition made possible by the invention of an El Paso operator. The Eden makes the fourth theatre in the downtown district of Juarez. It is owned by Comacho de Leon & Company, and J. G. Comacho is the manager.

Hart to Be Godfather to a Regiment

William S. Hart, Artcraft-Ince star, is to be godfather to the 159th regiment of infantry, located at Camp Kearny. The regiment, which is 3,600 strong and is a portion of the 40th or Sunshine Division, will be known as "Bill Hart's Two-Gun Men." It originally was the 5th California National Guard. As soon as Hart has completed his work in the Liberty Loan drive he will go down to Camp Kearny for the formal ceremony of adoption.

Prominent El Paso Owner Is Ill

John R. Fulkerson, brother and part owner with S. Vance Fulkerson of the Alhambra theatre, El Paso, Texas, has been sent to New Orleans to consult a specialist there. Mr. Fulkerson, who is the elder of the two brothers, has been in bad health since an operation in December last, and has failed to improve during that period.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Lasky?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

ALL aboard for Los Angeles!"

"All aboard for New York!"

By these tokens we introduce Jesse L. Lasky, the champion trans-continental commuter of the motion picture industry.

Mr. Lasky hurdles the continent so often that he now signs his name to dining car checks, calls the conductors "Bob," "Charlie," etc., has a collection of twenty-six Pullman brushes and fifty-four of the little black combs, sees his old clothes on Pullman porters in all first-class cities, and gets Christmas cards from the general passenger agents of four trunk line systems.

It is some job to get an interview with Mr. Lasky. You have to sign him up six months in advance, by his railroad schedule.

And it is still more of a job to get anything out of Mr. Lasky after you get him.

He's excessively polite, courteous, and non-committal.

Mr. Lasky has the highest development of what is commonly termed, "the poker face." To this is added an illusive smile and eyes that wink rapidly while they change expression.

Moreover, his mind has a flitting habit. While you're asking him a question it is over in the next lot thinking about something else; and the aforesaid mind, by the way, was making pictures enroute.

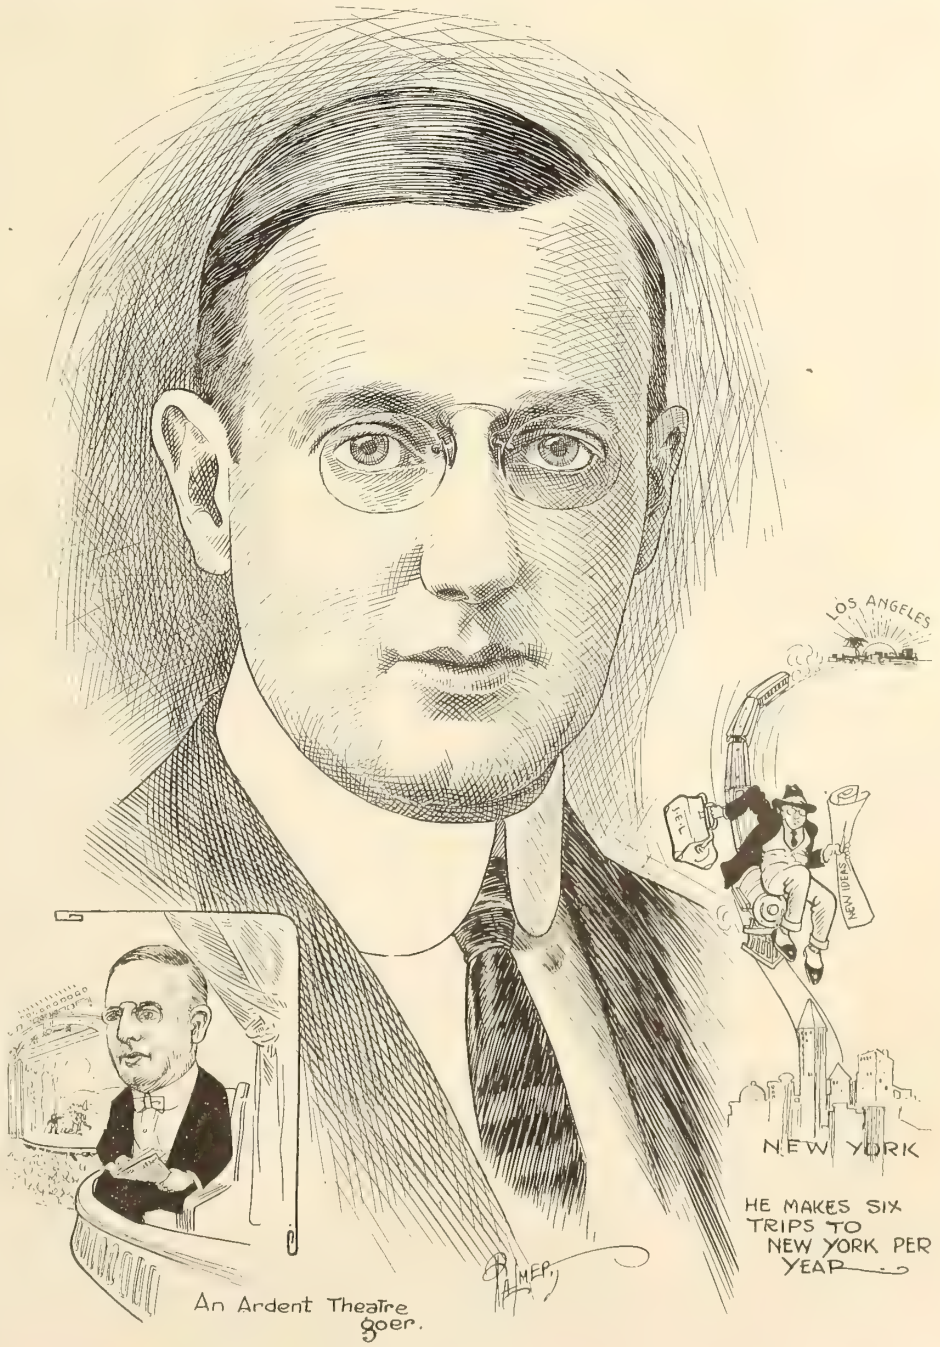
Mr. Lasky is gentle in manner and speech; in other words, he is naturally and instinctly a gentleman.

But even such characters have dark blots in their past.

We would not speak of this were it not germane to this sketch. We believe such things should be kept hidden.

Jesse L. Lasky once played a cornet!

It happened in this wise. In San Francisco some years ago the elder Grauman, father of Sid of the million-dollar Los Angeles theatre, needed a vaudeville act in a hurry. He happened to think of young Lasky, who played a cornet. (Mr. Lasky, by the way, is a native son.)



An Ardent Theatre goer.

HE MAKES SIX TRIPS TO NEW YORK PER YEAR

So, beginning then and there, Mr. Lasky corneted in and out of Frisco and on to the Atlantic shores, via the vaudeville route.

One evening in Utica, N. Y., the silver tones of his instrument fell upon the ears of a musician in the orchestra pit, a man who is now trying hard to live down the reputation of being one of the two best cornetists in the United States—none other than B. A. Rolfe, the present well-known producer on the Metro program.

The two looked at each other with intense sympathy. Naturally, the world turning against them, cornetists must hang together or separately.

Anyway, these two met a little later in New York, and it wasn't long before they were known as the two most successful producers for the United Booking Offices. One of their numbers, the Colonial Sextette, is still on the vaudeville boards.

Then came musical shows, successful ones; and one day, four years ago, the trade journals carried prominent articles announcing the entry into picturedom of the well known Jesse L. Lasky.

Today "Lasky" means a lot on pictures. Everyone knows that. And a lot of credit therefore is due the artistic ability and idealism and the bright, untiring enterprise and concentration of Jesse L. Lasky.

It is said that Mr. Lasky is a Showman. Well, that's true. Certainly he has had the requisite experience. But there are Showmen and Showmen. Mr. Lasky is of the higher order. And being instinctively a Showman he will continue to keep up with the head of the procession —or be ahead of it.

For Mr. Lasky has foresight. He gave New Yorkers The Folies Bergere years before they finally got the

Proctor and Loew Book Comics

E. W. HAMMONS, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation, announces this week that he had booked the "Katzenjammer Kids" and "Happy Hooligan" cartoons with the Proctor theatres and many of the Loew theatres. This is one of the most important contracts that has ever been signed in the history of animated cartoons, and is said to be only the forerunner of other announcements that Educational is to make shortly.

Last week announcement was made that as a result of an agreement with the International Film Service, Education had taken over the booking and distribution of this famous series and that these plans would be backed by a great publicity campaign in the Hearst string of newspapers. Since this agreement has been made all of the papers printing these comics carry at the same time the announcement that these comics in animated form are released by Educational.

"This is a sort of advertising that all the money in the world could not buy," said Mr. Hammons, "and it ought to be worth millions of dollars to the exhibitors of the country. They are showing their appreciation of the fact and we are being deluged with requests for the pictures and I feel sure that within a few weeks these comics will set a new record in the number of theatres in which they are being shown. Leading theatres in practically every city in the country will have these comics regularly."

The Proctor houses which have booked the pictures include the Fifth avenue, Fifty-eighth street, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, Twenty-third street theatres and Harlem Opera House, New York, Prospect, Greenpoint and Halsey, Brooklyn, and the theatres in Jersey City, Newark, Elizabeth, Plainfield, Yonkers, Mt. Vernon, Schenectady, Albany and Troy. As was announced last week, Mr. Rothapfel will show these comics at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres. He booked them immediately after the contract between Educational and International was signed.

"Vanity and Vengeance" with the Katzenjammer Kids is the first of the releases, being scheduled for April 15. This will be followed by Happy Hooligan and afterwards they will be released on alternate weeks. An entirely new process is being used in animating these pictures, and Mr. Hammons is authority for the statement that they are so far ahead of any others that there is no comparison.

Pierce Exploits "The Blue Bird" Successfully

Carl H. Pierce, who is in charge of the exploitation of the Artcraft picturization of Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" in the Middle and Far West, started with the picture in Columbus and has shown it to select audiences approximately twenty-five times in the past two weeks. As a result many flattering expressions of approval have been received from press and public, it is said, among them being a forceful editorial in the Kansas City Star.

Prominent Editors Praise "Struggle Everlasting"

"Struggle Everlasting," Harry Rapf's late production written by Edwin Milton Royle and featuring Florence Reed, Milton Sills and Irving Cummings, has elicited favorable comment from prominent critics of the screen drama and editors of popular magazines.

Robert Rudd Whiting, editor of Ainslee's magazine, wrote Mr. Royle, the author, the following letter: "I consider 'The Struggle Everlasting' the finest thing you have written, and instead of losing its effectiveness as a picture, screening has served to bring out the beauty and power of it in a way that I did not believe possible."

William Harlome Briggs of Harper's Magazine wrote, "What a stunning embodiment of an immense idea you revealed to us. It was not only impressive. I have rarely seen such fine photography."

Randolph Bartlett, Photoplay Magazine, wrote: "It is beautiful photodramaturgy. Florence Reed has never been so brilliant. Scenically the picture is gorgeous. Mr. Rapf deserves high praise for his sincerity and courage in attempting such a work."

The Motion Picture Magazine said, "Nobody on the stage or screen can suggest physical lure as Miss Reed without impossible vampire trimmings—she is sex herself."

"Depths of Sea" on the Open Market

M. S. Epstin, with offices at 1495 Broadway, New York City, announces that Raymond L. Ditmars' "The Depths of the Sea," arranged in a series of four parts, is now ready for release on the open market. "The Depths of the Sea" has just completed a four weeks' engagement at the Strand theatre, New York, running two reels each week. The subject shows in detail animal life such as it lives and exists under the surface of the sea,—octopus, devil-fish, turtle, in fact every sort of fish known to science is shown with clearness and detail.

A combat to death between two giant octopi, also between an octopus and a turtle, and another being the "smoking caterpillar," are some of the strong scenes. This is said to be the very first time that this animal of the deep has been caught by a motion picture camera, in action.

Notable Gathering Sees "The Cross Bearer"

A large and notable gathering saw the new World-Picture, "The Cross Bearer,' presented at Carnegie Hall Tuesday evening, March 26, under the auspices of the Knights of Columbus in aid of the Catholic War Fund drive.

Heading the list of notables was His Eminence, John Cardinal Farley, and among others invited to the showing were John D. Rockefeller, James Butler, Clarence Mackay, Harry Payne Whitney, Thomas Fortune Ryan, Morgan J. O'Brien, Adrian Iselin and others.

Hearts of the World" at Forty-fourth

Since it was announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week that D. W. Griffith's newest cinema production, "Hearts of the World," was scheduled to open at the Lyric theatre in New York on March 31, it has been decided to put the feature into the Forty-fourth Street theatre instead. This was made known in an announcement by Elliott, Comstock and Gest on April 1, together with the statement that Mr. Griffith was expected to arrive in New York on that date to take personal charge of the preparation for presentation of the picture.

The engagement at the Forty-fourth Street theatre is scheduled to open Friday, April 5, with two shows daily. On April 4 a private showing will be given for officials of the United States and Allied governments, municipal and State officials and prominent citizens.

"The Belgian's" Premiere in N. Y. April 18

Plans are being made for the initial New York presentation of "The Belgian," Sidney Olcott's spectacular photoplay depicting the tragedy of the little kingdom. It will be shown for the first time in New York City at the Eighty-first Street theatre on the afternoon of April 18 and will be the principal attraction at that house for three days thereafter.

The production, which is being distributed throughout the world by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation and its affiliated organizations already has been presented in a majority of the leading cities of this country but the metropolitan opening has been deferred to allow time in which to make fitting arrangements for the premiere.

habit of seeing shows while they eat. And he gave them a cabaret 'way ahead, in quality, of anything they've ever had since.

He is modest and absorbed in his work. He is concentratedly and altogether—a producer. And such men are vastly needed in this field.

One hears of lots of praise of Mr. Lasky; and it comes from writers, actors and directors. He gives every possible encouragement to his co-creators of pictures. He stands for good stories and the better things in motion picture visualization.

Brooklyn "Movie Ball" was Big Success

The annual "Movie Ball" of the Motion Picture Employees' Mutual Aid Society, Inc., was held Easter Sunday at the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum and was universally pronounced a complete success. The grand march was led by Leah Baird and a myriad of Brooklyn friends were on hand to greet the popular film star. The officers and committee in charge of the arrangements are to be congratulated.

Cast for Webster's "Reclaimed" Selected

The struggle for a soul between love and hate is the theme of "Reclaimed," the seven reel feature in which Mabel Juliene Scott and Niles Welch are co-starring, and is rapidly progressing under the direction of Harry McRae Webster at the Standard Studio. On completion it will be released on a state right market.

Miss Scott will be remembered for her work in the screen version of Rex Beach's novel, "The Barrier." Her latest work is seen in Edgar Lewis' production, "The Sign Invisible."

Niles Welch who has proven his extraordinary aptitude for motion picture acting with such prominent players as Marguerite Clark, Ethel Barrymore, Kitty Gordon, Grace Darmond and many others, is hard at work as the leading man in "Reclaimed"

Anders Randolf, who is prominently cast in "One Law for Both," "Sins of Ambitions" and in "Who's Your Neighbor?" has been engaged by Mr. Webster for an important role in "Reclaimed."

Emerson Sees "The Blue Bird" in Hospital

John Emerson, Famous Players-Lasky scenarioist and director, is in the Postgraduate Hospital in New York City where he was operated upon for splenic anaemia, the entire spleen having been removed. The operation, which is an unusual and delicate one, was performed by Dr. John Erdmann and was entirely successful.

Shortly after the operation, Jesse L. Lasky prepared a fitting surprise for the director by arranging for the showing of the new Artcraft special release, "The Blue Bird," adapted from Maeterlinck's famous classic of good cheer. With the co-operation of S. L. Rothapfel, a projection machine, screen and operator were installed at the hospital, where to the great delight of the invalid, this production was run off.

Hoagland Leaves Pathe for Government Service

H. C. Hoagland, former manager of Pathe's scenario department, has gone to Washington, where, under George Creel he is now Editor of One-Reel Weeklies, Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information.

M. Ramirez-Torres, who has been with Pathe in important capacities for more than ten years.

Universal Film Editor Enlists

Samuel J. Taylor, for the past seven months editor for Universal, during which time he has been editing and titling L-KO comedies, has enlisted in the photographic division of the Medical Corps and has gone to Washington to enter the government service. Taylor recently has been titling the new Lyons-Moran Star Comedies for Universal.

April Pathe's "Brunet Month"

In Honor of New Official It Is Planned That Every Screen in Country Show at Least One Pathe Play in April

IN honor of its new vice-president and general manager, Paul Brunet, Pathe has decided to have the month of April known within and outside of the organization as "Brunet Month." The month of March, when Mr. Brunet assumed his new office, is said by Pathe to have been the biggest in the history of the company, and now comes the announcement of the most far-reaching drive ever attempted by the organization.

"Our aim is that every picture screen in the United States will show a Pathe picture during that month," said F. C. Quimby, sales manager, in a statement to his managers and salesmen. "We want to make Brunet Month the highest pinnacle of business ever reached by Pathe and that means going 'Over the Top' even more than we did last month."

The best indication of what is to be expected during "Brunet Month" is said to be seen in the success attained in the distribution of Pathe's new feature line-up, "The House of Hate" serial. A number of the biggest houses and theatre circuits in the country have booked Pathe's features recently, the exchanges report, while an indication of how "The House of Hate" is going over is seen in the announcement that John H. Kunsky, the famous Detroit exhibitor, has booked the serial.

Four of the best known theatre circuits in the United States have booked Pathe plays. They are Turner & Dahnken on the Pacific Coast, Ascher Brothers in Chicago, Meyer & Schneider in New York, and Poli in New England. Recent contracts place the Pathe Plays in other such houses as the Boston theatre, Boston; the Tivoli, San Francisco; The Cameraphone, Pittsburgh; The Isis, Denver; Tom Moore's Garden, Washington, and many others.

Reports from various sections are pointed to as showing further the success of Pathe Plays. Fannie Ward in "Innocent" played at the Strand theatre in Buffalo three days recently, following a four-day engagement of another star, who up to that time had been considered the biggest favorite in Buffalo. Manager Crabb of the Strand theatre states in a message to Pathe that even though the other star had Sunday, which is the best day, "Innocent" did as much business in three days as the other picture did in four.

The Winter Garden in Jamestown, N. Y., after a screening of "The Naulahka," "pulled" off another picture placed "The Naulahka" without a single day's advertising and packed the house for three days, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks being the only stars that ever played there for three days before, it is stated.

The management of the Majestic theatre, Tulsa, Oklahoma, is opening his big new house with Pathe Plays. Over this house will be an electric sign thirty feet high and forty-eight feet long. It will be the largest electric sign in the Southwest, carrying 1,000 globes.

Another manager who has had an interesting experience with Pathe serials is James F. Thom of the Grand Opera House, New York. He is now using "The House of Hate" three days each week. He had circularized 1,000 half-sheets, 1,000 one-sheets and 500 block three-sheets. He has five 24-sheets standing up in both entrances as a lobby display.

Motion Picture News Now a Double Necessity

A. E. Milligan, proprietor of the Liberty theatre, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., has just acquired the Broadway in that city, which he has leased for a term of years. Mrs. Milligan writes to MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

"Enclosed please find three dollars ($3.00) which pays for MOTION PICTURE NEWS as per enclosed bill. Now that we have the two places we will need your valuable publication more than ever."

Galva Moves to Reduce Licenses

At at adjourned session of the city council of Galva, Ill., it was recommended by Alderman Brown that the license of motion picture shows be reduced from $18 to $5 a year. It was moved and seconded that the Ordinance Committee be instructed to present an ordinance changing the license fee to the latter figure. The motion carried.

Vitagraph Claims Full Victory in Suit

FOLLOWING the announcement in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS to the effect Vitagraph had won its final round in the Anita Stewart case, Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph, made official claim of a final and complete victory for his company in the suit which was instituted last September to restrain Miss Stewart from leaving the company and working for Louis Mayer, of Boston.

Justice Daniel F. Cohalan, of Part V, Supreme Court of New York, before whom the action was tried, handed down a decision making permanent the preliminary injunction which had been granted last September by Justice Whitaker, which restrained Miss Stewart from going to work for Mayer and barred Mayer from employing her. The immediate effect of the decision is to prevent Miss Stewart from working for anyone other than Vitagraph for a period of twenty-nine weeks.

The decision of Justice Cohalan, based upon a specific provision in the contract between Vitagraph and Miss Stewart in which it was agreed she should make up all time lost through illness over four weeks, means that she cannot contract to appear in pictures or any other occupation until the expiration of the period of restraint.

Exhibitors' Personals

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Manager Volney A. Badger announces that he will hereafter devote his entire time to the management of the Colonial theatre, Portsmouth. The Olmpia will be managed by H. A. Berham.

Extensive alterations are to be made to the Star theatre, Lowell street, Manchester, according to Manager Caron.

NEW JERSEY

The interior of the Strand theatre, Red Bank, has been redecorated and many improvements made, under the new management of J. Clark Conover. Frank Kuhl is a new employe at the theatre.

NEW MEXICO

The newly-organized Liberty Theatre Company controlling the Princess and Elks moving picture shows of Silver City, recently elected James A. Shipley as manager. Mr. Shipley acquires Adolph Schutz's interest in the company, Mr. Schutz having enlisted in the navy. Mr. Shipley was County Assessor of Grant County for six years and is widely known throughout the State. Recently with associates he erected in Hurley what is said to be one of the handsomest moving picture houses in the State, and which received unstinted admiration from D. C. Jackling on the occasion of his last visit to Hurley. Mr. Shipley still retains his interest in the Hurley show.

NEW YORK

Wilbur E. Miles, of 46 Oakley avenue, who has been employed at the Strand theatre, White Plains, for some time, and who is the leader of the well-known Miles-Hitland Orchestra, has been appointed assistant director of the William Fox Moving Picture Company. Mr. Miles was formerly with the Thanhouser Company of New Rochelle. He left to-day for Charleston, S. C., where he will direct the production of "Peggy the Outcast," in which Peggy Hyland has the leading role.

OHIO

George W. Hausheer, president of the Hausheer Construction Company, has sold the Reel Picture theatre, located on East Ninth street, Cleveland, to Lewis Zoffer, for a reported consideration of $10,000.

Henry Hunter, manager of the Empire theatre, Ironton, is having the house thoroughly overhauled and redecorated.

The Grand theatre, East Ninth street, Cleveland, which was opened several months ago by C. H. Miles, owner and manager of the Miles theatre, for a vaudeville house, and which did not prove to be a successful venture, has been taken over by H. Sommerville, Miles' former assistant manager, and will be operated as a photoplay house. It opened under the new policy March 24 with the spectacular Pathe feature, "The German Curse in Russia." Mr. Sommerville has co-operated with A. M. Holah, manager of Pathe's local exchange, for an enormous advertising campaign, in connection with the release of this picture. Announcements will be carried in all the local papers, and in all languages, fifty-one in all, and will reach practically all the inhabitants of Cleveland and its surrounding towns.

Mary E. Cowan has leased to Andrew Dobbs forty-three feet on the north side of Wade Park avenue, Cleveland, on which is located a modern motion picture theatre. The term of the lease is for ten years from April 1 at a rental of $140 monthly, with a further option of five years.

"Over the Top"

Vitagraph Measures Up to a Big Opportunity and Scores a Victory

(Vitagraph Special—Nine Reels)

As every exhibitor knows, "Over the Top" is the most widely read story in the United States at the present time, and there is no doubt in my mind that those who have read the book will want to also see it on the screen, and if it be made known that Empey himself appears as the star this desire will be augmented greatly.

The story in part is a visualization of the methods of trench warfare used on the Western front, and I want to say that I have never seen a reproduction of boys going "Over the Top" that will compare with this one. It is so realistic you forget it is a picture. There is also a story of love and adventure brought into it.

Three things stand out above everything else in the picture. First, the ease with which Sergeant Empey took to acting—he is entirely free of self-consciousness. Second, the wonderful acting of James Morrison—I saw him in "He Never Knew" years ago, and thought he had then done the best work of his career, but in this picture he rises several notches. And, thirdly, the logical and consistent way Director Wilfrid North handled his subject. The picture was staged under the supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph.

There are three good punches in this picture, each one strong enough to form the basis of a five-reel feature.

It was a happy thought on the part of the scenario writer to sprinkle a little humor in some of the subtitles, as this helps to relieve the mind of all tenseness.

The types have been very successfully selected, Betty Blythe as Madame Arnot, and Arthur Donaldson as Frederick Von Emden, deserving special mention.

"The Whispering Chorus"

(Artcraft—March 25—Seven Reels)

One of the most striking examples that I have seen of a picture that ranks big dramatically and narrow as entertainment.

Dramatically—hats off to Mr. De Mille. It is an artistic triumph!

As an entertainment, it is too gruesome. People will leave in an unhappy spirit.

Let me emphasize—people do not like such themes, however artistically presented. Not at this time especially; but they never and never will. I well remember my own exhibiting experience with "The Avenging Conscience."

People want entertainment—more than art.

This picture will get the business; but it will not please, nor leave a happy taste for more pictures.

Metro-Drew Comedies

Two That Maintain the Drew Pace Well

"A YOUTHFUL AFFAIR" and "Gas Logic" are two exceptionally good Drew Comedies, certain to bring hearty laughs. By the way, there is an addition to the Minor family in these two offerings, in the person of Master Bobby Minor (Bobby Connelly). This event gives the pictures another strong touch of home life, which will surely lend additional appeal.

"A Youthful Affair" is the story of a love affair between Master Minor and the waitress at school—at least Bobby thinks it ought to be, because—didn't she give him an extra dish of ice cream? He tells his father about it, making Henry realize that Minor, Jr., is nothing but a "chip of the old block."

In "Gas Logic" father tries to fix the fire in the boiler and each time it goes out. Bobby sees a picture in a magazine, showing how to start a fire by the aid of gas. He now tells father he is going to start that fire. Surprised at the intelligence displayed by his son, Henry gives him a dollar and tells him not to say anything to anybody—meaning mother. However, Mrs. Minor overhears the conversation. Mr. Drew is really funny when he goes up stairs and says, "Well, mother, I've fixed the fire." Another point that will draw a good laugh from the audience is when Henry, angry because he was unsuccessful in starting the fire, orders his son up stairs, as he is about to let go certain "hot" words not found in the dictionary.

These two comedies should please any audience.

"The Lie"

Miss Ferguson at Her Best in Adaptation of Stage Success

(Artcraft—April 8)

As a medium of an entertainment this offering will prove itself to be the best in which Miss Ferguson has ever appeared, possessing those elements that appeal most to the emotions and filled with numerous dramatic incidents.

The picture is based on the play of the same name by Henry Arthur Jones, which had a successful run in New York and throughout the country, with Margaret Illington starring.

It depicts the life history of two sisters, one of noble character, the other weak and treacherous. In order to shield her weak sister, who had given birth to an illegitimate child, from disgrace, the heroine sacrifices her reputation and incidentally the man she loved.

The introduction of the baby, coupled up with the rather risky character of the play, may prove rather embarassing to some exhibitors who cater to the best family trade. However, the delicate handling by Director Dawley, the prestige as a stage star of Miss Ferguson, together with the artistic atmosphere prevailing throughout, rob it of all objectional features.

(For Cast and Synopsis see page 2254)

"The Red, Red Heart"

The Much Twisted "Strongheart" in New—and Shabby—Clothes

(Bluebird—April 8)

By changing some of the subtitles and eliminating the few dramatic incidents, this play can be transformed into a travelogue. The conception and handling of the story are all wrong.

The introduction of the incident of the Tarantula bite is very repulsive and on top of it all the picture shows the marriage of an Indian and a white girl, which feature is bad enough to kill any picture. The impression one gets is that of an attempt to give it some of the atmosphere of "Barbary Sheep" and some of "The Savage," this latter having been produced by the same concern with the same stars.

The action of the picture is jerky, and although a subtitle is now and then inserted with the purpose of injecting dramatic action, it fails pitifully.

It will not please a critical audience.

CAST

Kut-Le	Monroe Salisbury
Rhoda Tuttle	Ruth Clifford
John De Witt	Allan Sears
Director	Wilfred Lucas

THE STORY

Rhoda, losing all interest in life, is brought West. While walking in the Desert a tarantula bites her. Kut-Le, a red-skinned Yale graduate, administers first aid and carries her back home to the ranch. He is invited to call again, and he later falls in love with her. Rhoda is fascinated with him, but tells him of the barrier between them and also of her non-interest in living. Believing the desert air will infuse new life into her and restore her health, Kut-Le abducts her, forcing her to live an outdoor life. The ranch people, suspecting him, hunt for days for the pair, and when they finally find them Rhoda refuses to leave him because he has been responsible for her regained health. Realizing how much she loves him, she consents to marry him.

CLEAR, CRISP BOX OFFICE APPRAISALS

"A Rich Man's Darling"

Louise Lovely in a Drama That Will Satisfy

(Blue Bird—April 15)

ALTHOUGH it switches too strongly to the melodramatic for a reel or so towards the close this is a very good dramatic offering which will hold the interest to the end and entertain.

The underlying idea of the plot is that of mixed identities; however, the story's construction is original and the action swift. It is a clean offering.

Miss Lovely's acting is very good, as is the supporting cast. Winter Hall deserves special mention for, as always, he handled his role well.

Direction, photography and lighting are up to the Bluebird standard.

CAST

Julie Le Fabrier	Louise Lovely
Madame Ricardo	Edna Maison
Lee Brooks	Phil McCullough
Mason Brooks, Lee's father	Winter Hall
Director	Edgar Jones

THE STORY

Upon the arrival of Lee Brooks from his South African hunting trip he is informed that his father has fallen into the meshes of Madame Ricardo, a Spanish beauty from South America, whose husband, she claimed, was killed in a revolution.

Mason Brooks, Lee's father, engages rooms at a seaside hotel, intending to spend several weeks there with Madame Ricardo, but upon being informed that her husband has arrived in town, he hides.

Julie Le Fabrier, a vivacious French girl, model in a dressmaking establishment, is sent to the hotel with some expensive gowns for Madame Ricardo. The hotel clerks mistake her for Madame Ricardo, and she decides to establish herself as such in the suite of rooms engaged. Young Lee comes to the hotel with the intention of exposing her, but falls in love with Julie, whom he believes to be Madame Ricardo.. His father, upon being informed that his son is with Madame Ricardo at the hotel, rushes there in an automobile. Meanwhile Lee leads the supposed Madame Ricardo to a parson who marries them. Eventually the mistaken identities are explained, and Mason Brooks discovers that the real Madame Ricardo's husband is alive, and she is nothing but an adventuress.

"The Bluebird"

Going into Detail on a Picture Deserving of All That Can Be Said

(Artcraft—March 31—Six Reels)

FRIDAY morning, March 29, "The Bluebird" was shown at the Rivoli theatre to an invited audience, through the courtesy of Mr. Rothapfel. This offered me an opportunity of studying the effect this picture would have on an audience by watching for the signs that are so familiar to an exhibitor. I wasn't disappointed. I saw people wiping their eyes—not by any means from sadness, but from sheer happiness and joy. I overhead people in back of me say "wonderful" many times in succession. At the close I asked a lady beside me what she thought of the picture, and she answered: "It is beyond my expectations. As a general rule I do not like the movies, but this is wonderful." I got similar expressions from many others.

Two men deserve a vote of gratitude from the industry for the successful staging of this picture—Charles Maign, who wrote the scenario and employed clear and understandable titles, and Maurice Tourneur, who directed it. The ease with which the director was able to grasp the spirit of the author and interpret it on the screen is truly remarkable.

The story is based on the book of the same name by Maurice Maeterlinck. It is very familiar to the American public, having been presented on the stage for several seasons, and making a tremendous hit. The theme is allegorical—that of two little children, Tyltyl (Robin Macdougall) and Mytyl (Tula Belle), who, assisted by a fairy, go in quest of the Bluebird, the allegory for happiness. The appearance of these two lovable children on the screen created somewhat of a murmur—the sign of approval, and throughout the play the constant remarks of the audience indicated that they had won their sympathy. They really deserve their share of the credit for the success of this play. They are clean and wholesome looking youngsters.

It seemed that the audience hated to see this picture end. It is one of those pictures that refine a person's feelings. It is the very soul of the Motion Picture Art and the kind that silently and unconsciously works for the good of humanity. You can't help but feel its influence.

SUGGESTIONS

FOR THE BALANCE OF THE PROGRAM.—A news weekly or even a scenic would be the most appropriate for a curtain raiser. We would advise strongly against the use of comedy for this performance, besides seven reels make a good one and a half hours show. If you are giving a two-hour show, build it up with an overture, a Ditmars' animal picture and a cartoon. If you cannot be convinced to leave out the comedy, at least use a high-class one—don't use slapstick—and put it, as well as the other short reels, ahead of the main subject. Make this picture stand out. Let your patrons leave the theatre thinking of this picture, and don't show them anything that might interfere with their thoughts.

ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS.—As for advertising, I am not going to advise the use of cages with birds in them, nor cardboards cut and shaped like birds and hung in your lobby from wires strung across. I believe this mode of advertising cheapens your theatre and lowers the picture business to the level of the old nickelodeons, disgusting the better class. Can you imagine T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles, the Liberty of Seattle, Strand of Minneapolis, Royal of Kansas City, or the Rivoli of New York, using such dope in their lobby? If you use such matter, however, do so away from your theatre—in stores, streets, or any place but your lobby.

Have some real artist paint on a cardboard mat 30 x 40 inch, a bluebird with wings spread, and the word MAETERLINCK'S in large letters and "The Bluebird" in smaller, and also the date. Frame it and place in your lobby. Be careful that it is made so clear that your patrons will not confuse the title with a certain firm's name. For this reason it is important to paint the author's name in LARGE letters.

Clean your lobby of all the junk you have been accustomed to using. Let this picture stand out by itself. Try it once this way.

Get space in the papers, commensurate with the capacity of your house, the population of the town and the admission price you will charge, but use it liberally. Put out heralds, if it is not overdone in your town, and if you have been in the habit of changing prices this picture will surely stand it. Double up on your prices, but be careful to let your patrons know that this is "a seventy-five dollar suit of clothes and not a fifteen!"

"Mrs. Slacker"

Gladys Hulette Brings It Up to Program Standard

(Pathe Gold Rooster—March 31)

ALTHOUGH handicapped by rather poor directing the delightful personality of Miss Hullette pulls this picture over and places it in the class of fairly good program offerings.

It is a patriotic subject, blending some pathos, bits of comedy and a few thrills. Exhibitors will find it well suited for propaganda work.

"Salvationizing" the Exhibitor

the enterprise which wants to secure the loan (and I don't seem to remember any howling successes on the part of YOUR principals in the field of production and distribution). Third, on the endorsement of men whose financial standing is so solid that the bank knows it can look to them for payment in the case of default or failure (and, while I may be all wrong, I don't THINK that your plan has the FINANCIAL endorsement, or backing, of any such men). In other words, I want to know what protection I have; what comeback if your plan peters out; and WHO IS GOING TO GUARANTEE ME THIS PROTECTION?"

He asked me if I wasn't interested in saving the exhibitors of the country and, incidentally, the whole industry, and I assured him sadly that I was not and that ended the interview. I kissed him tenderly and let him out into the open air. I suppose he'll rope in a lot of exhibitors, because there are always a lot of them ready to give the rescue bands a flying start, but yours truly will NOT be among those "saved." I'll stick and go down with the ship.

Mr. Average Exhibitor will now render that touching little ballad, "SAVE THE EXHIBITORS AND WIN THE WAR."

Baltimore—A "Nearly There"

Newspapers and Theatres Set Splendid Example on Sunday, But Weakest on Week Days

ALL four of the cities that we have examined in these pages to see the relations between the newspapers and the motion picture theatres permit Sunday shows and since this series of articles has started we have had many questions as to what should be done in cities where there are Sunday newspapers, but where the motion picture house is not allowed to open on that day.

Baltimore is the second biggest city in the country where such shows are forbidden. Philadelphia is the largest. True, they are forbidden in so many words in Boston, but they get by under the heading of concerts. We hesitate to say, without stopping to defend ourselves what we think about the failure of Philadelphia newspapers as a whole and the theatres to get together and so we are going to take up Baltimore, a city that is "nearly there" in co-operation.

And because the mere fact that we have quoted "nearly there" is going to excite curiosity we'll explain our meaning right here. Baltimore newspapers and Baltimore theatres do big things on Sunday (on Monday in the case of one paper that does not have a Sunday edition) but during the week they appear to feel that they have done their full duty by making a splash on Sunday and then forgetting about it. Baltimore Sunday papers rank among the best in the country so far as motion picture treatment is concerned; Baltimore week day papers are among the poorest and we suspect that the theatres themselves are very greatly to blame.

When we started this series of articles we said that we were not trying to go into purely local conditions, and with that in view we feel very sure that the statements that are going to be made here will be met with the statement that Baltimore has its own peculiar ways of advertising that suits the people and that any other method would break traditions and be unpopular. Now let us say right here that any system of advertising that centres its display on Sunday and then lets the people practically forget about the theatre the rest of the week is bad advertising, especially when there can be no Sunday showings and the theatre manager is without that avalanche of word-of-mouth advertising that would carry him well over Monday—if he had it.

And it is bad enough for theatres that are running the same bill the entire week to be content with a little "card" run daily announcing the bill, but to find theatres that change twice a week or oftener making no prominent announcement of that change is just a little too much for any advocate of persistent, intelligent exploitation to swallow.

Yes, advertising in the Sunday newspapers is essential, even though you are not allowed to show on Sunday, but is there any argument that because the theatres cannot open Sunday and that the Sunday display is expected to carry the people over to Monday ought at the same time to carry them over to Thursday? What's the logic of it? Now, we have warned you that motion picture selling is different from other kinds of sales, and we don't want to carry the comparison too far, for it does not always follow, but did you ever hear of a department store devoting Sunday pages to bargain sales that it was going to have on Thursday or Friday? Don't they put on some other bargain sale Monday or Tuesday and advertise THAT and then go after the later sale later in the week?

We are going to answer those questions with the Baltimore situation. Now the last census gave the Maryland city a population of 595,000. It is a prosperous community, and made more so by the war. There are five daily newspapers there:

American, Morning, Daily and Sunday.
News, Evening, Daily and Sunday.
Star, Evening Edition of the American.
Sun, Morning and Sunday.
Sun, Evening Edition.

Now the daily advertising of the theatres of Baltimore is practically confined to the two morning papers. Both of these journals have retained the old habit of running a certain number of advertisements on the first page, devoting the two columns at the left of the page to that. Here is where such of the theatres as do advertise during the week announce their bills. The size of these advertisements is limited by the newspaper to single column and only light or open face type is permitted so that the contrast with the news matter will not be so great.

Now in the copy of the Sun that we have before us the nearest thing to a display is that of the Parkway, Strand and Wizard theatres, under the same management, which is able to make quite a little showing by grouping the three announcements. The Garden and the New each have one and a half inches and ten of the other houses the bare announcements. Now of course Baltimore people have been looking to this very part of the paper for years for the amusement announcements. The argument is, undoubtedly, that a few lines there is worth more than big space elsewhere in the paper. That is all very true, and that is just the point. The people who are looking for some place to go will turn to that part of the paper. The Baltimore theatres are appealing nicely enough to those people who have made up their minds to go to a picture show, but they are not doing anything during the week to make people want to go to a picture show—to their particular show on a certain night. There is quite a difference in the two theories.

It is hard to break away from long established custom, and we hardly expect to see it done, and possibly the Baltimore theatre that did it might not get results at first, but we believe that notwithstanding any peculiar conditions Baltimore theatres would get much greater patronage during the week if they did. Especially is that true since the Baltimore papers gave the motion picture houses practically nothing during the week and seem to cater very strongly to the legitimate houses, possibly on the antiquated theory that there is something more dignified and artistic about them. If we were running a theatre in Baltimore—theoretically—we'd try to get away from custom and go out and grab the people and pull them into the theatre—through intelligent advertising during the week.

"Card" advertising, whether followed through custom or for what reason, is the poorest sort of motion picture advertising, but it is far better than none at all and on Sundays the Baltimore papers come through with the theatres so liberally that one is almost tempted to forget the lack of the Sunday punch.

The American, News and Sun all carry the "chart" idea in Sunday issues and the Star picks this up from the American in its Monday issue. There is no question in the world that this chart plan is one of the best features that a newspaper can adopt and one that will be appreciated by the readers. Briefly, the plan is to give the bill for each day at every theatre that advertises, this being free. We know from experience that in every city where this has been tried and where the newspaper has maintained a consistent policy, this has been a strong circulation maker and a strong circulation holder. For the neighborhood house especially, it cannot be equalled and we have never seen any other system that approaches it for appeal to the man who has never advertised.

However, the Baltimore papers seem to us rather to confuse the reader by failing to place these alphabetically, so far as the theatre names are concerned.

The News excels in its Sunday section and that it is appreciated it is shown that it carries more theatres in its chart, 32, than any other. The American has just four less and the same

What Do Today's Pictures Need?

UNFORTUNATELY one of the effects of the American participation in the war has been the creation of greater demand for the pictures that will amuse, pictures that do not dwell on the sad things in life, that avoid the tense, the morbid and the unhappy.

This week we present the views of more members of the Advisory Board as to what is the matter with pictures as they are being made now. Mrs. Joseph Grossman, wife of the manager of the Standard, Cleveland, O., in her opinion published here, seems to get at the very meat of the thing when she says that the people do not want pictures that are studies rather than a source of pleasure.

Both she and P. E. Noble, manager of the American theatre, Butte, Montana, point out that some of the stars are being put in pictures that are lessening their popularity. Mr. Noble, with his breezy Western outlook on things, declares that the public will no longer stand for the foolish sort of titles, but that they want stories with a real punch to them.

THOMAS D. SORIERO, manager of the Park, Boston, hits upon almost the some point when he declares that the producers should not hypnotize themselves with their own pictures, but that they should let the patrons be the ones to enthuse over the productions. brought out by all the members of the board that have so far replied—that some of the producers seem to be deciding for themselves the sort of pictures that the audiences should have rather than giving the public the sort of pictures that it wants.

Recently a group of men who are in very close touch with all of the productions were discussing certain pictures that had been shown at leading New York theatres. There were certain ones that all agreed were fine picturs, wonderfully made and with tense stories. But at the same time it was pointed out that these were not the sort of pictures with the present day appeal. One leading exhibitor, who caters to average audiences and who has one of the largest houses in New York, in speaking of a production of a celebrated director made recently, declared that he could not be induced to show the picture in his house. "It is the sort of a picture that kills business, that drives people away from the theatre. It is a great picture from one point of view, but it is a picture that leaves the audience restive under the strain. People are not going to the theatre these days to have some moral thrust upon them—a story that is possible in real life, but improbable at the least. In these war days we must have pictures with a reason, a punch, with action, and where possible with either a laugh or the satisfaction of achievement."

This man will be quoted under his name later on.

While these contributions will be chiefly from members of the Advisory Board, any exhibitor is invited to send in his answer to the question: "What is the matter with pictures?" The producers are really trying very earnestly to give the public what it wants and you are doing a service to the public and to yourself by trying to solve the problem—and it is from the exhibitors that the solution must come.

LAST week we recorded that Mrs. Joseph Grossman, wife of the manager and designer of advertising for the Standard theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, was very ill in a hospital. This week we are mighty glad to record that she is much better, and to present as proof of this her answer on "What is the matter with pictures?" She showed her interest in her fellow exhibitors by writing this reply in the hospital:

"What shall we give this great pulsating public?" is the question that the "PRODUCER" continually asks himself. Sometimes a popular novel is chosen, next, the selection of a director, whose past record has placed him far above his fellow directors, is made. Of course, one with individuality is chosen. This is an essential fact, for the success of the picture depends upon this largely. The work has progressed, and wonderful results have been expressed in the trade journals.

At last the picture is viewed. What a disappointment! Somehow it his failed. Will his patronage also feel this, is what the exhibitor asks himself, or has he been too critical? The initial showing is at hand, and the indefinable "something" that he has dreaded has also affected his public. In reaching out for the opinions of a few of his patrons the exhibitor will ask how the picture was enjoyed, will invariably be answered, "Yes, I enjoyed it, but." "BUT" is a small word, but it carries a great deal of weight with it. This "BUT" carries with it a long trail of disappointment, because the director has used his individuality to such an extent that the original thread of the story was lost.

Therefore, individuality should not mean the distorting of the situations of the novel so that it becomes hardily recognizable, but the "bringing out" of the special points of interest as any school teacher would. This is the way we must treat our public. In thinking this all over, we find the question now resolves itself into a new one. It is this: What does the public want, and not what shall we give it?

The public wants stories that are not improbable, stories that are not slashed into, so that the story is a study and not a real source of pleasure. The public does not want silly stories, but one that may be followed with ease. They want spice, just a little. The most exacting like a little. The melodramatic atmosphere that has been woven around many good stories has often been mistaken for "PUNCH," and has been the ruination of what might have been an excellent picture.

Good judgment should stand out, and it is that which will draw new patrons to your theatre and win new lovers to pictures; something that will raise the standard of your house and not lower it.

"TITLE"—this is indeed important. Many excellent pictures have been absolutely refused because their titles fairly reeked with "melodrama." It keeps the really appreciative class out, and they are needed for "up-keep" of your theatre.

More Action, Says Advisory Board

If it is not presuming on your patrons, may I not touch on one more subject? If so, then it is the subject of placing the "star" in pictures that are of such similarity, that when seen in one you have seen them in all. They are too numerous to mention. But I know you will recall several stars that were great favorites, but have dwindled greatly in public favor, for they are given no variety whatsoever. This fickle public of ours tires very quickly of the same kind of food, therefore, it is variety they want, and give it to them or we lose them entirely.

P. E. NOBLE, manager of the American theatre, Butte, Mont., gives us the breezy Western viewpoint of what is wrong with pictures. He declares that his patrons are tired of following stars just because they are stars and that they must be given the right sort of productions. Titles of the pictures have a lot to do with the attendance, is another thing that he points out vigorously:

One mistake that I feel some producers are making at this stage of the game is in the matter of the introducing of characters and the amount of useless matter they use in starting a production on its way. You, no doubt, yourself, have noticed lately some big production that you expected a good deal from was practically spoiled by the following: a very long-drawn iris fade-in of the title—then a fade-out and another fade-in, and this time we have with us "photographed by Jos. Buzzcaught," then we fade out again and fade in again and this time, "directed by Luke McLuke," then another fade-out and a fade-in and then we have THE CAST OF CHARACTERS; and, believe, me, they put in everything from the front door to the kitchen range, and, believe me, it gets tiresome. Usually a couple hundred feet of perfectly good film are used in doing all of this, and a person is positively tired before the action starts.

How much more interesting is the film that starts off with a bang-up of title of what's going on and then as characters are introduced into the action they are also introduced in title form, and in this way leaving the little fellow out who really has nothing to do and in whom the public is really not interested.

Out our way, in this heart of the Rocky Mountains, people seem to be just as skeptical as they are further east, and, believe me, they refused to be bunked—only two weeks ago Mary Pickford appeared in her latest (at that time) Stella Maris, and it positively "died," and here was the reason—NO TITLE—it sounded more like the name of a ship than a perfectly high-class moving picture. Stars today in this community don't get anywhere on their name alone—the day of that has gone by. The name of the star might draw them in, but, if the meat is not in the picture after they get in, the jig is up. We find that the title of any picture is so much in successfully exploiting a production that even with a high-class star and a poor title we usually change the title to mean something to our people.

And I believe another thing. The director MUST have a thorough knowledge of the matter he uses in getting a picture together. Take, for instance, the plays we are getting now, with more or less regularity, the patriotic affair, with the soldiers, etc. Salutes, which the Army holds as "holy" as possible, are given in hap-hazard manner. A great shirking is evidenced in the chevrons of the different rank and little petty larceny things such as this, that the common public are now "wises" up on. The picture I speak of in this special instance is one select put out, known as "Over There."

In nearly every instance nowadays when the salesman comes around to sell you something he has a handle to it, some lemon that is not going over very well, that he will include for a consideration, and this is where the sting comes in. Why don't they make "worth while" film all of the time? It is easy to sell good film and get good prices any place, any time. Why, we even had to cancel our Marguerite Clark contract because of the titles they give them. Just between you and I, now would you like to advertise "Bab's Diary" to a lot of bohunks, or "Prunella" or "The Seven Swans"—they don't sound like much. The same holds true of Miss Clark as with all the rest. Put her in a good picture with a good title and she will do good business, but with "Bab's Diary" or "Seven Swans"—NO.

In conclusion, I am firmly convinced that too much useless matter that is not artistic, that means nothing to the theatregoer, is embodied in most productions today. Not enough thought is given to the very best title that may be given a picture. The silly uselessness of placing a first-water star in a mediocre scenario.

PADDING is the big fault that Thomas D. Soriero, manager of the Park theatre, Boston, and the Strand, Lowell, has to find with present-day productions. Scenes that do not amount to anything are shown in detail, he declares, and he points out how he would put in something of interest when length is needed. Inconsistencies of furnishings is another thing that he points out in his criticism:

You ask me how the producer can improve his pictures to suit the tastes of the public, and I would suggest the following: The one big trouble with the producers today is the padding which they put in to lengthen the pictures. Now, the producer does not need to put in the padding that they use at the present time, but could lengthen the pictures in the making if they would consider one thing, and that is to use a padding which would be interesting to the patrons, for instance: If the story of the photoplay shows a scene where a person is taken sick and a doctor is called, the scene usually shows the doctor at the telephone and the next scene shows him at the patient's bedside. This is an excellent opportunity to insert legitimate padding by showing the doctor leaving his office, say at Riverside Drive, and show him driving down Riverside Drive and through Central Park to the house of the patient. This would be padding, but would give the patrons an opportunity to see some excellent views of New York, or whatever city the picture is being taken in. This would help the picture, as the public has seen something that is connected with the plot, and the detail could be worked out without much additional expense.

Perhaps one of the most important items in the producing of pictures is the photography, which should be as clear as possible, for it not only aids the picture, but in a house where there is poor projection it helps the projection a great deal.

Another thing, in the scenes where wealthy homes are shown, the furniture should be arranged and made to fit the surroundings, for a great many times such pictures are spoiled by having inconsistent furnishings in a home or estate that is supposed to have been represented as wealthy. A great many times the furnishing is overdone and appears too good for the surrounding scenery. This is a critical point to be considered in the making of a picture.

One thing more which is important is the manufacturers should consider when they are making a picture they make the border too large on the announcing titles, and it sometimes overlaps on the pictures, or overlaps on the black surrounding of the screen. Descriptive titles on pictures are also harmful to the interest which would be otherwise displayed in following up the plot of the picture, for it gives a description of what is coming in the next scene and therefore does not hold the attention of the audience. The public today attending the motion pictures are not thick, and they like to follow the plot of the story themselves, but are unable to do this if the title is descriptive and tells them what is coming.

These are a few of the criticisms which I have received continually from my patrons in the theatres under my control, and I do not say that all the faults are in all makes of pictures, but there are some of these faults in every make of pictures.

The producer should not hypnotize himself with his own picture, but let the patrons be the ones to enthuse over a production, and then the exhibitor learns the true value of the picture.

The entire front of the theatre is given over to the display, which includes a huge banner across the front of the house, large cut-outs of Uncle Sam and other patriotic decorations. Branch Manager R. M. Simrill of the General reports that the serial is doing a record business.

Service that counts is the sort that leaves the patron nothing to long for except another dose of it.

MANAGER DOWNS of the Knickerbocker theatre, Cleveland, O., has reached a somewhat new effect in the style of displays that he has been using for the past three weeks. Before this he used very effectively a standard border with the figure of Father Knickerbocker at the top and merely changed the contents of the display for the various pictures. Now he is using the theatre name plate at the top and is using a scene from the current production that always has a man and woman facing each other. In the case of a woman star like Vivian Martin, he selects a scene that has the male lead in it. If there is no such scene available he probably makes the design himself by using the two figures.

The Knickerbocker is a most successful neighborhood house and we can see that Mr. Downs is aiming at getting the romantic interest of his section, and for that matter the whole city, in his advertising. While he does not use as large space as some of the other houses this series of displays is going to prove very effective. Others will find the same effects easy to achieve.

How many pages do you merely read, and how many do you THINK?

STRAND theatre, Norfolk, Va., has an excellent and inexpensive house programme, yet it is made very messy looking by the borders that are employed. Several weeks ago, in discussing newspaper displays, we remarked that borders were very dangerous things to fool with unless you understand the effect that will be reached. Now take a look at this front cover. There are three sorts of borders used, one a rule around the name of the theatres, a fancy affair around the orchestra mention and then another one round the whole of the printed matter. The front cover of all programs should be made as neat as possible. In this case we would suggest that the theatre have a design made for the name of the theatre. In the next place we would set the matter about the orchestra in small Roman type of the style that is used on engraved cards. The hours could be similarly displayed. You do not need big type and wide borders to bring these things out. A light rule border is always more effective. In designing a program remember that the front cover is its face. Make it attractive and dignified and seek to carry out there the spirit of the theatre. The inside part of the Strand programme is well arranged and attractive. We hardly understand why the cover should say "Devoted to Select Pictures" and then not find one of the Select product billed.

HERE is another sample of the "One Idea" work of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga. This is the proper way to go after any display; get the one idea and then go to it for all you are worth.

"The Turn of a Card" naturally suggests the use of the ace in the display and in this case there is the picture of Kerrigan on the ace of spades, while the other cards belonging to the "royal flush" are barely shown. The black background makes the whole display stand out very much stronger than if the cards themselves were merely in outline. The display is made different by using the handwriting effect instead of type.

Lent's over. Get the sackcloth and ashes off of your theatre and keep them off.

PERSONALLY we are opposed to all sorts of wagon displays driven through the streets, because we believe that they cheapen the productions and that they lower the appeal of the theatre. In many cities the municipal laws forbid the use of them and the writer is proud of the fact that he helped to stop this system in one of the largest cities of the country.

Yet in some cases this form of exploitation is effective and it was in this instance. Fox's Comedy theatre is situated on Grand street, Brooklyn, where the population is mainly Jewish and Italian,

Your Idea---and Ours

WHAT a relief!

That's exactly the way we feel about it. We have seen that old stock cut of Bill Hart with his gun pointing straight at us and that do or die expression on his face so often that we almost start to shudder when we pick up a newspaper these days. And if it is not that cut it is the familiar one with the bandit's hat that makes our eye want to roam off to other parts of the paper. So that's the reason we breathed a sigh of relief when we saw that manager Harold B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, has given us something new along the Hart line. (No pun).

"Blue Blazes Rawden" is a human picture and Mr. Franklin has used a human picture of Hart. It will attract attention. He has further carried out the atmosphere by the couple of naked trees at either side of the design. Then he further emphasizes that this is a first run picture without any involved explanation by announcing that this picture will not be seen elsewhere in Buffalo for thirty days. It is what we call a model for saying things "with neatness and dispatch."

With May hustling along, let's put the must in accomplish.

THERE may be a worse city so far as motion picture theatre advertising is concerned than St. Louis, but we haven't come across it. In the due course of the studies of advertising in various cities we are going to have to consider this city and we hope then that we can say some things that stir it up. The newspapers there have shown a willingness to help the theatres, but the theatres themselves seem to think that the proper policy is to get along with the least space possible.

And as a witness for bad advertising we take this specimen. Note that we are told that this is Theda Bara's greatest production and that emphasis is put on the fact that this is the last time it can be seen, yet the theatre uses the wonderful amount of two inches, two columns wide and then crowds enough matter in it to fill ten times the space. Rarely do the St. Louis theatres seek to achieve in their displays anything more than the country town effect.

The reason that newspaper space means merely space to some people is that space is the main thing in their thinking departments.

THERE is a scene in "One Hour" where the hero, after having rescued the girl, is compelled to save her life by taking her wet clothing off her. This is barely suggested in the picture, the whole incident being developed in the best of taste, and there is just a flash of this in one of the "stills" sent out. The man who designs the advertising of the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, seized upon this idea for his display. This is the "one hour" from which the picture gets its name and so a portion of this still was used with a part of the face of a clock partly encircling it. It is easily one of the very best displays that we have ever seen anywhere and at any time.

To know that "One Hour" is a worthy sequel to "Three Weeks" should be enough to warrant an unusual photoplay.

STRAND theatre, Syracuse, has the most effective advertisement that we have yet seen on "The Splendid Sinner" which has just been released by Goldwyn. The black and white effect which is so striking when properly used and so dangerous for amateurs to monkey with has been employed and everything about the display stands out.

We say that black and white is dangerous for those who do not understand it and that should be emphasized when a half tone is used. We have noted that many theatres simply lay this halftone over the black effect and the result is that a smudge is all that is secured. There are tricks to all these little things and this effect has been relieved by running the white oval around the picture of Miss Garden.

Localizing the Appeal of My Players

This is the thirteenth of our series of articles, "The Diary of a Successful Exhibitor," by an exhibitor who tells each week what he is doing to develop his house, the lessons that he learns and the errors that he discovers. It is a frank discussion of the pleasures and evils of exhibition in a town of 15,000, and the tips contained here will probably be of value to managers in all sections.

By a Successful Exhibitor

ONE day I was seated in the projection room of an exchange when a certain feature was run off. There appeared in this picture a player who was little known, but who struck me as one who had unusual ability. And I was pleased to find that the general verdict agreed with mine. I determined that I would feature that player and that I would make her one of the popular stars in my town.

Now it is easy enough to localize the popularity for an established star, one who has already a following even if she has not been seen in your own town, but with a new player there are some difficulties. I immediately set about to get pictures of this player and found that there was only one pose of her available. The exchange man could get no more and so I wrote to the publicity department in the home office and I was told that there were no other pictures on hand. In fact, the publicity department didn't seem to care whether I got the pictures or not. Then the first thing that I did was to get a set of photos of the last three pictures in which she appeared and I made the cutouts of her as I have explained.

The second thing that I did was to write the young lady direct telling her that I felt that she was going to be one of the popular stars in my section and that I wanted to get every different picture of her that was available. I offered to pay for them, but the young woman was probably attracting the attention of an exhibitor for the first time and she was very prompt about sending me the pictures. And with them I got one of the surprises of my life. It developed that she was born not only in my state, but within one hundred miles of my town, and that she had been educated at the same school to which the wealthier people of my town sent their daughters. That was certainly a real stroke of fortune.

Now just a point. How many exhibitors make it a point to feature the players that come from their own section of the country? I know that the film companies, hardly without exception, make no attempt to get localized publicity for their players. Possibly some publicity departments fear that this will cause a little specialized work on material that will not be available the country over. But that letter of the young lady gave me an idea and I proceeded to search through the Motion Picture Directory and found that there were fourteen players from my state, nearly all of whom were prominent and two of whom were among the really big stars of the industry. Possibly some of those who are engaged in photoplay editing knew the fact, but it had never been conveyed to me in a single piece of the publicity that I had ever received.

I determined that I was going to play up the people from my state. Now, not all of these were appearing in pictures which I was booking and a couple of them were in pictures that were being shown at the opposition houses, so naturally I did not go into those for the time, though there is a funny story right here that proves what attention to your business will do. One of these leading men that had been playing at the opposition house made a change and joined the company that was making films that I played just about a week after I got this idea. I found that I was to show his first picture about six weeks later, and when the time did come I featured him as a local boy so strongly—and above the star herself—that I did a record business, and my competitor is wondering yet where I got the information. I cashed in on state pride, as every exhibitor can.

So I began preparing special displays on the actors from my own state that did appear in my productions. One of these was a young woman who was then playing minor parts, but who has come to the top in the past year. When I wrote to the producing company for pictures of her, I was informed that it was not the policy of the company to send out publicity about the lesser players, but that the company would be very glad to send me a set of pictures of Mary Jones, who was a star in the pictures in which the other girl regularly appeared. I suppose that by this time some of the home offices were beginning to think that I was a rather fresh proposition, especially when I wrote back that I thought that I knew my own business and that inasmuch as I was the one that was paying the film rental in my town I thought that I might be permitted to be the judge of the matter that I desired to play up. Incidentally, I got the pictures from the young woman herself.

I don't want to appear to be "taking a fall" out of publicity departments every now and then in the course of these articles, but it seems to me that the producers would do well to get closer in touch with what the exhibitors want instead of attempting to dictate what they will be allowed to have. I cannot see for the life of me how it weakens any star to call the attention to some local player in her support. Certainly it means more business to the manufacturer. In fact, a theatre in the largest city in the state soon borrowed my idea, and I was not a bit sorry because that theatre was able to enlist the aid of a newspaper which had considerable circulation in my territory and the paper began to print pictures and stories about the players from our state, all of which helped me.

But this is rather aside from the star that I started out to discuss. Given a player with real ability, you can make any of them popular if you will try to do it. I did not use adjectives or exaggeration, but I did use just a little more space on the advertisements when she appeared at my house and I called especial attention to the pictures of her on display. Then I sent her a photo of these and got a letter in return which I posted in the center of the display and this attracted new attention. Pretty soon her ability came to be generally recognized, but I was fortunate in being able to take advantage of it from the start, and when she began to appear in really big productions I was cleaning up on them at the time that most theatre managers were just developing her following. You may call all of this a piece of luck if you want to, but I was just beginning to find out how much could be accomplished by paying attention to things that others had passed by.

Local application of pictures and the people in them is something that has not been studied carefully enough. It seems to me that the ideal way would be for the producers to point out where this or that picture might have an unusual appeal to some section, possibly to some minor point. It was impossible for me as it is impossible for nearly all the exhibitors to see the pictures before they came to me for showing, but I have found that a careful study of the trade papers and a careful reading of the publicity matter that comes with the picture will generally give you an idea, although most of the time it will be blurred.

One of the points that came to me was that the people were interested in where the pictures were made and that the patrons liked to get familiar with the localities. Of course, this does not apply to those made in the New York or California studios, but every time that a company went to Savannah or New Orleans or Canada, or better, yet, to any city that was new to pictures, I mentioned this fact. And there is a very sound reason to this. People, especially those who have travelled little, have the wanderlust in them. They like to see strange places. And if they cannot go to these places they like to see them in pictures. Possibly not more than a score of patrons would be attracted by these subsidiary announcements, but these scores count in building up the popularity of a theatre.

The more I studied pictures the more I came to be amazed at the different appeals small things had and the twist that could be given to them. Very often I would pick some significant little point out and feature this in several notes that I ran in the newspaper photoplay column, and then when I showed the picture I advertised this point to the extent of a few lines.

The public observes and the public remembers, and when the public finds that you are digging out for them the things that they want to see the people are going to be mightily appreciative.

Rothapfel's Answers to Exhibitors

Mr. Rothapfel Will Answer Here any Questions Regarding Problems in Exhibition. The Only Conditions Are That the Questions Must Not Bear on the Merits of Particular Pictures or Services and That They Must Come Through the NEWS. Address Your Inquiries "ROTHAPFEL ADVICE, EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU, MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

LXI—If you were without the use of a newspaper for advertising would you recommend the elimination of poster displays in the lobby? I am disgusted with the sort that I have to use, but feel compelled to retain them in lieu of other advertising methods. I have a lobby thirty feet wide by ten feet deep. What arrangement of it would you suggest?—A. N. T.

If you are disgusted with the kind of displays you are getting you surely must have a better and more refined taste than the men who are making them. In this case I would suggest that you paint your own or have a sign painter paint a neat poster that you can use in its place.

I used to do this in my early days. I would also use heralds and personal announcements. "Coming Attractions" would be mostly desired in your lobby and also some house notices.

LXII—Having noticed a great deal about the organization that you have built up around the two theatres that you operate, I am going to ask you what you may at first think is a foolish question. I have been under the conviction that I could not afford to leave my house even for a short vacation. I really believe that I have succeeded in putting my personality into my theatre along the lines that you suggested to another exhibitor who was uncertain whether he should spend the larger part of the time out in front or in watching his show from the inside. Of course I have my pictures booked weeks in advance and the only trouble that might bob up there would be the failure of certain pictures to arrive and the uncertainty that sometimes exists about the short reels. But it is just a question with me as to whether my house is not a little too much built on personality. I have a bright young assistant who is ambitious. Youth is the only thing that is against him. Would you suggest that I leave him in charge—full charge—one day a week and see how things run? I believe that organization, even in a small house is one of the most important things and I have been greatly impressed with the stories of the things that you have accomplished. The further I go in the business the more I learn that the motion picture exhibition game includes a large number of things besides the pictures themselves.—F. E. E.

The best way to answer your question is as follows: You will never be a success unless you build around yourself an organization that you can direct. Don't, for one minute, think that you cannot go away, and don't, for one minute hesitate to place as much responsibility on this young assistant as he can possibly bear. The more responsibility you place upon your staff the more they will appreciate it and if they have the material in them they will be of valuable assistance.

If I have made a success I attribute it directly to my organization and I never fail to give them all the responsibility that they can stand. I have in my organization young men who, two years ago were getting but $20 per week and are today receiving $5,000 per year, and I am glad to pay it to them simply because they have developed and are worth it. Without the organization that I have I could never have accomplished what I have accomplished. If you have anyone under your direction don't be afraid to teach them all that you know, and if they have enough ability to pass you, you will either remain where you are or grow with them and absorb from them.

I note what you say about youth being the only thing against your assistant whom you say is very bright. My friend, youth is a great asset and greatly to be desired. Again I want to make an example of my organization. There isn't a man in my whole organization who is over forty with the exception of my old doorkeeper.

Take my tip, go away for a week or two and see what your staff can do with the place. Give them full charge, inspire them and tell them that you have enough confidence in them to give them entire charge while you are away. I am sure that when you come back you will be ashamed of yourself for ever having doubted them after seeing the results. I know of nothing that gives me greater pleasure than to watch some of my boys put something over because I feel that when they do I have had a little something to do with it, and when they come to me and tell me about it and wait for the little word of praise (which I never fail to give), it is worth all the trouble that you have taken to see the look in their eyes. Understand me, they get the devil also, but I take pains enough to encourage them in having an initiative and at least trying. To this I attribute more than anything else the esprit de corps of my organization which is heralded so widely. In other words my boys are not working for their salaries but are on their toes ready to go through a fire wall if necessary.

[Note: We expect to print soon an article on the way that Mr. Rothapfel has built up the organization at his two houses.]

LXIII—I have noticed in several answers to questions that you keep urging people to think for themselves. That is all very well. I believe in thought and I believe that I think about as much as anyone else, though I may not be so brilliant as some other people. It is all right to talk about thinking about your show when you have the pick of the fresh films, the selection of anything that you want on the various programs and have to think about the best things that you want and to give them plus the thought. It's a darn sight more conducive to thought to have good matter to work with than when you have a lot of junk handed to you now and then. I formerly changed daily; I am now changing every two days. That is as long a run as this town will stand for; therefore I have three sets of thought to work up each week. Several months ago I noticed that you had used a real phonograph in a certain picture. I agreed that would be a good idea and arranged to try it. I rigged up the phonograph and had it ready, but what was my surprise to find that portion had been cut entirely out of the film, by whom I do not know. In another case I arranged some specialties with a news weekly, and another issue came in its place. In still another instance the print of a feature sent me was so bad that it could not be much more than seen. These were from three of the largest companies. These are exceptions to a certain extent, but the exhibitor far away from the exchange is up against it. Of course the exchanges put the blame on other exhibitors in each case and it may have been their fault, though I don't see how any one or any ten exhibitors could have worn the feature print so that it could scarcely be seen. I am really trying to build up my theatre. What would you do in cases like this? Would you go before the audience and tell them what is the matter and offer to give their money back or what? Now this is not an isolated case and you will confer a favor on exhibitors everywhere if you will find some solution for this problem.—L. K. R.

The whole tone of your letter is pessimistic. What you need is either a good rest or someone to kick you in the shins to wake you up. Of course you have thought. You couldn't live without thinking to a certain extent, but as far as being as brilliant as some other people, of course, that depends enitrely upon yourself. You say, it is all right to talk about thinking about your show when you have the pick of the fresh film.

Listen my friend, I didn't always have "the pick of the fresh film," as you call it, nor the selection of anything I wanted for my various programs. I didn't always have the advantages which you speak of. I made these advantages possible (if I have them) by thinking along lines that I have so often spoken about, and if you think for one minute that I have had these things handed to me on a silver spoon you are very much mistaken. I don't think any exhibitor in this country has worked so hard, has gone through the different trials and tribulations as the writer has, and yet when I look back at it all, it has made me.

Don't go around with a hang-dog look and say it's all right if I had what the other guy's got, but go out and get what the other guy's got. I don't like fellows who write me letters such as you do because you remind me so much of the fellow who wishes he had somebody else's money because wishing for it never gets anything. Regarding your film, don't let them hand you junk. I still insist that you think and keep on thinking. Read your own letter, think it over and I don't think that you will ever write such a letter like this because on the face of it it shows that you are badly licked and you need someone to put a little optimism in you. In other words you need backbone.

I want to hear from you again and my advice to you is to think a whole lot more and for goodness sake think in the right direction. Now as to your problem, I believe in being perfectly frank with your audience, and furthermore that you always have at your disposal an emergency show. I further advise, if this is impossible, to go before your audience and give each individual his money back; and be frank and tell them that you want to be fair with them and send them home feeling good. But this is only a last resort as it reflects on your managerial ability. Go to the exchange and see that you get good film, and if you don't get any satisfaction there go above their heads and then something will surely pop.

Seeing the Rialto and the Rivoli with Rothapfel

ROTHAPFEL saw the show at the Rivoli Sunday four times. We admit that we saw it ourselves twice and that the only reason we didn't see it again was that daylight saving got in our way. And there is a reason behind this more or less frivolous statement. The Rivoli bill unquestionably marks a new standard in motion picture presentation; it is the most artistic offering that we have ever seen, a bill that could run a month if so desired.

How the bill scores can be appreciated by those who spell Art with a capital "A" when they are told that one of the leading spirits in the Metropolitan Opera House declared that it was the greatest presentation that he had ever seen on any stage. And we agree. And Rothapfel's part in it is that he has never worked harder, never given each detail more careful attention, and that he—and no one else—has ever achieved such a great success.

That is a point for exhibitors to remember. How many after such an achievement would have spent their time receiving the plaudits of the crowd rather than sticking hard at work on the job.

"I have always held that the motion picture can be put on the same plane as the so-called highest forms of amusement," said Mr. Rothapfel to us, "and I believe that this bill has proved it." And it certainly did, and the applause of the audience and the comments as the throngs passed out would have quite satisfied the every yearning of the prima donna who lives on flattery. It is a bill so different from others to merit attraction from that angle, and the way that everything is done is so distinctive and in keeping with the whole motif that one is conscious only of a smooth running presentation in which the highest mark is reached at the very start and from which there is never a hair's breadth deviation. It is unfortunate that such a bill needs to be seen; words merely limp in such cases.

"La Boheme" is the overture. This is played with the center of the dome blue and the remainder of the lighting in red, with the exception of the pillars around the stage, and at the end the gold lights come up with a smashing, double flash that seems to demand from the audience the tribute of applause that follows.

Easily one of the best scenics that has yet been shown is supplied by Educational with "Silent Wonderlands of the West." This was shown largely with the organ and the calls of the wilderness that are given in the specially written music added a sort of uncanny fascination. Now you will note this spirit of the mystery, of the land of make believe has already started through the bill. Watch it continue as Jeanne Gordon sings "The Fortune Teller" scene from "The Masked Ball." The lights through the house are all blue as the curtain parts, revealing in the dim light the soloist and twelve girls reclining on the greensward in the forest. Now the proper setting of this for a larger stage would have called for a caldron with its red fire, but this would have crowded the stage at the Rivoli and so Mr. Rothapfel has achieved a much finer effect by a slowly growing and dimming red light from the side of the stage, which fell on the singer's face. Here is another thing. These twelve girls were there for the effect; not a note they sing. How many managers would hire a chorus merely for the effect? Now there is the element of the weird, the fairy land through this song, yet there is another coupling up with the next number, for the number closed with a thunder effect, the flare of horns, the crash that leads one into the Italian war pictures that follow.

This third installment shows the most remarkable fighting pictures that have ever been shown beginning with flocks of Italian aeroplanes taking the observations, the preparations in the trenches, going "over the top" and finally the capture of droves of Austrians. Through this whole number there is the most elaborate musical accompaniment that we have ever known to be given such a production, the sounds of battle reproduced, the constant calls of the bugles, the notes of the struggle, and the victory, descriptive music counterpointed with Italian patriotic music. Time after time, the audience broke into applause, loud cries came from the galleries again and again and then at the end when the torn, but victorious Italian flag is shown waving over the battlefield where shells are still bursting—well, the scene at the Rivoli is one you will never forget.

For the orchestral prelude for "The Bluebird" and for the incidental music of the production, the works of twenty-two noted composers have been used. We regret that we are unable to give the musical store in detail, but this is one of Mr. Rothapfel's own secrets, and he refuses to allow any one to know it. But when one is told that he, Dr. Reisenfeld and others worked continually for more than a week over it, and that the splendid orchestra was drilled again and again to get these effects, one may imagine the result.

Now as this prelude starts the lights in the house are all blue, not with the full effect but with the globes at the edges of the domes and arches only burning, giving the shadowy blue effect to the house. The curtains part, and there is revealed to one a scene that might be called the walls of the mysterious fairy land. But the red-flaring cross in the center is symbolic of the soul, the motif of the feature. It might be said to bring in, too, the Easter spirit, for there was something about it suggestive of the worship at the manger. The Easter effect was further carried out by two tall candles at either side of the stage, which burned with tiny single blue lights. Now as the curtains part there is revealed at the left of the stage one girl, symbolic of dreaming while there comes across the stage another symbolic of life. They go to either side of the stage, and with their arms outstretched in worship. Slowly the film-like curtain, in front of the main one goes up, and then just as slowly another comes down, this time a green one with the screen attached, and a moment later the green curtain itself disappears, leaving only the screen before the audience and with the picture starting over it. The lights dim slowly with the two girls standing there so that the audience never knows the moment that they disappear.

You will read elsewhere of the wonderful beauty and the irresistible charm of "The Bluebird." It is a picture that will appeal to every heart, it will bring tears of the goodness and the gladness of life to every eye. They came to Rothapfel's as he saw it, they came to us, they will come to every one who is normal. And it is the music, the wonderful charm of the entire theatre that contributes so greatly to this effect. Two points in the presentation we want to bring out. At one point the boy enters the cavern of the ghosts and here the voices of girls are used behind the stage with the weird wailing effect, and at another point where the ship is bearing the new born children to the world and the symbolic setting of maternity is shown, one of the soloists sings an original composition that adds greatly to the effect. At other times portions of the orchestra are used back of the stage for special effects.

Unquestionably this presentation at the Rivoli marks a NEW ERA. It has proven that the photoplay presentation can be not only as good as any stage presentation that has ever been made, but BETTER. After a lot of years of familiarity with all classes of amusement, we'll take the Rivoli presentation for ours and then let the legitimate stage, the opera and the spectacle come and try to offer us something JUST AS GOOD.

And we come to the Rialto. With the thought that was put on the Rivoli show, and though we know that Rothapfel never neglects one house for the other we almost expected an inferior presentation there, but it wasn't. Had the feature picture, Charles Ray in "The Family Skeleton," been less tiresome and more logical, we would have called the Rialto show a perfect bill. And that is "going some."

"Stradella" is the brilliant overture and this is played with the lighting all gold, with the exception of the green center dome. There is a joyful tinge, with the lighter effects through the most of the selection. This is followed by a Finlay picture, "Wild Bird Pets," a very dark, but entertaining picture, and the music here used is Herbert's Conzennetta," "Causeries" and two caprice numbers. Helena Morrill follows singing "Gianinna Mia." At first the lighting is all dark red and this gradually shifts into a blue.

Paul A. Hutchins and Pythian Hall, North Statford, N. H.

Youthful New Hampshire Exhibitor Puts Faith in Advertising

IS Paul A. Hutchins, who runs the Pythian Hall at North Strafford, N. H., the youngest successful exhibitor?

Mr. Hutchins was sixteen years old when he started to run the theatre, a hall that seats 500 people, and the past year and a half has proven that he is successful. During that period he has shown such productions as "Civilization," "The Fall of a Nation," etc., and has made good on each one of them. That is a remarkable record when one considers that his township has a population of only 900 and the community of 400, but the secret of his success has been advertising.

"I figure," he writes, "that ninety per cent of the success of any picture is in the advertising of it. The man who runs his advertising on a low basis is the man you hear of failing." We agree with him.

His first big picture was "The Fall of a Nation," which he booked for Thanksgiving Day two months ahead of the date of showing. He advertised in the county paper for two weeks in advance and then used two six-sheets, two three-sheets and twenty-four one-sheets in his poster display. In addition he used slides for two weeks, had window cards and bills printed and four days before the showing he got the local drug store to devote its window to a patriotic display. He played to 300 out of the 400 people in his community, which is some record.

When Hutchins showed "The Life of Our Savior" he got indorsements from the local priest and ministers and then carried heavy advertising as he had done on the other picture with the result that he not only got the whole town but ten autos filled with people came from a distance. He charges 11 and 22 cents, including war tax, at his regular shows, but on special occasions he has charged as much as fifty cents and successfully.

STRAND'S big lobby was filled with waiting crowds as we left the theatre Sunday evening attracted by the feature, Mary Garden in "The Splendid Sinner," another one of the stories built around the war with the heroine paying the penalty of death for her love for the man who is taken from her and for her country.

Coming immediately after it is another one of the James Montgomery Flagg comedies, "The Art Bug." This is a delightful burlesque on Greenwich village life, and it is so full of laughs that it sends the audience away in a good humor after the sombreness of the tense feature.

"Dance of the Hours" is the overture this week, a beautiful selection and well played. This is followed by an animated cartoon arranged by Managing Director Harold Edel, and made by Paramount-Bray. It introduces rabbits rolling an egg which finally bursts showing the figure of the baby Strand with an appeal to aid the third Liberty Loan. The Topical follows without a break, opening with Hearst-Pathe scenes at Camp Upton, played with a stirring march, counterpointed with "Over There" and the rat-tat of the machine guns. Paramount-Bray shows grizzly bears as pets of soldiers and then follows a Pathe scenic, "Valley of the Dordogne." H-P pictures show the wreck of the "Florizel," with wave and storm effects, and then follow interesting Paramount-Bray pictures of making postage stamps, with the bars of "Yankee Doodle" heard now and then. H-P pictures show the British tank smashing brick walls at Philadelphia, and then come the diagram pictures showing how Paris was bombarded, the thrilling finish being presented with the H-P pictures of the soldier boys at Camp Travis, the same pictures that open the Animated at the Rialto this week.

This week's sees the final instalment of the wonderful Ditmar's, "Wonders of the Sea" pictures. Among the scenes are star fish, hermit crabs, and a battle between two huge lobsters. At another point a big hermit crab falls victim to a devil fish. These pictures have never failed to bring applause from the Strand audiences.

Strand ladies quartette follows with a series of four selections of Indian melodies, opening with "From the Land of the Sky Blue Water." We believe that this could have been made more effective by preceding the number with an unusually good scenic showing scenes in such a land as the song describes. The effect would go over greater. With the third one of the numbers, "The White Dawn Is Stealing" some excellent night storm effects, and then the dawning is brought out on the drop which shows a Grecian temple and water scene.

Grace Hoffman, coloratura soprano, delights the audiences with the waltz song from "Romeo and Juliet."

Rialto and Rivoli

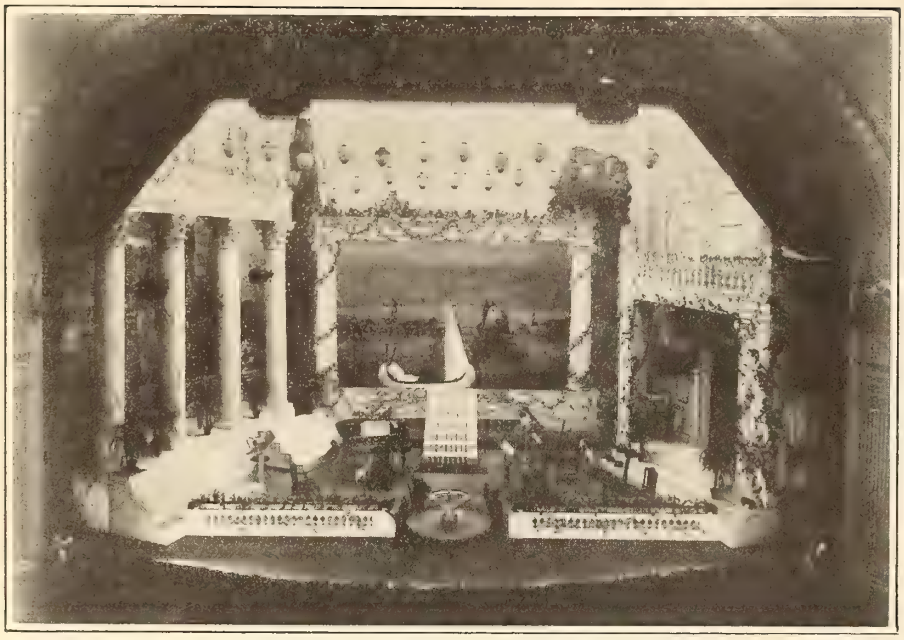
material is centered here. It opens with Hearst-Pathe pictures of soldiers at Camp Travis, which contains some striking scenes of marching thousands. "Rialto March" is used. Then follow pictures of Chicago women organizing for service abroad, and the last eight bars of the chorus of "Onward Christian Soldiers" makes it most effective. H-P pictures through a cartoon illustrate the way that the big German gun bombarded Paris, "Robespierre" overture being the musical accompaniment. Universal contributes a remarkable shot of German raiders over Paris, and the bringing down of one of the Hun airmen, the same music being continued most effectively. H-P pictures show the wreck of the "Florizel" with accompanying storm effects. Universal pictures of preparations for attack in Venice were shown with a new composition, "Venice," but to those who cannot get this "A Day in Venice" is just as suitable. Gaumont pictures show the fire and explosion in Jersey City, which were made more striking by using a red slide in the projection machine, and by very slowly flashing red effects above the screen. An original agiatato was used. The women ambulance drivers get a big hand in the course of this scene. Universal's pictures of swans added a dainty touch, and St. Saens' "The Swans" is used. Gaumont pictures show the new American tractor, shown with a one step, and the same service presents the unique locomotive-built auto. Universal then contributes most timely pictures of the final preparations in one of the National Army camps, alternating the scenes with sports of the soldiers, and this is shown with a patriotic medley breaking into "What Kind of an American Are You?" The big smash of this picture is followed by a Gaumont cartoon with a clever cartoon saying, "I Have Bought My Third Liberty Bond. Have YOU?"

A most effective number is furnished by Greek Evans singing "King of the Vikings." The bill ends with a rip-roaring Toto-Pathe comedy, "Fare Please."



Attractive stage setting of the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Stage Setting Adds Much to Attractiveness of Grand Rapids House

MAJESTIC GARDENS, one of the Gillingham-Smith picture theatres at Grand Rapids, Mich., has a most attractive stage setting in the nature of an Italian garden. Fountains, flowered borders and colonnades are combined effectively. On the other side is the porch of an Italian villa, all the effects being carried out in marble with trailing vines over the entrance.

The drop at the back shows a Venetian scene, but the gondola in the foreground is very real and this is used for the entrance of the orchestra leader or one of the soloists on special occasion. Hanging lights above the stage add to the effect.

Stage settings play an important part at the Majestic Gardens, various rustic scenes having been used prior to this one.

Baltimore Theatres Make Fine Show on Sunday, But Little During Week

number are "picked up" by the Star on Monday, while the Sun has only 23. Some of the theatres which use the American do not use the News, and vice versa, but to cover a city the size of Baltimore we would urge even the smaller houses to use both papers. They can afford it.

First of the four pages of the Sunday News is devoted largely to legitimate houses, the layout being given over to that and most of the stories bearing on the stage, yet the motion picture theatre gets its showing with the "chart" and with a number of interesting little stories about such players as Mary Pickford, "Bill" Hart, etc. Now there is one of the things that makes the News such a good example for others to follow. There is real interest in this matter; there is not a line of matter that is not worth reading and we'll bet that the motion picture fans of Baltimore and for miles around pore over this matter. It's worth a million of the highly adjectived press notices out of which you may have observed that we take a fall whenever we get the chance.

One of the attractive features of the second page is the "Questions and Answers Department," undoubtedly one of the most interesting features of any newspaper. We are told that so great is the volume of questions received that the News is weeks and weeks behind. Here are more short stories about players and plays, with interesting reading notices with NEWS put into them about the attractions at the various houses.

Similar matter is carried over to the third page and then there is another highly entertaining column, "Out of Focus." Third of a series of pictures on "How They Laugh and How They Cry" is carried out on the last page with more of the stories and notices.

We note that the News does not give the motion picture houses a "layout," showing pictures of the stars at the chief houses or scenes from their plays. We think that this is the one point where the American excels. No newspaper can overlook the value of illustrations on the photoplay pages. But the American evens up this by not mentioning the name of the theatre in any of the notices about the films that are to be seen. We believe that this is carrying the theory of news too far—the theory being that the advertising itself is worth the space and that if the person is interested in the story he should hunt through the ads and find where the picture is being shown. We believe that a couple of columns frankly giving the name of the theatre, but not allowing the theatre manager to gush about his production would be appreciated by the readers as well as by the theatre. The American also breaks its page up into short stories. They are good and they will be read. The Sun also has a layout on the principal houses and then frankly gives reading notices to the various theatres. In our judgment, a combination between the Sun plan and the News plan would result in the ideal photoplay section—representation for the bigger advertisers in the layout, together with a short news story about the current film, and then the greater part of the paper devoted to the real news. The Star uses a layout and then follows with short paragraph matter, the first of which is news matter and which then becomes reading notices for the houses advertising.

We wish every paper in every city in the country could make the splendid showing that Baltimore shows so far as the Sunday papers are concerned.

One of the first things that you note in looking at the displays is that the theatres advertise the bill for the last half of the week just as prominently as they do the first half, and that brings us right back to the argument with which we started this article. Why do they do this? They use only the card system during the week, and no display on the change in bill during the week, so they have to bring this out on Sunday. Their own plan of advertising during the week forces this on them. And we still maintain the assertion that we have always made during these articles that any advertising that by inference invites the people to choose which of two shows they will see is not the best advertising, and that the real advertiser sells his NOW show first. This rule does not apply to the neighborhood house with its own particular clientele, but certainly it does to the larger house.

There are four strictly first run houses in Baltimore, the Parkway, the New, the Blue Mouse and the Picture Garden. All but the Parkway change twice a week. So the other three still follow the plan of offering two different bills at once and a big share of the public takes its choice. How much better to get the public to BOTH your shows, but you cannot do it by advertising them with equal prominence.

But Baltimore has made a splendid showing as a glance at the opposite pages and the amount of advertising will show. There are fourteen down town houses, four down town vaudeville and picture houses and eighty-six neighborhood houses in Baltimore. About sixty of these houses use the newspapers and thirty-five use them regularly. Nineteen, all neighborhood houses, advertise only on Sunday and fourteen both daily and Sunday with two using space daily only.

That's a fine showing. The motion pictures pages, especially those of the News and the American look prosperous. Yes, Baltimore is "nearly there." It's all the way there as far as Sunday is concerned, but we fear that the theatres are somewhat weakening their Sunday appeal and not getting the benefit of the business they would get by failure to use display space during the week. We'd like to see what would happen if they did.

Chicago Theatre's Expert Shows Real Artistry in Announcing the Bills

CENTRAL PARK THEATRE, one of the handsomest houses in Chicago, and one of the most successful in the whole country, is setting a high mark in lobby display work through the efforts of Alexander Frank, display manager for Balaban and Katz. It represents the perfection of artistic display, the sort which has the punch in it without anything to offend the eye. The Central Park is the first theatre in Chicago and one of the few in the whole country to employ a man for this special work, and the management chose the best available in Mr. Frank, who was former lobby advertising specialist at the Fifth Avenue theatre, New York.

While the Central Park is located in a splendid neighborhood, the theatre advertises that it is not a neighborhood house, and it proves that by appealing with great success to the patronage of the entire city. The theatre seats 2,600 and represents an investment of a half million dollars. Leopold Kuhn, the managing director, selects every picture that he shows and directs the special lighting effects and provides music that is in keeping with the pictures. It is to line up with these other developments of the art of exhibition that the services of Mr. Frank have been secured and certainly that gentleman is showing what exhibitors can do to make their lobbies attractive.

Mr. Frank's policy has resulted in all of the printed matter that usually fills lobbies being banished. In its place there are attractive designs, each one done by hand and each one different, and each one of which attracts the attention of the patrons, who uniformly spend their time studying these either before or after the show.

The center photograph shows the display that was used over the entrance of the theatre on "The Son of Democracy," a simple but effective announcement. In the center on the easel was a picture of Benj. Chapin as Lincoln, as supplied by the producer, Mr. Frank only adding the gray mat to make it the more attractive. The bust figures of Lincoln were taken from a recent issue of the Chicago Tribune while the large sign and the shields were the work of Mr. Frank. On the two pillars on either side of the Central aisle will be noticed two stationary frames which hold display cards 22 by 31 inches, and it is in these frames that Mr. Frank advertises the coming attractions through his excellent cards, two of which have been reproduced.

Photographs, of course, fail to show the color combinations that are used in these displays. However, the general effect can be seen, and Mr. Frank declares that any fair showcard writer who will study will be able to produce these effects. We regret that we are unable to reproduce more of these, but we expect to have a second article about the work of Mr. Frank in an early issue that will go further into detail. In many cases these cards are illustrated with stills from the production, but the main portion of the card is devoted to the lettering. Very few words are used in this matter, the main thing being to bring out the name of the star and the title of the picture and at the same time to keep the whole design in sympathy with the production.

In addition to these display cards, Mr. Frank makes a unique and effective use of star portraits on the current attractions. The photos as supplied by the distributors are mounted on a special gold mat which gives them the effect of oil paintings. A baby spot light arranged on the balcony of the theatre is trained on these pictures, making them stand out.

Present and coming attraction cards are interchangeable and the display cards are changed on each bill.

There isn't the slightest doubt that an attractive lobby is one of the most important things about a high class theatre today. It is of even more importance than the show windows of stores that lead the people to enter and make their purchases. More and more managers are realizing this and therefore work like that of Mr. Frank is well worth studying and adapting to the needs of other houses.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Ready Made Ad-Talks

Dorothy Dalton in Thomas Ince Production "Tyrant Fear"—Canadian Story

Dorothy Dalton in "Tyrant Fear" is the next offering to the patrons of the ——— theatre. The management recommends that everyone make it a point to see Miss Dalton in this masterpiece, produced by Paramount under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince by R. William Neill with John Stumar at the camera. R. Cecil Smith, one of the best scenario writers in the field, is responsible for the story. Supporting Miss Dalton in this production are, Trusston Hall, Melbourne MacDowell, William Conklin, Lou Salter and Carmen Phillips. The star of "Flare-Up Sal," "Love Letters" and "Love Me"—all big screen successes, adds one more to her laurels in "Tyrant Fear." It is in five reels. The scene of the action is laid in the Canadian woods. The plot is filled with strong action, dramatic situations and virility. Miss Dalton has the role of Allaine Grandet, who lives with her father in the great North Woods of Canada. Her father is strong in body and fearless but shiftless. He seeks to marry his daughter for selfish reasons, ignoring her wishes in the matter. Jules Latour, a trapper, enters the village and is atracted by Allaine's striking beauty. He begins negotiations with her father, for his daughter's hand. The bargain proves satisfactory to Grandet. She will not resist her father's wishes and although she despises the man whom he has selected for her husband she consents to the marriage. At the marriage celebration, the husband drinks freely and during the festivities seizes a girl guest, Marie, and kisses her. Pierre, the sweetheart of Marie, resents his actions and in a battle which follows he gives Latour a bad beating. Allaine goes to his assistance but he repulses her. Later we see Allaine in a dance hall and there she wins the respect of the man she loves. At the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, Dorothy Dalton in "Tyrant Fear."

Star of "Baby Mine," Madge Kennedy, in "The Danger Game"—Sommerville

The latest offering of Goldwyn, starring Madge Kennedy, star of "Baby Mine" and other comedy screen dramas, "The Danger Game," comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. "The Danger Game" was written by Roy Sommerville, one of the most successful writers for the screen, is in six reels and was produced for Goldwyn under the direction of Harry Pollard. Hugo Ballin is responsible for the art direction and William Fildew was at the camera. In the cast, in support of Miss Kennedy, are seen Tom Moore ,who has made sucn a decided hit in the late Mabel Normand comedies produced by Goldwyn, the last one being "The Floor Below"; Paul Ducet, Ned Burton, Mabel Ballin and Kate Blancke. "The Danger Game" is guaranteed to entertain the most sedate from the flash of the initial title to the final fade-out. There is comedy galore—the Kennedy kind, always pleasing and humorous and of the sure-fire brand. Mr. Sommerville, a former newspaper man, a writer of note and one of the most prominent members of the old Triangle Fine Arts scenario staffs, author ot one of Douglas Fairbanks first big successes, "Reggie Mixes In," responsible for one of Norma Talmadge's most successful plays and one of the real big factors in the scenario game, wrote this play especially for Miss Kennedy and he has seen to it that she has been given every opportunity to display her ability as a light comedienne. She has the role of Clytie Rogers, a wilful daughter of the rich who has taken to writing and is very much peeved when a well known critic "roasts" her first book. The critic writes that many of the incidents which Clytie has recited in her work would be impossible in real life. She starts to prove to him that he is wrong and she is right.

Theda Bara in the Famous Biblical Story "Salome"—Splendor and Pageantry

(Fox Production)

William Fox under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, has picturized a version of the famous story "Salome" which follows closely the Bible story told by Josephus. the famous Jewish writer in his book, "The Antiquities of the Jews and the History of the Jewish Wars." Theda Bara, the screen's most famous vampire, has the title role in this production of splendor, pageantry and dramatic episodes.. The picture illustrates with spectacular vividness the various steps in the thrilling historical drama which has been presented before the public, in the opera, time nor money to make this latest success of Miss Bara, a crowning achievement in the screen drama. The story around which this Fox production revolves tells of Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee and Paraea. He has contracted an illegal marriage with Herodias, wife of his brother, Philip. Herod is the real power of his dominion but he is constantly the object of trickery and treachery. He is given to voluptuous entertainment and neglects the welfare of his people for a pretty woman. He falls deeper and deeper into moral degradation. Then comes John the Baptist, preaching the coming of the Saviour. He warns the sinful to repent, lashing Herod and Herodias in their sinful union, with words of fire and damnation. He is hailed by the masses as the second "Elijah." Herodias incensed at his rebukes, plans his destruction, employing the aid of Salome to further her purposes. Herod in the midst of a debauch calls upon the beautiful Salome to dance before his throne. He lavishes everything upon her, even granting her every wish and she calls for the head of John the Baptist. Her wish is granted and the greatest of the world's tragedies is enacted.

Theda Bara in "Salome" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on——— of ——— week.

Winsome Little Myrtle Lind in Late Comedy-Drama, "Nancy Comes Home"

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

"Nancy Comes Home" presents winsome little Myrtle Lind in the featured role of a rollicking comedy-drama that will brightei the spirits of the patrons of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The story was written by B. D. Garber, scenarioized by Robert F. Hill and produced for Triangle under the direction of Jack Dillion with Steve Norton at the camera. The prouction is in five reels. In the supporting cast with Miss Lind are seen, Jack Gilbert in the juvenile lead; George Pearce, Myrtle Rishell, Eugene Burr, Anna Dodge, Percy Challenger and J. P. Wild in character roles. The story tells of a little girl who is neglected by her social aspiring parents. Nancy is her name and she is at a girls' boarding school when the story opens. She writes her father and mother that she would like to come for a vacation and plans to have a good time. Her mother who has neglected her has arranged a children's party for her daughter not realizing that her daughter has grown to womanhood. Nancy, on her arrival, is surprised to learn that she will not be permitted to visit the cabarets and have a good time generally and that neither her father nor mother will take her out. One evening, during her mother and father's absence, Nancy is lonesome and decides to resort to desperate means in order that she may get a glimpse of a cabaret and have a good time. She takes her mother's furs and costly dresses to the pawn shop and raises enough money to buy pretty clothes. She elicits the aid of the chauffeur, who is the son of a wealthy family, and together they start out. While in a fashionable cafe a murder occurs and the chauffeur and Nancy are accused of complicity.

How Nancy is exonerated and how she wins a rich husband is told in this most interesting Triangle comedy drama featuring Myrtle Lind.

"When Nancy Comes Home" will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"The Girl Who Wouldn't Quit," with Louise Lovely in the Featured Role

(Bluebird Five-Reel Production)

A Bluebird with Louise Lovely portraying the principal role—this is the announcement made to the patrons of the ——— theatre ——— week. On ——— of ——— week Miss Lovely will appear in the role of Joan Tracy in "The Girl Who Wouldn't Quit," adapted from the famous magazine story by Oliver Curwood titled, "The Quest of Joan." It is in five reels with every scene brim full of action—out-door action. The action is laid in a Western mining town, with typical Western characters and strong supporting cast of Universal players. The production was made under the direction of Edgar Jones, at Universal City, Los Angeles. In the supporting cast with Miss Lovely, are seen Henry A. Barrows, Mark Fenton, Charles H. Mailes, Gertrude Aster, William Chester and Philo McCullough. Mr. McCullough will be remembered for his excellent work opposite Baby Marie Osborne in the little actress' biggest successes for the Pathe program. Miss Lovely has the role of Joan Tracy whose father is a mine foreman. Joan and her father are on the way to a large mining camp of which the father is to be made superintendent. The present incumbent of that position hears of Joan's father's intended arrival and plans to prevent him. The company announces a large shipment of gold buillion to a near-by railroad centre and Robert Carter, the foreman who is to lose his position on the arrival of Tracy, conspires with the telegrapher to steal the bullion and to arrange matters in such a way as to point the finger of suspicion at Joan's father. The driver of the wagon containing the bullion is killed and Joan's father who is in the neighborhood is accused of the crime. He is sentenced to life imprisonment. Joan sets out to free him for she knows that he is innocent of the charge. Her adventures follow in "The Girl Who Wouldn't Quit" to be seen on the ——— of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Gladys Hulette, Pathe's Beautiful Little Star in "Mrs. Slacker"

(Pathe Five-Reel Production)

Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale, a combination of feminine and male artistry, hard to beat in the silent drama, will be seen in the stellar roles in Pathe's latest feature production, "Mrs. Slacker," produced by Astra for release on the Pathe program, under the direction of Hobart Henley whom you all will remember for his production of "Parentage." Miss Hulette is one of the most charming and winsome little actresses on the screen and her work in this production stamps her a real little artist. Mr. Hale who has the leading role opposite was seen in the Pathe serials, "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Iron Claw" and "The Seven Pearls." "Mrs. Slacker" tells of a young girl who married because she thought her husband a hero. She finds that he has the "yellow streak." To shame him into doing his duty for his country, she puts on the uniform herself and then ——? Comedy, thrills and pathos are so nicely intermingled that this Pathe offering makes ideal entertainment. You will enjoy every minute that Miss Hulette is seen on the screen in "Mrs. Slacker." She has the role of Susie Simpkins who lives with her uncle. He is given to drink and Susie is neglected. She delivers the washing to the Gibbs mansion and during her trip she learns a few facts about Robert, the son of the Gibbs. She learns that he is a coward. Discouraged, she attempts to take her life by drowning but Robert happens along and saves her—but does it unintentionally. She thinks that he is a hero and refuses to believe that he is the coward reported. They are married. War breaks out with Germany. Robert has married Susie to escape the draft. She learns the true reason and announces that she will fight for the country if her husband will not. She discovers a German plot and eventually brings her slacker husband around to believing her way and he becomes a hero in place of a slacker.

Pauline Starke, Star of "Until They Get Me" in "Innocent's Progress"

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Pauline Starke, whose name was seen in electric lights over New York's finest theatre, The Rivoli, when she did such commendable work in "Until They Get Me," will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest success, "Innocent's Progress," a Triangle production under the direction of Frank Borzage with Pliny Horne, one of the most capable photographers on the West Coast, at the camera. In the supporting cast with Miss Starke in "Innocent's Progress" are seen, Jack Livingston, in the leading male role; Alice Knowland, Lillian West, Charles Dorian and Graham Pette, one of the most widely known portrayers of butler parts on the screen. The story was written by Frances Quillan, and Miss Quillan has turned out an on the stage, and between the covers of numerous books. Mr. Fox has spared neither excellent vehicle for Miss Starke as patrons of the ——— theatre will testify when they see this production. Miss Starke is a good bit on the Mae Marsh type with all of Miss Marsh's histrionic ability. In this picture she has the role of Tessa Fayne, an orphan who lives with her crabbed aunt in the country. She obtains employment in the village candy shop and believes that she has reached the height of her ambition until a stock theatrical company comes to town and she meets the leading man who relates to her the wonders of New York and promises her that if she will come to New York he will make her a great actress. A scandal arises in the village because of her company with the actor and she decides to leave. The theatrical company leaves and shortly after Tessa packs her grip and departs for the Big Town. Her experiences there and how she wins the respect of a rich man and restores him to health is told in a most fascinating picturization.

Love Takes a Wild and Woolly Course in "The Marriage Bubble"

(Triangle Three-Reel Production)

Rum has proved to be the undoing of many a man and many an enterprise, but its effects are nothing but uproariously funny in the case of the Trenholms of Seaview, the leading characters in "The Marriage Bubble," which comes to the ——— theatre on ———. In it William Desmond plays a dual role of drinker and gentleman. The drinker imagines he sees himself walging about, that he is running into himself and that he hears himself addressing himself. The result is a complication of funny episodes of a most entertaining character. W. Carey Wonderly wrote the story and the star has been provided a most capable supporting cast, including Anne Luther, who has many a successful screen role to her credit. The Trenholms, brother and sister, of high social position, are on their last financial legs. Their one hope lies in a marriage alliance of Peter with Lucille Spinney, but Peter's propensity for getting drunk at the wrong moment looms as an obstacle. This is only too distressingly evident when Alice Trenholm, determined to pull off the match at all hazards, invites Lucille down to Seaview. At her wit's end she is about to abandon the scheme when she chances on a perfect double of her brother. She promptly impresses him into her service. He is to make love to Lucille, gain her consent and resign when Peter sobers up. The plan works fairly well, through many entangling complications which involve among others, the French maid of Lucille, but in the end Peter loses the heiress. Alice, however, saves the family by marrying Marty, Peter's double, who turns out to be a millionaire.

"The Whispering Chorus" Is Tense Drama—A Notable Cast

(Artcraft Seven-Reel Production)

Self sacrifice is the dominant theme of "The Whispering Chorus," the Artcraft drama which will be presented on the screen of the ——— theatre on ———. It is the pen product of Perley Poore Sheehan, well-known novelist and magazine writer, and is the tense story of a man who, harassed by debt, resorts to theft, deserts his wife, is mistaken for his own murderer, and goes to his own death rather than destroy the happiness of his wife, who in the meantime has again married. A cast of notable excellence is featured, including such recognized stars of the cinema drama as Kathlyn Williams, Raymond Hatton, Tully Marshall, Elliott Dexter, Edythe Chapman, James Neill, Edna Mae Cooper and others. The scenario was prepared from the original story by Jeanie Macpherson, who achieved fame as the scenarioist of "Joan the Woman," "The Woman God Forgot," "The Little American" and other successes. John Trimble, an employe of a large corporation, finding himself in debt, steals from his firm. To escape arrest he deserts his wife; he becomes a hermit on a lonely island in the Ohio river. To create the impression that he is dead he dons the clothing of a drowned man and puts his own clothing on the corpse. With the finding of the body the police surmise that Trimble has been murdered. By a strange perversity of fate, Trimble, who has assumed the name of Martin, is suspected of being his own murderer. After a fierce battle with the police he eludes arrest and flees to San Francisco. Long afterwards remorse and a longing to see his mother bring him back to his old haunts. His mother dies from the shock of seeing her son and he, running for a physician, rushes straight into the arms of the police. Arrested as Martin he pleads that his mother be brought to identify him as Trimble, he being unaware of her death. He is tried, convicted and sentenced to death, and when his wife is finally appealed to and he finds that she is happily married again he insists that he is Martin, an assassin, and self-sacrificingly goes to his doom.

THERE IS AN APPEAL

But Is the Exhibitor Getting It Over to His Patrons?

EVEN with the poor pictures there is a certain appeal to some element of your community. Are you making the most out of the particular appeal that each picture has, or are you simply showing first this one and then that one merely as "a motion picture."

These Ad Talks are written as if you were talking to the public and telling the public what you want it to know about each picture. But they are informative to you. They are not reviews, they do not go into the merits of the productions, but you will find lots of little pointers here. Maybe one little sentence will give you an idea for doing something unusual with one of these pictures.

"The Trap" Brings Greenwich Village to the Screen

(World Five-Reel Production)

Alice Brady, talented and charming star of motion pictures, is coming to the ——— theatre on ——— in "The Tray," in which she has one of the strongest emotional roles she has ever protrayed. The story is by Robert F. Hill and the directorial genius of George Archainbaud is responsible for its pleasingly artistic presentation. A cast justly entitled to be termed all-star, including such artists of the screen as Curtis Cooksey, Craufurd Kent, Robert Cummings and Frank Mayo, appear in Miss Brady's support. Part of the production was staged in a quaint fisher village and the scenes on the seashore are alike beautiful and interesting. The locale shifts to Greater New York and Greenwich Village, the home of artists, of smocks and tams and of temperament, is faithfully reproduced. Alice Brady appears in the role of Doris Shaw, daughter of a fanatical fisherman, scorned by many of the village folk because of the unfortunate circumstances of her birth. A rough fisher lad is in love with her, but she is more interested in a stranger, an artist from New York. The anger of the fisher youth is aroused and he frames up a trap whereby it appears that she is not only indiscreet but bad, whereupon her father casts her from his house. She drifts to New York where her beauty causes an artist to offer her a job when he meets her in a cafe in Greenwich Village. This artist turns out to be the very one who had met her at the seashore. Under the guise of friendship she accepts so much from this man that she almost falls into a trap which has been set for her and a young Westerner. But she escapes and the Westerner turns out to be a real, honest-to-goodness young Lochinvar, winning her love and providing her a real home. It is claimed, and with evident substantiation, that no more interesting and unusual seashore scenes have been filmed in a long time than are seen in this production.

Alice Brady in "The Trap" is the attraction at the ——— on ———.

"The Home Trail," a Drama which Moves with Speed

(Vitagrah Five-Reel Production)

A story of the Far West in the days of 1870 is "The Home Trail," which is the attraction on ——— at the ——— theatre. A dance hall of that period, which deviates from the stereotyped common to Western pictures, was built specially for the production, and it will be seen that the jazz band of 1870 differs widely from that of today. Nell Shipman, star of exceptional talent and charm, has the leading feminine role and co-starred with her is Alfred Whitman. These players were previously featured in "The Wild Strain" and "Cavanaugh of the Forest Rangers," winning high praise from screen critics wherever they were seen. Others in the cast are Patricia Palmer, Joe Rickson, Hal Wilson and S. E. Jennings. In the story Tom Evans, range boss, fearless, reckless, but always above board, courts and wins Clara, a school teacher from the East. Blackie, Tom's partner, yellow at heart, plots to separate them, harping to the bride upon her husband's gambling and drinking. Evans is called to a nearby ranch and Blackie prevails upon Clara to leave with him. Elsie, the storekeeper's daughter, warns Evans, who pursues the couple, overtaking them at a road house. Blackie escapes, but Tom, returning home, is sworn in as a deputy sheriff and waits for his revenge. Clara, an outcast, becomes an inmate of the road house and she also waits for her reckoning with the man who has ruined her life. Months later Blackie returns. There is a pistol battle and Blackie again escapes, leaving Clara dead by his bullet. But Evans pursues him to the desert and taking his horse away from him leaves him to die of thirst. Returning to his lonely home he finds waiting for him Elsie, the storekeeper's daughter who has always loved him, and together they start out on a new Home Trail blazed by her love and sympathy. The story of "The Home Trail" was written by George H. Plympton and the picture was directed by William Wolbert.

"The Home Trail" is announced for ——— at the ———.

Live News from the Producers

Foreign Makers See Universal

Negotiations Started Whereby Former May Take Space at Company's Big Coast Plant—Representatives Inspect Sites

SEVERAL large foreign producers of motion pictures it is announced have entered into negotiations with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company with a view of availing themselves of the producing facilities of Universal City as a result of the recent announcement of the Universal that the big West Coast studio was at the disposal of companies other than those controlled by the owners.

For more than two years most of the foreign motion picture producers have been unable to make pictures owing to conditions imposed by the war. In some cases the studios have been taken over for army purposes, in others they have been razed by shells and in exceptional cases where the studios might be available for work it has been impossible for the producers to obtain screen artists with whom to form their casts.

Three of these foreign producers have had representatives of the United States for several weeks inspecting sites that would be suitable for studios but, after taking options on sites liked by them, they found that the condition of the building material market made the cost of erecting a studio prohibitive, Universal says.

Whether these negotiations will terminate by the foreign producers coming to this side and making their pictures at Universal City depends entirely upon the action of the producers of the United States, Universal declares.

President Laemmle feels that if American producers desire to take advantage of the Universal offer and use the facilities of Universal City, thereby saving approximately fifty per cent overhead on each picture made, that the home producers should be given the first opportunity. The Astra Company, the George Beban Company and two other producing concerns already are using the Universal lot and the heads of several other domestic companies are making inquiries which apparently will terminate in some arrangement satisfactory to all concerned.

Kansas Mothers Indorse Goldwyn Films

GOLDWYN Pictures, that company announces, have received marked and unusual commendation from the Kansas Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations, which are making a statewide campaign for better films, as a part of their child welfare movement. To date seven Goldwyn productions have been given the stamp of special approval by the Kansas Board of Review, whose cooperation with the organization has made "Family Nights" in Kansas a success.

The association has been greatly assisted in its campaign for pictures of higher moral tone by the clergy and school superintendents in all parts of the state, the accepted productions being advertised in many churches and schools.

Mrs. Carl F. White, of Topeka, who is vice-chairman of the combined organizations, has written to Goldwyn in praise of its productions, declaring that the Board of Review had quickly given its sanction to showing Kansas children the following pictures: "Polly of the Circus," "The Spreading Dawn," "Nearly Married," "The Beloved Traitor," "Dodging a Million," "Fields of Honor" and "The Cinderella Man."

Establishing a "Family Night" in every city was the initial step of the organization toward its goal—better films. The term "Family Night" indicates a night definitely set apart for the exhibition of a program selected for its wholesomeness.

Mrs. White's letter reveals that Goldwyn Pictures are not only highly acceptable for their moral excellence but are also immensely popular for the splendid entertainment they afford.

Elsie Ferguson Starred in New Artcraft

Elsie Ferguson is starred in "The Lie," the Artcraft picturization of Sir Henry Arthur Jones's stage play of the same name, released April 8. It is the story of the sacrifice of her own happiness by a young woman to save the honor of her family, threatened by the act of her erring sister.

Miss Ferguson enacts the role of Elinor Shale, daughter of Sir Robert Shale, a dissipated and impoverished Englishman. She is in love with a man of wealth and social standing when her sister, Lucy, confesses to her that she is about to become a mother. When the child is born Elinor shields her sister and finds a foster-mother, thus opening the door of scandal in which she is the innocent sufferer. Lucy weds the man whom her sister loves by telling him Elinor is the mother of the child.

"The Lie" was staged under the direction of J. Searle Dawley, from a scenario by Charles Maigne.

Lillian Hamilton in Strand-Mutuals

Lillian Hamilton, well known screen comedienne, has been added to the cast of Mutual-Strand Comedies, starring Billie Rhodes. Miss Hamilton makes her first appearance in "For Art's Sake," the release of April 9.

Lillian Hamilton appeared in the series of comedies with Paddy McGuire appearing in "Bucking the Tiger," "Lured and Cured," "Tailors' Trimmings" and "Sticky Fingers." Her stage career has been with the Burbank stock company.

Metro to Produce Play by George D. Baker

"As the Sun Went Down," a play written by George D. Baker and produced on the stage several seasons ago by Arthur C. Aiston, has just been sold by Mr. Aiston to the Metro Pictures Corporation. Its filming will be under the supervision of its author, Mr. Baker, who recently went to Hollywood, Cal., as Manager of Productions at the Metro West Coast studios. Edith Storey will be featured in the production.

The release date of Mme. Petrova's third picture, "The Life Mask," has been changed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit from March 18, as originally announced, to Monday, April 8.

Pathe Continues to Release Features

Brunet Announces That Six Months' Supply Is on Hand, and That Company Aims to Make Quality Still Higher—Zecca Director General

According to an announcement from Pathe Exchange this week, that distributing company, under the direction of Paul Brunet, will continue to release features. This sets at rest all rumors to the contrary which have been more or less prevalent during the past few weeks. Pathe plans, it is made known, call for bigger features than ever before.

It is said that Pathe has ready, or nearly ready, a supply of quality features for the next six months. Among the stars are Fannie Ward, Frank Keenan, Bryant Washburn, Irene Castle, Gladys Hulette and Baby Marie Osborn.

In Step with Times

Concerning this part of his releasing schedule, Mr. Brunet said: "Favorable as has been the reception accorded our recent features, we want to do even better and will let nothing stand in the way of our obtaining this object. We feel that the producing arrangements can be improved to give us still higher quality. To this end Mr. Zecca, one of the fathers of the motion picture, has come to us in America as Director General of Productions.

"We are going to make Pathe still stronger with the aim that more and more producers of good pictures will look to us for distribution. We have the outlet for their productions."

In connection with Mr. Brunet's statement, it was made known that Pathe has either on its shelves or practically completed at one or the other of its producing company's studios, a supply of quality features for the next six months. Among these pictures are: Fannie Ward in "The Yellow Ticket," "A Japanese Nightingale," and "The Narrow Path." Frank Keenan in "The Bells" and "More Trouble." Bryant Washburn in "The Range Rider. "Kidder & Ko" and "In Wrong;" Bessie Love in "A Little Sister of Everybody," "How Could You Caroline?" and "Carolyn of the Corners;" Irene Castle in "The First Law" and "The Girl from Bohemia;" Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale in "Annexing Bill," "For Sale" and "Waifs;" Baby Marie Osborn in "Dolly Does Her Bit," "The Soul of a Child" and "The Evidence.'

It is expected that this list will be augmented very soon by the taking over of several big productions by Pathe and a realignment of its affiliated producing companies.

Plays from the Stage

"The Yellow Ticket" is made from the A. H. Woods stage play. It was written by Michael Morton and played on Broadway. The film production was done at the Astra Studio under the direction of William Parke from a scenario by Tom Cushing, author of "Sari."

In "The Yellow Ticket's" cast appears Miss Ward. It also includes Warner Oland, Milton Sills, Armand Kalisz and Helene Chadwick, J. H. Gilmore, Leon Barry, Anna Lehr, Ann Mason, Charlie Jackson, Nicholas Dunneaw, Edward Elkus and Richard Thornton.

Harold Lloyd, W. A. S. Douglas, Tom North and A. E. Rousseau Were Caught by the Camera As Lloyd Started to the West Coast

"Japanese Nightingale" is from Sir William Young's book, produced by Astra under the direction of George Fitzmaurice, producer of "Innocent." The story of "The Japanese Nightingale" is said to have many of the basic qualities that made "Madam Butterfly" so successful, and under the master hand of Fitzmaurice, probably will prove a sensational picture.

"The Narrow Path" is also a Woods play and George Fitzmaurice is again the man selected to make the production.

"The Bells" is a drama in three acts by Leopold Lewis adapted from a dramatic story by Erckmann-Chatrian. The scenes are laid in Alsace with Frank Keenan in the role of Mathias. This production is under the direction of Ernest C. Warde, son of Frederick Warde, the Shakespearean actor and producer of "The Vicar of Wakefield." In the cast are Lois Wilson and Edward Coxen.

Promises Something New

"More Trouble" is said to be an entirely new type of picture, a comedy in which there are no comedy characters, in the accepted sense of the term. The picture is taken from a story by Edgar Franklin, published by the Frank A. Munsey Company.

"The Range Rider" is a story by Arthur Henry Gooden, the continuity of which is by Jack Cunningham, with direction by William Worthington and a cast supporting Mr. Washburn which includes Rhea Mitchell and Helen Dunbar.

"Kidder & Ko" is a story of a wide-awake young American who hates two things above all others, girls and canned cod, out of which his father made his fortune. The story tells how a girl gets him and he gets all the can cod in the world, to the end that he becomes a very rich young man. The story is by John W. Grey and M. Ramirez Torres.

"In Wrong" is a story by Mildred Considine, said to be full of comedy, dramatic situations and surprises. It deals with a young couple who start out with the idea that the wife should have her apartment and the husband his, and the story tells how and why they come to the conclusion that they were all wrong.

"A Little Sister of Everybody" is a story by William Addison Lathrop in which Bessie Love again returns to the type of parts in which she made her first success, what are known as "raggedy" roles. This picture is under the direction of Robert Thornby with George Fisher as the leading man.

"How Could You Caroline?" is a story by Izola Forrester and Mann Page, whose work appears in many of the widely read magazines. It is a comedy drama, the scenario of which was written by Agnes C. Johnston.

Another Woods Play

"Annexing Bill" is claimed to be one of the most delightful comedies produced in many a day. It was made by Astra under the direction of Albert Parker. The cast includes Margaret Greene. The story deals with the prejudices of a young lawyer against marrying a girl richer than himself and her efforts to lose her money so as to eliminate the difficulty.

"For Sale" is a Woods play in which Mr. Hale and Miss Hulette also appear. It was written by Frederick Jackson, author of many successful plays and also of the original outline from which the Pathe serial "The Fatal Ring" was made.

"Waifs," another Hulette and Hale play, is a Munsey story by Grace Sartwell Mason, on the continuity of which the brilliant minds of George B. Seitz, Bertram Milhouser and Frank Smith of Astra were united, produced under the direction of Albert Parker.

"Dolly Does Her Bit" is announced as a delightful little story in which Baby Marie Osborn stars. It is written by Lucy Sarver with scenario by Clara S. Beranger.

"The Soul of a Child" is by Clara S. Beranger, suggested by the story of Berton George. The story is one showing two influences in the life of every married man, that of his own family and his mother.

PARALTA STUDIOS

One of the Glass-Enclosed Stages of the Paralta Plant at Los Angeles

Paralta Plant Nearly Ready

New Buildings at Los Angeles Cover Ten Acres of Ground on Eighty Acre Plot—Among Best in the Country

IT was announced this week by Paralta Plays that the work on the company's new studios in Los Angeles is rapidly nearing completion. When ready this plant in which the productions of Paralta Plays will be made, will be not only one of the very largest but one of the finest equipped studios in existence.

They are located on the north side of Melrose Avenue in Los Angeles just beyond Van Ness Street. These new buildings will cover ten acres of the eighty-acre tract which was purchased by this company a few months ago. A great number of the buildings are already completed and work is being rushed to finish these buildings, covering nearly every foot of the available ground space of the ten-acre tract with permanent structures of brick and cement, including administration buildings, cafe, dressing-room buildings, five glass-enclosed stages, property buildings, warehouses, carpenter shops, electrical shops, garages and other necessary structures, each designed with every modern appliance known to produce the best results in the making of pictures.

The buildings of the new studios are just across the street from the old studios, which have up to a short time ago been used by the Paralta organization. Centered as they are in a compactly planned group, the buildings of the new studio plant will serve as the hub of studio grounds to be utilized for the construction of large settings of buildings, street scenes, and replicas of entire towns, if necessary, for use in film production. This expansion of studio properties has been made necessary by the enlarged scope of production undertaken by the Paralta organization, which is now producing not only Paralta Plays featuring their own stars, but also work for other film companies, which though separate in organization from the Paralta company, entered with it into the plan for centralized co-operative producing activities.

The studios will also include a laboratory building, a building for the wardrobe department, one for draperies, one for plaster and wood-working, a stock room, a planing mill, scene painting docks, etc.

The galaxy of Paralta stars includes Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum, Rhea Mitchell, Henry B. Walthall and J. Warren Kerrigan, who are now appearing before the cameras in the new studios. Besides the regular Paralta company, the Select Pictures, Pathe, and Mastercraft are also taking advantage of the exceptional opportunities which this completely equipped producing center affords.

Paramount Expects Much of "Bunker Bean"

Paramount is expecting big things of "His Majesty, Bunker Bean," in which Jack Pickford and Louise Huff are featured, basing its expectations upon the success enjoyed by the Harry Leon Wilson novel among the best sellers of the day. William D. Taylor, who directed Jack Pickford in the Tom Sawyer pictures, is responsible for this production which was scenarioized by Julia Crawford Ivers. Taylor Holmes played the name part in the successful stage version of the story.

W. S. Hart and Company Go North for Scenes

William S. Hart, with Katherine MacDonald, leading woman, and the other members of his company, has gone for location up into the northern part of California for scenes for his newest Artcraft production. Later the company will probably go to San Francisco or Seattle for other exteriors. C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the story for this as yet unnamed picture which Hart will direct himself. It will follow the Ince production titled "Selfish Yates."

Cast for New Geo. Walsh Picture Announced

Announcement has been made from the offices of William Fox that the entire cast has been selected for George Walsh's new Special Feature and that the company has been busily at work for more than a fortnight. The picture, which is being directed by Carl Harbaugh and has just been titled "Brave and Bold," affords roles for Regina Quinn, Dan Mason, Francis X. Conlon and Mabel Bunyea, among others.

Like Walsh's last production, "Jack Spurlock—Prodigal," based on George Horace Lorimer's Saturady Evening Post story of that name, which Harbaugh also directed, his new vehicle is likewise an adaptation of a highly successful magazine story. "Brave and Bold," Mr. Fox states, is an adaptation of Perley Poore Sheehan's fast-moving tale, "Four-forty at Fort Penn." Most of the action is concentrated in New York and Pittsburgh.

Ferrandini First National Chief in Southeast

It has been said that few Southern business men are better known than Frank Ferrandini, president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., of Virginia.

In 1916 Mr. Ferrandini, who thus far in his business life had devoted all of his time to the manufacture of architectural and decorative ornaments for theatres, office buildings, etc., became interested in the distribution of motion pictures and organized the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Inc. This corporation he merged, in December, 1917, with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., of Virginia. At the same time, he and his associates absorbed by outright purchase the organization of Jake Wells, Inc., thus securing the First National Exhibitors' franchises for Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama.

The executive offices of this new distributing concern are located in the Lyric Theatre building, Richmond, while well-equipped exchange centers are also maintained in Washington, D. C., and Atlanta.

Pathe Names Smith Assistant Director

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, announces the appointment of G. A. Smith as assistant director general of productions to assist Mr. Ferdinand Zecca.

Mr. Smith has been connected with Pathe for about four years in the advertising and production departments.

Before entering the motion picture business, Mr. Smith for eight years was a newspaper man, having been employed in the Hearst organization as reporter, writer, editor, and makeup editor. He entered the employ of Pathe as Director of Serial Publicity, handling the campaign on "Neal of the Navy," the first serial exploited independently by Pathe.

Horner, Scenario Editor for Ebony Films

L. J. Pollard, president and general manager of the Ebony Film Corporation, of Chicago, which begins releasing through General Film April 15, has closed a long-term contract with Bob Horner, the Chicago scenarioist and newspaper writer, to manage its script department and prepare material for the organization.

First Capitol Comedy Seen at the Strand

"Smiling Bill" Parsons was seen in "Bill's Baby," the first of the Capitol Comedies distributed by Goldwyn, at the Strand theatre, New York, all last week. The story chronicles in two reels the adventures of a fat, baldheaded, jovial newspaper reporter and the baby he "borrows" to carry off the first prize in a neighborhood baby show. Billie Rhodes, for some time a screen star in her own right, supports Parsons in this comedy, and in the cast are a half dozen other funmakers, not the least important of which is the baby. Her name, unfortunately, was not preserved for the records.

This Moment In "The Business of Life," a Vitagraph Feature With Alice Joyce, Could Be Described As Both Striking and Dramatic

"Over the Top" Runs at Lyric

Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey's Vitagraph Picture Starts Indefinite Engagement—Hero in Attendance During First Week

"OVER THE TOP," with Sergeant Guy Empey himself, the Vitagraph screen production made from Empey's book, began an extended run at the Lyric theatre, Sunday evening, March 31. It had been previously announced that the patriotic picture would be shown at the Hudson theatre on the same date. This was due to the fact that Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, was desirous of getting the picture into a theatre by April 6, the first anniversary of America's entry into the war, and the only big theatre available that could include this date was the Hudson. This was open for only ten days, and as a longer run seems assured for "Over the Top," a theatre that could give a longer booking was desirable.

When, at the last moment, the Vitagraph Company was fortunate enough to secure the Lyric, the Henry B. Harris Estate, owner of the Hudson theatre, extended every courtesy and co-operation to the Vitagraph Company and gave its consent to the cancellation of the arrangements made for the use of the Hudson.

Sergeant Empey is appearing personally at every performance of the picture during the first week of its run. There are two shows daily.

"Over the Top," in which Sergeant Empey, soldier-author-lecturer, appears as the star player, is considered one of the most timely and important motion pictures ever produced. It follows closely the events of Empey's book and presents the struggle in France in sharp silhouette without any attempt at showing the major operations. Through the expert knowledge of Sergeant Empey, gained through eighteen months of service with the British expeditionary forces in France, trench fighting is revealed with great faithfulness.

American soldiers, training at Camp Wheeler, near Macon, Ga., are seen in action in the trench scenes, which were made through a special permit of the War Department. Sergeant Empey and the Vitagraph company supporting him, spent the greater part of a month at Camp Wheeler, and the army officers have declared that the trench raids and hand-to-hand fighting scenes are most realistic.

Hayakawa Picture Promises Something New

A new twist in the well-known "eternal triangle" is said to have been made use of in "The Honor of His House," Sessue Hayakawa's Paramount release of April 1. The story is an original one by Marion Fairfax and was directed by William C. De Mille. It has its beginning aboard a new Japanese liner, where the three central figures are thrown together—Lora, a beautiful outcast, half Japanese; Count Onato and Robert Farlow.

Peggy Hyland Goes South

A large company of William Fox photoplayers, headed by Peggy Hyland, the newest Fox star, left early last week for Charleston, South Carolina for scenes in Miss Hyland's Special Feature now in work. This is to be released under title of "Peg of the Pirates."

O. A. C. Lund is in charge of direction.

Ford Directs Elsie Ferguson

Production Under Way Is "The Danger Mark," for Artcraft Release—Cohan Films One of His Stage Plays

AT the 54th Street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Elsie Ferguson has begun the production of "The Danger Mark," adapted from the novel by Robert W. Chambers. This subject is being produced under the personal direction of Hugh Ford, and will be released under the Artcraft trade-mark. Miss Ferguson again interprets an emotional role, as a society girl whose life is threatened with disaster through an inherited appetite for alcoholic drink.

"The successful play is one that has a reason for existing," said Mr. Ford, "and 'The Danger Mark' has an exceedingly interesting motive. It not only deals with a greatly discussed subject, but carries a message of hope to those who may have become slaves to objectionable habits of any kind. It shows the harmful effects of drink, depicted in high social circles, and the struggles of a girl against the hereditary taint, and proves that the bugaboo of heredity and habit can be put to flight by the exercise of will power.

The production of "Hit-the-Trail Holliday" for Artcraft is making considerable headway at the 56th Street studio, and George M. Cohan, the star, and Marshall Neilan, the director, have found in each other kindred spirits. A refreshing atmosphere of good-fellowship prevails, and the casual observer would never know from appearances that a world-famous star and showman, whose brains and ability have brought him a tremendous fortune, and one of the most prominent and able directors were at work. Temperament and frills are taboo, and George and "Mickey" (as Neilan is known) are both working with the idea in mind of making "knock-out" picture.

William D. Taylor Is Directing Mary Pickford for Artcraft

Pauline Frederick has completed "Fedora" for Paramount release. It is said to be the most sensational picture Miss Frederick has yet appeared in. The principals are introduced in their magnificent homes in Russia and later go to Monte Carlo and Paris, where they are shown in the midst of princely splendor. The scenario was written by Charles E. Whittaker, who says that the play was easily adaptable to pictures.

"If Sardou had written this play directly for the screen he could not have selected incidents more capable of being effectively portrayed," said Mr. Whittaker. "The story starts melodramatically with the untimely death of the Count, who is the fiance of the Princess Fedora, and ends with the sacrifice by Fedora of her own life. An element of mystery and suspense holds the interest, through clever detective work done by Fedora and the Russian secret police."

Newspaper Critics Liked "The Floor Below"

Newspaper critics everywhere are said to be in agreement that in "The Floor Below," her second Goldwyn picture, Mabel Normand has duplicated her success in "Dodging a Million," which marked her first screen appearance after an absence from the cinema field of nearly two years. "The Floor Below" was made by Goldwyn from a story by Elaine Sterne and was directed by Clarence G. Badger. T. F. Oliphant, in the New York Evening Mail, says: "The story of 'The Floor Below' wins. It treks away from the conventional and gives Miss Normand many opportunities to score." Harriette Underhill says in the Tribune: "In the role of Patricia O'Rourke Mabel Normand has a chance to bring to her aid all the art and artlessness which is hers. We admire Mabel Normand."

Chaplin Comedy at Strand April 7

Charlie Chaplin, in the first of his new comedies, "A Dog's Life," will appear at the Strand Theatre during the week of April 7th and Mr. Chaplin, in a telegram to Manager Edel, advises that he will endeavor to appear in person at the Strand Theatre during Anniversary week, for which reason Mr. Edel is said to have decided to put the Chaplin comedy on the Anniversary week bill.

Activity Keynote at William Fox Studios

UNUSUAL activity is announced as the keynote at the various William Fox studios in New York and New Jersey, according to a statement from the Fox offices as to what is being done in the Eastern plants. Every star and director is engaged on some production actually in work.

Two new photoplays were begun last week with Virginia Pearson and June Caprice as the stars. Miss Pearson's picture is being filmed by Edmund Lawrence, who made his Fox directorial debut with Miss Pearson's most recent feature, "A Daughter of France." The entire cast for the present Pearson production has not yet been chosen.

Miss Caprice's play, which Harry Millarde is supervising at what was formerly the Victor studio, is said to present her in a most appealing character. Miss Caprice's leading man is Bernard Randall, a newcomer to the Fox organization. Others in important parts are Jack McLean, Blanche Hines, Thomas Fallon, Helen Tracy, who was in "Romeo and Juliet" and Florence Ashbrooke, seen in "The Scarlet Letter." and "Unknown 274," a recent Caprice subject.

"The Firebrand" will be the title of Miss Pearson's production, while that of the Caprice Special Feature will be "Blue-Eyed Mary."

Alice Brady Finishes "The Ordeal of Rosetta"

Alice Brady, Select star, has just completed the production of "The Ordeal of Rosetta," in which she plays a dual role of twin sisters, Rosetta and Lola, respectively the heroine and villainess of the story, in which the tangling threads of Fate involve them in a web of circumstances that furnish the ordeal from which Rosetta emerges victorious.

Miss Brady's company is said to have made an efficiency record in this production through the synchronized filming of interiors and exteriors, the former under the direction of Emile Chautard and the latter being in personal charge of his assistant, Albert Lena.

Craufurd Kent appears as leading man for Miss Brady, and others in the cast are Ormi Hawley, Maude Turner Gordon, Henry Leoni and Hazel Washburn.

First Lyons-Moran Star Comedy April 8

Universal will release on April 8, "A Pigskin Hero," the first of the Lyons-Moran Star Comedies featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. The initial subject of this series of twelve one-reel comedies was written by Captain Leslie Peacock and is said to be one of his best efforts. Edith Roberts appears as leading woman and with her assistance Eddie and Lee are said to have created an entirely new style in screen fun making.

Russell Writes Story for Kitty Gordon

L. Case Russell, who has written many stories in which Madame Petrova has starred, has just written one for World-Pictures in which Kitty Gordon will be featured. This story bears the title, "Merely Players," and will be released on the regular World program during the coming summer.

Metro Starts "House of Mirth"

Notable Cast, with Leading Role Yet to Be Assigned, Has Been Assembled to Produce Famous Edith Wharton Novel

AFTER two months' effort in selecting a cast and still failing to arrive at a choice for the leading feminine role, Metro has begun the production of Edith Wharton's famous novel, "The House of Mirth." The company finally selected is said to be one of the strongest ever seen in a Metro production, every member being a well known star of the stage and screen. The difficult role of the heroine, Lily Bart, is the only part that has not yet been cast. More than ten women stars have been under consideration for this character, and Metro will decide on one shortly. The scenario has been prepared by June Mathis and Albert Capellani. Mr. Capellani will also direct the picture.

Edith Storey, Metro Star, Finds Time Now And Then To Knit For The Soldiers

"The House of Mirth" is a story with a big theme which drives home a powerful lesson. Lily Bart, the heroine, is the living embodiment of the neurotic craving for luxury that possesses a certain class of society women. Love, honor, fidelity to true ideals of living—all these are trampled under foot by the class of women represented by Lily Bart, in order that luxurious sables may be laid across vain shoulders. Lily is in love with Lawrence Selden, a man of moderate means, but feeling it a physical impossibility to do without the magnificence to which she has been accustomed, she refuses to marry a man of limited income. Augustus Trenor-Dorset, the husband of her best friend, speculates for her and she is led into deeper and deeper waters. Coldly she considers her possible assets, the young millionaire, Percy Gryce; the rich Jew, Simon Rosedale; young Ned Silverton. Lily reaches a realization of the truth on bleeding knees.

Henry Kolker will play the role of Lawrence Selden; Joseph Kilgour is cast as Augustus Trenor-Dorset; Edward Abeles will be seen as Simon Rosedale, the Wall Street broker, and Lottie Briscoe will play Gertie Farrish, the girl who performs the unusual feat of living within her means.

To Eliminate Inconsistencies

World-Pictures Appoints a Staff of Five People to Cut Out, in Advance of Production, Minor Defects Which Mar Pictures

WORLD-PICTURES has a new idea and it looks like a good one. For the purpose of eliminating all those little inconsistencies which the wise film fan spots at once and which in many instances have marred productions put out by some of the country's biggest and most careful producers, all World-Pictures are now being checked up in advance of production by a staff of five people. The company's statement regarding the innovation follows:

"It is realized by the World-Pictures executives that with the elimination of inconsistencies from all pictures—no matter by whom they are produced—that the entire industry will immediately assume a higher level in the eyes of the public. It is largely because of anachronisms and inconsistencies that the silent drama have not been received on the same high plane as the spoken drama, and in blazing the trail in this particular line, World-Pictures are doing their bit in raising the standard of appreciation in which the public holds pictures.

"To eliminate the glaring inconsistencies and anachronisms World-Pictures have established a board of five motion picture experts—four men and one woman. Each little detail in a scenario is checked up by this board before production is started and as the scenes are taken and developed they are flashed on the screen in the World's private projection room for further checking up by the board. In this way all inconsistencies are eliminated and the World does its bit toward raising the plane of motion pictures to even greater heights."

Alice Joyce to Star in O. Henry Feature

Alice Joyce, who is nearing the completion of "The Strength of the Weak," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, soon will begin work on "Find the Woman," the famous "Cherchez la Femme" of O. Henry. The story is laid in New Orleans and plans are being made for Miss Joyce and her company to go to the old Creole City to make the picture. Tom Terriss, who has directed Miss Joyce in her last five productions, will direct her in this.

Seek "Mutt and Jeff" Rights

Foreign Interests Make Appplications for Exclusive Territory—Large Parts of Europe and South America Still Available

FOLLOWING the announcement by William Fox, through trade paper and other mediums, of the conclusion of a contract with Bud Fisher for world-wide distribution of Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons, there has developed, according to Mr. Fox, a lively contest for foreign territory.

Knowledge of the fact that the Fox concern books its pictures in most foreign countries through its own agencies is said not to have deterred foreign rights interests from attempting to secure exclusive territory. Applications, it is said, have been quite as numerous as if the animated cartoons were a big feature production.

In a statement given out by General Manager Winfield R. Sheehan, it is announced that Mr. Fox will handle the cartoons direct in the countries where he now has established branch offices, but that considerable foreign territory remains open or now is the subject of negotiation.

"We cannot promise, of course," said Mr. Sheehan, "that any particular country will not be sold, by the time you are able to publish a statement. We are getting inquiries all the time, and contracts are being closed daily, but as matters stand just now there is some good territory remaining in Central and South America, some in Europe and some scattered through various other parts of the globe.

"Mexico, for instance, has not yet been disposed of and neither have the Central American countries. In South America, we have Chile, Peru and Bolivia available. Probably the biggest opportunity, however, exists in Europe. France, Belgium, Russia, Holland, Spain and Portugal, Switzerland, Italy, Greece and the Balkan States can all be obtained. These latter countries will be especially interested in the animated cartoons because Bud Fisher now is a captain of artillery in the army of the Allies and his drawings will deal largely in the future with life at the front.

"There also will be lively interest in the announcement that we are prepared to sell the Mutt and Jeff rights for the Philippine Islands. China, India, the Dutch East Indies, Egypt and South Africa likewise are on our open list."

Ann Murdock Stars as "The Richest Girl"

ANN MURDOCK in "The Richest Girl" is announced for release April 8 by Mutual. The production was made at the Empire All Star studios under the direction of Albert Capellani. It is a comedy of the type which has made Miss Murdock a Broadway star in Frohman plays. While the play contains many delicate situations it is said that they are handled in an artistic manner.

David Powell, who has played the lead in many of Miss Murdock's productions, is cast as Paul Normand, a young bachelor. Paul Capellani is Felix, an artist; Herbert Ayling is Commissioner Mingasson, Paul's employer and father of his fiancee, while Charles Wellesley has the role of Downey, the "Richest Girl's" father.

"An exquisite suit of silk pajamas that could easily be run through the eye of a large darning needle," is the Mutual description of a part of Miss Murdock's wardrobe.

Screen Telegram will be released April 10 and 14. Some graphic views of the French preparations for the great Hun drive were shown in the release of March 27. The French Army was shown manipulating monster snow plows through Alsatian mountain drifts and moving monster guns into position for the Kaiser's great offensive.

The Strand Comedy, starring Billie Rhodes, is scheduled for release April 9. "For Art's Sake" is the title of the comedy.

Finish "House of Silence" in California

"The House of Silence," the Paramount picture starring Wallace Reid, has the distinction of having been started in New York under the direction of Donald Crisp and then transferred on account of the inclement weather to California for completion at the Lasky studios. Ann Little, who appeared with Mr. Reid in "Rimrock Jones" and "Nan of Music Mountain," is again his leading woman. Others who have important roles are Adele Farrington, Winter Hall, Ernest Joy and H. A. Barrows.

Concerning the Cast of "Masks and Faces"

The fact that "Masks and Faces," the English production which World-Pictures will release, was made for the purpose of endowing a fund for the orphans of English actors killed in the war and the stars contributed their services free, makes it possible, World states, for American exhibitors to secure it on the regular World program without any additional cost, either in the shape of a bonus or a percentage of the gross receipts. It is claimed that the salary list for the cast, which includes Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson and fifty other well-known English stage stars, would pass the half million dollar mark if produced by private individuals.

Hale Hamilton's Debut on Screen with Metro

Hale Hamilton, whose work in the title role of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" is best remembered among his stage endeavors, will make his screen debut in Metro's forthcoming feature written by May Tully, playing opposite the star, May Allison. Mr. Hamilton appeared in a Keystone comedy once, but the new Metro picture will be his first serious screen endeavor.

Katterjohn Continuity Is Exemplified

Scenario writers and others interested in the technique of photoplay construction may see in "Carmen of the Klondike," a fine example of Monte M. Katterjohn's improved style of screen narration which has been fittingly designated as "direct action continuity." Each succeeding subtitle or scene marks an advance in the unfolding of the plot, with an entire elimination of the "cut-back" and a consequent quickening of the action. Whereas the usual screen story is told in from twenty to thirty episodes or "scene sequences." Mr. Katterjohn has succeeded in so reducing the number of plot episodes that "Carmen of the Klondike" is told in only seven.

Role in "An Alien Enemy" Pleases Louise Glaum

While the greater part of Louise Glaum's work before the camera in the past has been confined to the delineation of vampire characters, it is stated that her first Paralta Play, "An Alien Enemy," is a straight drama filled with strong action and gripping situations and contains nothing in the nature of a seductress part. Miss Glaum is said to be greatly pleased with the change that takes her from the morbid, unpleasant type of woman, placing her on a plane which offers her unlimited possibilities to display her versatility and to compete with the leaders of dramatic art on the screen.

"An Alien Enemy" was written by Monte M. Katterjohn and was staged under the direction of Wallace Worsley.

Christie Company Planning to Branch Out?

The name of Henry Otto is a new one among the directorial forces of Christie Comedies. His first picture will feature Ethel Lynne and Jay Belasco.

Mr. Otto's affiliation with Christie is taken to presage the making by that company of longer pictures, probably of the comedy-drama type rather than the light comedy to which the Christie company has adhered for some time. It is even said that the Christie studio may branch out along the lines of five-reel drama.

"Film Hospital" an Innovation

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Purposes Thereby to Provide Branch Offices with Perfect Prints Only, Regardless of Age

IN the equipment of a "film hospital," located in New York City, which will have branches conveniently located throughout the country, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has established an innovation in the film industry. According to W. E. Greene, managing director in charge of distribution, the idea of the plan is to provide every branch office with absolutely perfect prints for every release, regardless of the date on which the picture was issued.

"The effect of our national advertising campaign has been to focus the eye of the public on Paramount and Artcraft pictures," says Mr. Greene, "and as a matter of pride in our own product we do not wish to see any films on the screen which are not clear and clean and otherwise in first class shape.

"The method of operation has been worked out to the minutest detail. It sometimes occurs that new film, through accident or carelessness, becomes damaged, and it is inconvenient to take it out of service while it is being replaced. Extra prints will be kept on hand of all subjects, and any scratched or damaged print will be immediately exchanged for the good one, and the injured copy will undergo a course of treatment and all imperfect parts will be replaced with new ones. This print will then be kept in reserve, ready for instant exchange with a damaged one. Besides immediately removing from service any bad prints, this new department is bringing all old subjects up to date.

"This 'film hospital' will not interfere in any way with the method of inspection now in vogue at all offices, and the attention to minor injuries such as a broken sprocket hole and the removal of dirt and oil, but will be auxiliary hereto, so that when the local inspectors find a flaw in the film which will be perceptible on the screen it will be remedied at once."

Triangle Sets Rubens Production Ahead

NEW YORK'S Bohemia has been pictured it is said for "The Love Brokers," a new Triangle drama, the second release on the Triangle March 31 schedule. This was formerly announced as the first feature of the week of April 7. Alma Rubens has the stellar role and the drama heads the April 7 card. Byrant Park, known as the Beaux Arts section of New York, provides the locale for this story, a screen adaptation of "Another Foolish Virgin," by W. Carey Wonderley, author of the recent Triangle social satire, "The Marriage Bubble." This story of artist life relates the adventures of a young and attractive small town girl, who enters the strange world of Bohemia alone, resolved to break into the game as a song writer. The dissipated parasites who constitute certain pseudo art circles welcome the unsophisticated newcomer as a possible prey. An adventuress involves her in a strange matrimonial scheme, but she succeeds in rising above her vicious environment. Suspense and a high dramatic interest, it is said, are maintained throughout. Some of the exteriors were filmed on the property of Edward Doheny, California oil magnate, where the diversified scenery enabled Director E. Mason Hopper to picture a big section of territory that corresponded to the Berkshire mountains in which much of the action of this play takes place.

Alma Rubens, as Charlotte Carter, has her most significant role since "I Love You," the Triangle February seven-part special. Texas Guinan, last seen in "The Gun Woman," is cast as Olga Gray, the adventuress, Joe Bennett is Ladislaw, the typical good natured ne'er-do-well who haunts the artistic centers of New York. He was recently seen with Olive Thomas in "Limousine Life." Lee Hill, who is cast as Gerard Townshend, last appeared in "The Sea Panther," with William Desmond. E. Mason Hopper directed "The Love Brokers."

Brady Grinds Own Camera in Airplane

WILLIAM A. BRADY, for one, will long remember the balloon episodes which feature "Stolen Orders," his spectacular film production of the Drury Lane melodrama, "Stolen Orders." These scenes depict an attempt at flight from a desolate spot somewhere on the Atlantic Coast by an enemy secret agent, personated by Montagu Love. There is a fight in the basket of the balloon and the fighters fall into the ocean, seemingly hundreds of feet below.

During the filming of these scenes and when the balloon was high in the air, the advisability of having a camera above the huge gas-filled bag to shoot down and catch at close range the action in the basket, became apparent. A hydroaeroplane, which a few minutes later was to figure in the story, was handy, and with it an aviator. But there arose immediately the question as to which of the camera men would go up. No one stepped forward to volunteer—and there came a sudden silence. Mr. Brady, on the ground, sensed the situation. Time and light were fleeting and necessity great. Mr. Brady grabbed a nearby camera, stepped into the vacant seat beside the hydroplanist and a few moments later was in the air above the balloon. The result will be seen in "Stolen Orders," which in addition to enlisting the services of its producer as a high-flying camera man enlisted also the services of six stars—Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love, June Elvidge, George MacQuarrie and Madge Evans, to interpret its story.

Trip to Boost Petrova Films

Lubin and Ennis Make Swing Around Circuit to Get in Closer Touch with Exchanges — Novelties Included

HERBERT LUBIN, personal representative for Madame Olga Petrova, accompanied by Bert Ennis, director of publicity of the Petrova Picture Company, left New York, March 27, for a complete swing around the circuit embraced by the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors Circuit. The latter organization has distributed the first four special productions in which Madame Petrova has appeared under the banner of her personal organization. These pictures, among which have been "Daughter of Destiny," "The Light Within" and "The Life Mask," have scored for the star.

In order to fully convince the exchange managers who are distributing the special Petrova pictures, as well as those exhibitors who have already screened these productions, of Madame Petrova's earnest desire to cooperate with them in the working out of all commercial phases in connection with their various problems, Mr. Lubin will carry with him a personal message from the star to each and every film man concerned in the making and exhibition of her photoplays. He will also make an intensive study of conditions surrounding the current presentation of these features and be in a position to render advice and assistance not only to the exchange man but to the exhibitor as well.

Mr. Ennis will carry out in full the working details of the recently established Service Bureau in connection with the Petrova productions. He will carry with him an extensive line of accessories and advertising aids, exactly suited to the use of the exhibitors in towns both large and small and will concentrate a strong publicity drive on various sections of the country which heretofore have not received the attention they deserved. In addition to this Mr. Ennis will carry with him an advertising novelty for the exploitation of Madame Petrova's forthcoming productions. It is believed that exhibitors throughout the United States will give this latest adjunct of the Petrova Service Bureau a most enthusiastic reception inasmuch as it is meant to attract the attention of thousands of people in their localities who have heretofore been but slightly interested in motion picture plays. He will also coordinate the present activities of the Petrova publicity department with those of the Exchange in each town distributing these films.

A feature of the trip made by Messrs. Lubin and Ennis in behalf of the Petrova Picture Company will be an extensive billboard campaign to be carried out in the important cities of the United States. A twenty-four-sheet stand has been prepared for this purpose and the Petrova Picture Company is in a position to furnish exhibitors with a sufficient quantity of the lithographs to thoroughly cover all advertising space.

Oklahomans Under First National Banner

THE newest but by no means the least active sub-division of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of America is the Oklahoma branch which purchased its franchise from E. H. Hulsey, of Dallas, Texas, about two months ago. Permanent offices are now in operation at Oklahoma City under the joint management of T. E. Larson and Tom H. Boland as president and vice-president, respectively. Mr. Boland is also proprietor of the Empress Theatre of Oklahoma City, one of the best known houses in the Southwest.

According to the latest membership list compiled by Mr. Larson, the First National Circuit in Oklahoma is made up of the following exhibitors:

Frank R. Powell, who controls the Mission Theatre of Ponca City and other prosperous houses in Newkirk, Fairfax and Tonkawa; George A. Pollard, proprietor of the two Gem Theatres of Guthrie and Stillwater; Albert Jackson, who runs the Jackson Theatre of Pawhuska; J. H. Snively, proprietor of the Gem, Oilton; F. N. Tanner, of the Rex, Blackwell; N. Smith of the Lyric, Clinton; McCoy & Brast of the Strand, Tulsa; F. S. Gantz of the Star, Sand Springs; E. B. Burgher, proprietor of the three Wonderland houses at Sallisaw, Vian and Muldrow; S. J. Snelling of the Pythian, Cleveland; Williams & Walton of the Murray, Lawton; Mrs. F. C. Thompson of the Palace, Hobart; A. L. Blount of the Liberty, Hugo; A. B. Momand of the Savoy, Shawnee; J. L. Carr of the Electric, Kingfisher; W. S. Robinson of the Majestic, Wetumka; J. F. Binkley of the Grand, Cushing; H. Spencer of the Empress, Yale; L. A. Shead of the University, Norman; Al Derry of El Reno theatre, El Reno; F. J. Buchmann of the Majestic, Dewar; the Humphrey Amusement Company of the Glory B, Miami; John H. Morgan of the Majestic, Jenks; and T. Faulkner of the Cozy and the Princess at Eufaula and Checotah.

All First National releases will be shown by the above-mentioned exhibitors, including the new Chaplin comedies.

Hayakawa Soon to Start on Own Production

Sessue Hawakawa is now at work on his final picture with the Lasky Company. He will be engaged upon this for about three weeks, after which time he will start the making of his own features, which will be known as the Hayakawa Productions, and will be released through the Haworth Pictures Corporation of Los Angeles.

The Japanese film star says that he has an unusual story for his first independent production and that in it he will portray a role entirely different from any in which he has been seen upon the screen.

Clara Kimball Young, Select Star

Constance Talmadge Gets Vacation

Constance Talmadge, star of Select Pictures, is enjoying a vacation in Southern California, following the production of three features of the Select Star Series, in the making of which she has been engaged at Hollywood since December.

These productions are "The Shuttle," which is a screen version of Frances Hodgson Burnett's international novel of the same name, and which was directed by Rollin Sturgeon; "Up the Road with Sallie," picturized from the successful novel of the same name by Frances Sterrett and directed by William Desmond Taylor, and "Good Night Paul," a mirthful adaptation of the musical comedy stage success of the same name, and which was directed by Walter Edwards.

Modern Mount Provided for This Cowboy

In Henry B. Walthall's forthcoming Paralta Play, "With Hoops of Steel," which has just been finished under the direction of Eliot Howe, a new way for a cowboy to arrive for the purpose of shooting up a town is said to be shown. This cowboy arrives arrayed in all the picturesque costume that has endeared the cowboy to the hearts of the public, but instead of arriving on a Pinto pony he comes on a motorcycle, spitting and roaring down the street. This is one of the many unusual scenes said to be promised in the new Walthall production which will soon be ready for release.

Harry Frankin Has Joined Metro As Director. His First Picture Stars May Allison

Another Story Ready for May Allison

The production of a second picture starring May Allison, who has just completed her first Metro starring vehicle, " Social Hypocrites," is about to be started at the Metro studios under the direction of Harry Franklin. May Tully wrote the story, which is tentatively called " The Candy Girl," and the screen adaptation was made by June Mathis and Katharine Kavanaugh. Miss Allison's part is that of a girl whose ability to make deliciously different home-made candy by a " secret process " wins for her both fortune and happiness. Miss Allison's leading man will be Hale Hamilton and others to have prominent roles are Frank Currier, Stephen Grattan, John Davidson and Frank Joyner.

Shows Judge Brown Stories Specially for Children

If the experience of Manager Conover, of the Imperial Theatre of Montreal, is a fair criterion, exhibitors catering to children and young people are finding the Judge Brown Stories, distributed by General Film Company, profitable and worth while. In the case of the Montreal exhibitor General reports that as the result of a request from the women of the city, he has arranged to give a series of Saturday picture entertainments for children and that the Judge Brown stories will have a prominent place on the weekly programs.

Sonia Markova Changes Name

It was announced last week that Sonia Markova, who was exploited recently in William Fox pictures as a Russian actress, and who, in the old Biograph days was known as Gretchen Hartman, has changed her name to Gretchen Ahrbin, which is Swedish. Miss Ahrbin, whose names have proclaimed her as Swede, German and Russian, declares she is American.

About New Productions

Roscoe " Fatty " Arbuckle is in the midst of his new comedy for Paramount, which has to do with moonshiners and moonshine (liquidly speaking). He was visited recently by Jos. M. Schenck.

Mae Marsh found enough spare time from her Goldwyn duties recently to make a personal appearance at a patriotic benefit in Baltimore. A special film was presented, and the star made a short address.

" Bud " Duncan and " Kewpie " Morgan are said to become desperate and sinfully wicked gun men in " Rip Roaring Rivals," the second of the Clover Comedies being distributed by General Film Company.

Viola Dana is well along in the production of " Riders of the Night," in which she will appear for Metro. It is being made on the Coast, and is a story of the quaint folk of Kentucky.

Marie Walcamp, Universal's dare-devil serial star, is putting all her activities into a new serial, " The Lion's Claws," and manages to get in six days of good work each week. On Sunday she motors.

Madge Evans and Johnny Hines are to appear shortly in a World Picture called " Clarissa." It is said the story was written for them by Maravene Thompson.

What promises to be one of the best characterizations that Monroe Salisbury has given the screen is expected in " The Heart of the Desert," in which the Bluebird star appears as an Indian.

Tense thrills are said to be numerous in " A Live Target," the sixth episode of the Pathe serial, " The House of Hate," starring Pearl White and Antonio Moreno. It comes in April.

Two " actors " that always make a hit in Mack Sennett comedies for Paramount are Teddy, the Dane dog, and Pepper, the cat. They were in " Those Athletic Girls " and will appear in " Friend Husband " shortly.

Olga Petrova returned to New York last week and immediately started plans for her fifth special production. Following a brief vacation it is predicted Petrova will take up her work with new vigor.

It is promised Margarita Fisher will wear some beautiful gowns in her new picture, " A Square Deal," an American-Mutual film. The cast includes Val Paul, Jack Mower, Nanine Wright and L. M. Wells.

Work of assembling, cutting and titling " The Reason Why," Clara Kimball Young's newest picture for Select release, is said to be well under way. Robert G. Vignola directed the picture.

A feat of horsemanship, which Triangle claims has never before been shown on the screen, is scheduled to furnish a thrill in Roy Stewart's newest release, " Paying His Debt." Cliff Smith directed.

It is said William Fox used one of the most beautiful locations in California for " The Bride of Fear." It has been completed, with Jewel Carmen in the chief role. S. A. Franklin directed the feature.

The character of Peggy, in Paralta's " Blindfolded," is trained from childhood to steal from the rich. Bessie Barriscale has the part.

Lina Cavalieri has begun the production of " Gismonda," the Sardou play in which Bernhardt appeared in the legitimate. Scenes are being taken at the Fort Lee studio. Paramount will distribute the feature.

Enthusiastic reports, it became known last week, are coming from the William Fox offices in California regarding the forthcoming Theda Bara super-production, " Salome." This is one of the costliest pictures ever turned out by the Fox plant.

Mary Pickford is speeding up her newest Artcraft picture, which follows " M'liss," in order to be in readiness for the third Liberty Loan campaign, starting April 6.

" The Wolf Faced Man " is being filmed as a serial by Diando for release through Pathe. Thrills are said to be numerous. Stuart Paiton is directing the production.

Norma Talmage is back in New York from her California trip. She has started work on " De-Luxe Annie," from the stage play which had a run in New York and on the road. Select will distribute it.

Mary Garden's Second Screen Appearance Is In Goldwyn's " The Splendid Sinner "

Broncho Billy Said to Be Popular as of Old

The Broncho Billy films, ten of which have been put in the hands of the Kleine branch offices for release, are reported to be making an enviable record in booking. Critics have highly praised these dramas of the hills and plains. The Chicago Examiner says: " The revivified Broncho Billy dramas pictures are unreeling and they stack up splendidly with present-day stuff. Those one-reel episodes, dominated by daring riding and wonderful scenery, are little classics."

The Snakeville comedies, released through the General Film Company, and featuring the well-known comedians, Victor Potel, known as " Slippery Slim," Harry Todd and Margaret Joslin.

Harold Lloyd Returns to California

With a new contract for his appearance in Pathe-Rolin comedies sewed into his inside vest pocket, Harold Lloyd recently returned to Los Angeles, accompanied by W. A. S. Douglas, president of the Diando Film Corporation, and A. F. Rousseau, secretary of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Mr. Douglas was returning to his studio in Los Angeles and Mr. Rousseau was starting on an inspection tour of the Coast plants producing for Pathe.

See Big Promise in Blue Ridge Dramas

General Film Company professes great satisfaction at the number of inquiries received regarding the Blue Ridge Dramas, the two-reel subjects produced by Ned Finley. Advance bookings for " The Return of O'Garry," recently released, are said to augur well for the success of the series. The dramas are being written by Mrs. L. Case Russell. The second subject will be released April 20.

Norka Roskaya, European and South American Artiste, Has Answered the Call of the Screen

Another Stage Star Enters Pictures

Norka Roskaya, well known in Europe and South America as a dancer and violinist, is among the most recent feminine stars of the legitimate to make the motion picture "plunge." The announcement of Miss Roskaya's decision to try her hand at the silent drama came through A. J. Lang, of the Nicholas Power Company, last week.

It is expected that news of a contract or engagement will be forthcoming shortly.

Directing to Be Sole Job of World Directors

As a further change in its studio policy World-Pictures announces that its directors will hereafter confine their entire activities to directing and not intermingle bookkeeping and the work of a cashier with direction. Instead of having the directors, when on location and at the studio, determine upon the sums to be expended in filming a picture and do all the details essential to the expenditures, World-Pictures says it has found it much more efficient to appoint a treasurer for each production who will accompany the director to location and assume entire charge of all expenditures. In this way the director will not be bothered with business details, but will devote his entire attention to directing the picture.

David Smith Will Direct "Baree"

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, announces that David Smith, his brother, will direct Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman in "Baree, the Son of Kazan," a forthcoming Blue Ribbon Feature, founded on James Oliver Curwood's story, at Vitagraph's Western studio, in Hollywood, Calif. Mr. Smith has been directing Hedda Nova and J. Frank Clandon in "The Woman in the Web," Vitagraph's latest 15-chapter adventure serial, now in final stages of completion.

Essanay Films "Young America"

Spoor Buys Rights from Cohan and Harris, and Story Is Already in Scenario Shape—Cast Engaged in New York

ACCORDING to an announcement from Chicago last week, Essanay is now engaged in the preparation of its next big feature production, "Young America." George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, purchased the rights for this play from Cohan and Harris and it has already been put into scenario form by Essanay's staff of writers.

Director Berthelet has almost completed his plans for interior art decorations and settings. Scouts are out seeking ideal locations for the exterior scenes.

Mr. Spoor has a representative in New York looking for a suitable cast. This is in connection with his new policy of picking the cast specifically to fit the picture, instead of relying altogether on stock company players. This same policy was largely adhered to in "Ruggles of Red Gap" and in "A Pair of Sixes."

In the former Frederick Burton and Lawrance D'Orsay were engaged to play the leading roles in support of Taylor Holmes, while several minor characters were also supplied by talent outside the Essanay studios. In "A Pair of Sixes" Maude Eburne, Alice Mann, Robert Conness and others were engaged to play with Mr. Holmes.

In "Young America" practically the entire cast will be picked from players from New York, with possible additions of minor players from Chicago. It is aimed to get the exact type of player to suit the various roles. In this way Mr. Spoor believes he will be enabled to produce a picture strong in every part and comprising a more harmonious whole, because of the wide field of players to choose from as against the limited number of a stock company.

Taylor Holmes Again Brings His Smile Forward In "A Pair of Sixes," An Essanay Picture

The play was written by Fred Ballard and had a highly successful run on Broadway, as also in other cities. It is believed that it will make even a superior screen production. Work is being rushed on this play and it is expected to release it shortly through the Kleine exchanges.

Other productions are also being gotten under way, including "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," which in all probability will be the release following "Young America."

Harry Carey Special Released April 22

SPECIAL Attractions will release through the Universal exchange on April 22, a Harry Carey production, "The Scarlet Drop," a story of the backwoods of Kentucky where illicit stills used to be numerous and revenue officers scarce. The picture is said to be one of Carl Laemmle's answers to the numerous requests from exhibitors that some producers give some thought to the making of pictures that carry the real human interest and appeal to audiences causing tears one moment and laughter the next to dry the tear drops.

The time of "The Scarlet Drop" is placed just prior to the Civil War and extends for several years after the termination of the struggle between the North and the South. But the war itself is passed over lightly with the assistance of a title "Four Years Later," in this manner eliminating scenes of battles and conflict except such conflicts as are limited and personal and caused by love and jealousy.

Harry Carey plays the part of "Kaintuck" Case, a Kentucky hillbilly, in the production, which is of five reels.

Universal further announces that "The Lion's Claws," its latest serial featuring Marie Walcamp, opened on April 1 with bookings by a larger percentage of theatres than ever have booked a "U" serial in the past. The increase is attributed by the Universal sales department not only to the growing popularity of Marie Walcamp through her success in "Liberty" and "The Red Ace," but to the fact that exhibitors are realizing the economy in purchasing serials when so much overhead selling cost, as compared to the marketing of single features, is eliminated

In "The Lion's Claws" Miss Walcamp is surrounded by a well balanced cast through the entire eighteen episodes. Other members of the cast include Edwin August, Ray Hanford, Thomas Lingham, Nigel De Bruilliere, Henry Von Meter, Rex De Roselli, Gertrude Aster, Alfred Allen, Frank Lanning, Charles Brinley, Sam Polo, Leonard Clapman and Sam Appel.

Elvidge in "The Echo"

June Elvidge has started her new World Picture, "The Echo," Travers Vale directing. Prominent in the cast is John Bowers.

Hodkinson Claims New Angle

Sales Force Works on Basis of Confidence in Dealing with Exhibitors —Principle Is Also Working Slogan

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation claims it conducts its sales work from an entirely different angle and in an entirely different manner from any other film company at present distributing motion pictures.

To substantiate this statement, the Sales Department presented to MOTION PICTURE NEWS a unique series of letters being sent out to the Branch offices and salesmen in an educational campaign.

In these letters there is not a single mention of the actual selling of film. The word "sale" does not occur and, in fact, "film" itself is very seldom mentioned. The purpose of these letters, which deal with such matters as principle, confidence, fair dealing and equitable prices—which Hodkinson says are not usually brought very far to the fore in the film salesman's primer—form the nucleus of the series. W. W. Hodkinson people claim that confidence is one of the most necessary qualities in any sales force and that, of course, applies to every member of the organization as well.

"If you haven't absolute confidence in your own proposition," says one of the Hodkinson letters, "it is impossible for you to convince the man to whom you are endeavoring to sell your product or your plans, that you have something worthy of investing."

"There are no ifs or buts in our business creed," continues the letter, "and, unlike some of our rivals, we have no doubt of our ultimate success, and, because of the absence of that doubt, feel no need to ask the exhibitor to provide cash for such an emergency."

"Furthermore," claims the Hodkinson sales department in another letter, "lack of confidence in a proposition indicates lack of foundation, lack of sanity and practicability. And to mention and consider the possible failure of your scheme and attempt to make your investors help bear the consequences would seem to be the best prediction of failure possible."

Confidence and principle and working slogans are claims to have made good in the Hodkinson organization and the sales department, it is stated, has a considerable file of letters from exhibitors all over the country expressing their appreciation of the way their business is being handled, all of which is the natural result of the continuous propaganda the Hodkinson Corporation is spreading throughout the country.

Small Town Locale for New Glaum Play

ANNOUNCEMENT comes from the offices of the Paralta Plays, Inc., that the second Louise Glaum production to be made at the Paralta studios, will be from an original story which has been written for Miss Glaum by Monte M. Katterjohn, who wrote "An Alien Enemy" in which Miss Glaum will make her debut as a Paralta star. Wallace Worsley, who directed "An Alien Enemy" will also be in charge of the new production, work on which will be started at the Paralta studios immediately.

The new Paralta-Glaum play will be produced under the working title, "One of the Multitude." Mr. Katterjohn found his material in a typical small town community of the middle-West, a location which the author knows thoroughly it is said, and which contains characters of intimate human types. The setting of the story is laid in the community of Midland, described by the author as being a town "populated by best families but sadly in need of a few funerals," which description is vivid, to say the least.

The character of the story portrayed by Miss Glaum is that of an illegitimate daughter of a prominent local judge. The girl, having been driven away from home by the feeling of enmity which is not openly expressed by the townspeople, but which is commonly understood. She comes back after a space of time, supposedly married to a wealthy oil promoter, who is one of the town's newest and most popular acquisitions. But the man of wealth leaves her adrift in her own home town which originally ostracized her. The wealthy oil promoter, having forsaken her, marries the socially accepted daughter of the judge.

Tank Shown in Detail in Pathe Film

PATHE announces that it will release on an early program a special two-reel feature called "Our Fighting Ally—the Tank."

The Official Government Pictures, Inc., which distributes the British war pictures in America, made the picture, most of the scenes of which were taken at Camp Dix, N. J. Interesting details of the tank are given. The fact that the British tank is merely a development of the American caterpillar tractor is brought out when the caterpillar tractor is shown cultivating the fields in America to feed the Allies, while the tank is fighting actively on the fields of France. The men of the National Army being trained at Camp Dix are shown in conjunction with the tank. They are being trained to co-ordinate their efforts with that of the war monster.

The weight and the size of the tank are given on the film, and its wonderful balancing power is demonstrated in the picture.

Board Specially Commends Petrova Pictures

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has seen fit to distinguish each of the productions in which Madame Olga Petrova has thus far appeared as the star of her own organization and this fact, the Petrova Picture Company avers, is an indication of the high character of the productions.

Thus far Madame Petrova has appeared in "Daughter of Destiny," "The Light Within" and "The Life Mask," and all of these plays have not only been passed in toto by the censoring committee of the National Board of Review, but every one has been covered in detail through the medium of a special report.

Taylor Holmes No Longer with Essanay

Taylor Holmes and his director, Lawrence C. Windom, have severed their connection with Essanay and, it is reported, the former will appear before long os a well-known program under the direction of Windom. During their connection with Essanay Holmes and Windom produced seven light comedies. They are now in New York, where they are said to have been in conference with certain prominent film officials.

What an Exhibitor Thought of This Jewel

J. D. Bransford, manager of the opera house at Gilman, Colo., thought so highly of "The Man Without a Country," which he recently played at his theatre, that he wrote the following letter about it to Jewel Productions:

"'The Man Without a Country' has come and gone. It was something grand—sublime—and should be shown in every theatre in the land. It was applauded continuously and standing room was at a premium. It teaches a lesson in patriotism that nothing else can show and any man who leaves a theatre and belittles a play like this is a deadly enemy to our country and ought to be hanged at the first lamp post. I want to go on record as saying that this picture should be shown wherever there is a screen."

ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

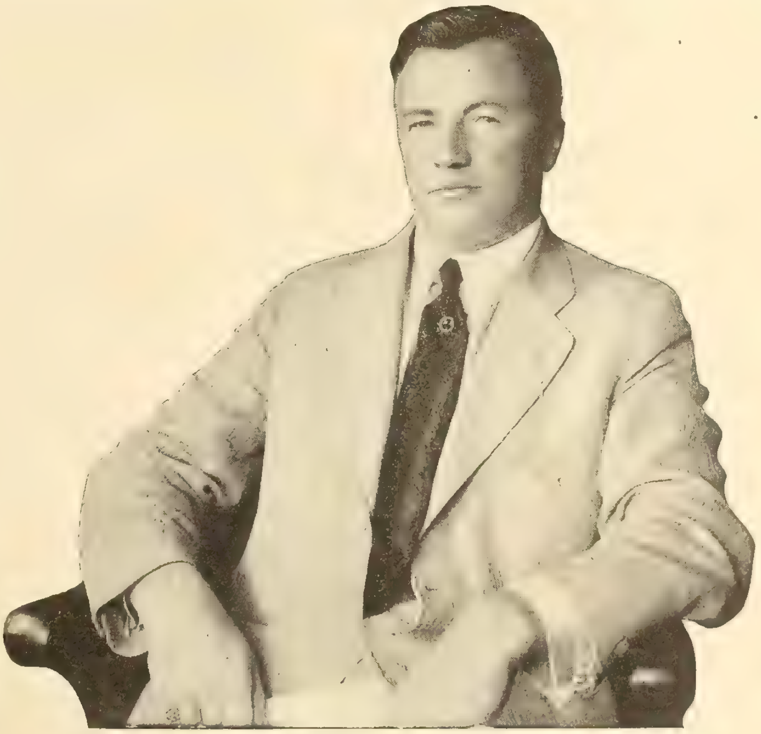
Why 'Over the Top' was Filmed

WHEN the Great War started, Arthur Guy Empey, American, wasn't very much behind the call to arms. He mixed right into the affair with the English, and the next thing that we heard in this country was that the Tommies were bearing the brunt of the battle and that they were coming out of it with victory and medals of honor all over them.

Empey was over there plenty long enough to see the whole show. He went through all the details of training, he saw the U-boats at work in their vain efforts to sink the transports, he saw the energies behind the lines in France, and then he was sent to the front and with the others of the heroes he went "over the top." He was wounded and was retired from service.

But Empey was American, and he did not lose an opportunity that was offered. With his keen insight into events as they happened on the battle front, and with his knowledge that the American people were yearning for accounts of these doings in the holocaust of monarchies, he determined to set these experiences down and sell them in the shape of a book. He was lucky in his title—"Over the Top," an expression that has today been adopted by every story writer, every cartoonist, every man who deals with the war.

Three millions read the story in book form, thirty millions have seen it in the newspapers and fresh hundreds of thousands have heard him lecture. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, was the man to realize the wonderful film value of Empey and his book, and the millions that they would bring to exhibitors of the country. He was not content with the basic thing that most producers seek to achieve—the making of the story into film form. He insisted that the author himself should appear as the hero, and so closely has he followed the career of Empey on the lecture platform that he saw that this hero was really a natural actor. Empey himself hesitated, but the judgment of Mr. Smith won and those who have seen the picture declare that the president of Vitagraph has been fully borne out in his forecast.



Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph, Pioneer Producer and the Man Whose Vision Made Possible the Production of "Over the Top"

Unquestionably the lucky star seems to have been in the ascendancy so far as the activities of Empey have been concerned, and the finished picture is now about to be offered to exhibitors by Vitagraph as the greatest chance of the day to capitalize the millions of dollars of publicity that has already been given. It will be interesting to watch the constructive effort that is put behind this picture by the showmen of the country, to see which of those will take advantage of the splendid assets that it already had and to work it up into the sensation of the day and which will put the picture on "cold" and make it carry itself. Vitagraph has compiled probably the most complete campaign book that has ever been offered on a single feature and is offering a full set of exploitation aids.

Empey's unquestioned story reads like romance, but now exhibitors are going to have a chance to turn it into cold dollars. This is being written to point out the opportunities and to show them how to take advantage of them to the fullest limit.

Three million people have read Empey's first story, "Over the Top," according to the statement of his publishers, G. P. Putnam & Sons. His second book, "First Call" is now being offered for sale and promises to come close to the record of the first. In addition to this the story of "Over the Top" has been syndicated in more than twelve hundred newspapers covering practically every place of importance in the country. It is estimated that fully thirty million people have read the story, and that still other millions will read it as it sifts down to the smaller weeklies. These are in addition to the hundreds of thousands that have seen Empey and have heard him lecture, for his tour has covered the principal points and he will continue this lecture when the feature completes its New York run.

Judging from the wonderful reception that was given "Over the Top" at its opening at the Lyric theatre, New York, where it has been turning away crowds ever since the first night the public has greeted this as a real production. Vitagraph has not been satisfied with having one of the best advertised stories, ever written, together with the fortunate discovery of a real actor in Empey, but it has provided a splendid cast including such players as Lois Meredith, James W. Morrison, Arthur Donaldson, Julia Swayne Gordon, Betty Blythe, Mary Maurice and Nellie Anderson in his support.

Much further advertising and the practical endorsement of the Government has been added by the fact that many of the scenes were made at Camp Wheeler, Ga., and that thousands of the National Army in training there took part in the trench and battle scenes that are presented. In the latter part of the story the American army is brought into the plot and this gives it the close home appeal that is bound to aid in making the production popular.

"Vanity Fair," "The Three Musketeers" and a dozen other books have been read by as many millions as has Empey's story, but they have been read during all of these years of the past. "Over the Top" has something on all of the others so far as the NOW appeal is concerned in that it is fresh in the minds of those who have read it, and that they will want to see the picture as the visualization of something that they have just read.

The MOTION PICTURE NEWS has looked with disfavor on those exploitation suggestions that advise the exhibitor to get window displays from the bookseller on every film that he may happen to show that is made from the story in some published volume. Such displays are excellent now and then, when there arises a real occasion for this, but if the exhibitor should attempt to follow this suggestion every time that it is offered, it is difficult to see where the bookseller would have any time to devote to his routine business. Schemes that attempt to make the bookseller sacrifice his own best interests merely to aid the theatre are bound to fail, but where you can show the proprietor where he can increase his own business, then you will find co-operation.

"Over the Top" furnishes this in an unusual degree not only on account of the demand for this book but because of thousands that have read this will be seeking the newer volume, and the moment that the bookseller couples the announcement of "First Call" up with a picture being shown at the local theatre he is bound to do business.

Here Is Your Chance to Get Into The Fight Yourself

All of us can't go to the firing line but the marvel of motion pictures makes it possible for all of us to be with our boys in spirit and to share their thrills and fights with them.

Empey's "Over the Top" is being read by the millions because it is the most human document ever written by a fighting man. How much greater even is your opportunity to see the living, breathing pages of this greatest of all trench stories brought into action by the wonder of the motion picture camera.

Come on all loyal Americans—here is your chance—get into the fight with Empey himself.

The Greatest Production in the History of Motion Pictures

Vitagraph has spared nothing in making "Over the Top" the tremendous production the subject so richly deserves.

Lois Meredith, James Morrison and a host of other screen favorites make up an all-star cast in support of the "Fighting Sergeant." Every modern innovation in motion picture making, vast numbers of actors and actresses, many hundreds of trained American soldiers and aviators—all have been assembled by Vitagraph for the making of "Over the Top."

As a photo production alone, "Over the Top" is a supreme achievement, but in addition it is one of the most thrilling, intensely dramatic, deeply human stories ever screened.

Specimens of Four Column Advertisements Furnished by Vitagraph

Great Exploitation Chances Here

IN all motion picture theatre advertising there are two things that should always be featured, the name of the star and the title of the picture. In the case of "Over the Top" the name of Guy Empey, the author and the star in the Vitagraph production, are so closely linked that the necessity for use of both names in large type is self-evident.

As a matter of fact these are the two chief points to be brought out, for the ordinary theatre-goer knows the book and the author so well that further words serve merely to drive home the fact that this is a picturization of the famous book. Yet there are several other strong points to be made both in the display matter and the quantity of press matter that this production is pretty certain to get nearly everywhere.

But while we are in this subject let us urge that exhibitors use in all their advertising the figure of Empey with a bayonet in his grasp, going "over the top." This picture is already familiar to millions. It has been used in posters everywhere, in newspaper advertising announcing the book and the story in newspaper form, and in the advertising of Empey lectures. The same idea has been borrowed in much other general advertising—so that one naturally associates this figure of a soldier going "over the top" with Empey. In all of the advertising cuts that Vitagraph furnished, this figure is used, and it appears in most of the display matter. The suggestion is offered that the figure may be used in cutouts in front of the theatre and in various window displays, and it is one so unique that it will attract instant attention.

Those theatres that want to use large space will find it very advisable to use a large half-tone of Empey, such as appears on the first page of this section of the NEWS. Three and four full columns could be used with the greatest success, making the cut the dominant thing. Those of the exhibitors who are familiar with the style of advertising designed by G. F. Fullerton and others on the Pacific Coast will find that this method of exploitation is especially suited to the Empey picture.

For those who have their own artists to design their advertising there can be used all sorts of sketches of battlefield scenes and the like. The stills that are furnished by Vitagraph supply other good material that may be incorporated in the display matter. Several of the scenes of the night fighting will be especially attractive if your newspaper does good printing. If they do not these are likely to give a messy effect.

One thing that should be cautioned against in all of the advertising on "Over the Top." Don't make the type matter long winded. There are too many big things to be featured to tire the reader with a lot of detail. If you put the punch over in your displays you will have your houses packed and nothing to worry about.

Now before we enter into the discussion of the exploitation of this picture let us say this to every exhibitor: Here you unquestionably have one of the greatest opportunities ever offered. It appears to us that things were made exactly to suit you to get all elements of publicity and to take advantage of all the huge amount of advertising that has gone before. But every exhibitor who undertakes merely to put on this picture relying on what HAS been done is going to make a mistake. You have got to keep up the drive, you have got to keep the film itself linked with Empey and his book and in the minds of everyone. Because the author and the book have been so remarkably well advertised for you and in advance there is all the more reason why you, with a comparatively small expenditure can make every bit of this advance publicity work for you. Don't believe any salesman of films who tells you that the publicity is already done and that all you have to do is to throw the picture on the screen. The better known the story, the more publicity it has, the wider appeal that it has gained, the more you should see that everyone of these elements is directed to your special benefit.

We have already referred to the fact that more than twelve hundred newspapers have already printed "Over the Top" in chaptered form. Still others are printing it. Now we would very strongly advise the exhibitor to spend a larger amount with those papers that have printed the story. In the first place you will appeal to the most perceptive clientele. You will be telling those who have read the story about a picture that they already want to see. And at the same time you will have the interest of that newspaper in your attraction. The paper has already seen the wide interest there was in the story and it will recognize the news value of the announcements about the film and it will be ready to accord you ample space if you provide the right sort of matter.

"OVER THE TOP"

Day and Night Effects in the Battle Scenes

Empey's Name Should Be Used

In this connection, the Vitagraph plan book, which is furnished to every exhibitor who asks for it, has a series of probably the most complete press stories that has ever been issued, stories that can be used from the time of the booking of the picture until its actual showing.

Begin This Special Campaign Early

Especially in the newspapers that have carried the story it would be advisable in this case to begin advertising "Over the Top" as soon as you have booked it. It is not necessary to use large space for these displays, but there should be enough to keep the fact before your readers that you are going to show the picture. Don't let someone else get ahead of you in centering the interest on this picture in his house. If you have space in your lobby it would be well to use one of the cutouts to which reference has already been made or a one-sheet to call attention to the fact that this is a coming attraction.

Ordinarily we believe in selling the NOW attraction first, but here is a production that is so different from anything that you have shown that you will not be hurting your regular business and not be detracting from any other film by keeping this before the public. This is one of the exceptions that proves the rules that we have been constantly urging for successful exploitation.

And right here is one point that should be borne in mind. Here is a chance to bring people to your theatre who have never been there before. "Over the Top" has probably been read by hundreds in your section who have not been motion picture fans but whose interest has been sufficiently aroused to want to see this picture and who can probably be made permanent patrons of your theatre if they are properly impressed on their first visit. This point ought to be kept in mind in all of your advertising and in all the unusual steps that you take to let the people know that you are playing "Over the Top."

Use All the Newspapers—and Liberally

We have referred to the fact that you should use the newspapers that have carried the story. This does not mean that the other papers should be ignored. In addition to the thousands of others that have read the book there are new thousands who know what the book is, who Empey is and who are just as anxious to see the picture.

This is an unusual chance to make money; this is also an unusual chance for the exhibitor to prove the worth of advertising to his theatre. There is not a manager who cannot afford to at least double his advertising appropriation on this picture and still come out on the right side of the ledger.

And above that, here is a chance to see what you can get out of co-operation with the newspaper. We do not believe that there are many newspapers in this country that are not willing to give the exhibitor good measure when he shows the willingness to reciprocate by advertising liberally and when he has the goods to deliver.

If we were booking this picture we would go to the newspapers and put the matter squarely up to them. We would say that we had an unusual picture, one that was already backed by millions of dollars' worth of publicity but that we wanted to make the ten-strike of our career by putting it over the top to the biggest business in history. The newspaper man ought to be quick to see the news value in these stories—and there is very little news matter in most motion picture publicity—and he ought to be willing to help prove to you that advertising does pay. There are a dozen news angles covered in the publicity prepared for you and contained in the plan book besides the ones that are so obvious.

Feature the Strength of the Cast

We have already advised you that there are two things to be strongly featured in all of your advertising—the name of Empey and the name of the book. But there is another thing that ought to be included in your advertising and that is the fact that it is an all-star cast, or the names of some of the more prominent players. It is unfortunate that in many cases where some public event or some current novel has been filmed that advantage has been taken of this free exploitation to assign the roles to mediocre actors. This has not been done in the Vitagraph production. There are more than a half dozen people who are known to fans all over the country and recognized as players of unusual merit, and these names will offset any suspicion that anyone may have that they are being offered a fake.

On another page there are reproduced some of the advertising cuts that Vitagraph supplies, but there is a wealth of other matter that can be used in the advertising that you yourself design.

Scenes Made in National Army Camp

One of the chief points is that many of these scenes were made at Camp Wheeler, Ga., and that thousands of soldiers who are soon to be fighting on the field of France took part. The trenches shown were those built as nearly as possible in duplicate of the trenches in France and were those in which "Our Boys" have been training. This element is going to lend a big appeal.

"Over the Top" has become a national slogan. People use it every day in their conversation. You can hardly pick up a newspaper or a magazine without finding the expression used more than once in the advertising matter. So this affords another suggestion. You can probably induce your local merchants to use this expression in their advertising just before you are to show the picture. It is not necessary for you to ask them to say that "Over the Top" is to be shown at your theatre. Don't always expect the abvious. Give the average reader credit for some sense.

"OVER THE TOP"

Chance to Tie Up with War Work

You don't have to drive every idea home with a sledge hammer. You will find that many of the merchants will be willing to do this because of the added interest given their own displays.

In this way you have opportunity to link up special pages with the various stores that could be carried on Sundays for a couple of weeks before the picture is shown at your house. Any live advertising manager of a newspaper ought to be willing to co-operate with you in getting up these special pages. There are scores of ways to lend added interest to these. For instance, you might take one of the "stills" showing a battle scene and offer it in puzzle form, one part of the picture being placed in each merchant's display and the whole forming a perfect picture.

In every bit of your advertising do not fail to emphasize the fact that Empey himself is in the cast. It has been the fashion with many producers to use the name of some famous author or some person in the public eye so as to give the impression that the person was directly connected with the production and then when the patron read the smaller type he found some qualifying phrase. But Empey does not appear in this production and he is declared to be an unusually good actor and this point ought to be made very clear in every announcement that you make.

This fact alone is going to help in public interest, not alone on account of the personality of Empey but because he has been a really big figure in war work in this country since his return from the trenches. He has aided in arousing patriotism and in encouraging enlistments, in raising money for the Red Cross and the Liberty Loans. His picture will gain following from those who appreciate what he has done.

This point of the Liberty Loan is one worth remembering. The country will be raising the Third Liberty Loan when many of the exhibitors get this picture and here is a mighty fine chance for you to tie up with the local committee and help stir the enthusiasm of the people to rolling up a big sum to "Biff the Kaiser."

You might invite Liberty Loan speakers to attend your theatre on the nights and afternoons that this picture is shown and have them make short talks on the necessity of lining Uncle Sam's pockets with gold to meet the Hun hordes. You are going to help the new loan with all of your power anyway and here is a chance to give added momentum to the wave of enthusiasm.

Red Cross societies are pretty sure to co-operate. Everywhere Empey has spoken he has always aided in this work and in one passage in his book he says: "I can never forget the kindness shown me by the doctors and nurses in the Munsey ward of the American Women's Hospital. The Red Cross will always be to me the symbol of Faith, Hope and Charity." Through his lectures he has raised thousands of dollars for the fund and autographed copies of his book sold for the benefit of the Red Cross have brought as high as $2,000.

As a matter of fact, this opportunity to "tie up" applies to any of the patriotic organizations and we mention this fact here under the head of publicity because it is just here that it will be more valuable to you. The newspapers will give you additional space for that reason. It is not necessary for you to enter into ticket selling schemes with these organizations, unless you so desire, for the publicity in itself ought to get the patronage.

One of the cleverest novelties for the exploitation of "Over the Top" is a 6 by 7 inch reproduction of the book which has the figure of the charging Empey coming out of the upper margin. The inside two pages give a number of scenes from the production, and the back page outlines the character of the picture. It is excellent material for the exhibitor to use in advance of the production and in the absence of anything else it will also serve well as a program, for it gives more information that the audience wants than do most programs.

Arthur Donaldson, the well known actor and producer, frequently referred to as the "Mansfield of the Movies," who with the painter's talent creates in make-up the queer characters whom he meets in the streets, was born in Norsholm, Sweden, and made his first public appearance at the early age of seven, having followed his profession practically ever since. Few of the many legitimate stars nowadays, abandoning the stage and entering filmdom are more thoroughly equipped than he for general perfect characterizations. Mr. Donaldson is singularly gifted, for he is a singer, an actor and a painter—but found the two blessings of singing and acting were a stronger combination when it was clear that his future was on the stage. So, with his three great gifts focussed on one subject he has become a master hand—one of the wizard workers of the picture stage.

Mr. Donaldson has created many delightful characters on the stage and in motion pictures. He is perhaps most noted for his characterization of Prince of Pilsen in the opera of that name which he played and sang, from its opening night until it closed, five years later. One of his greatest works of art as master of make-up was the character of Baron deGrimm in "Madeline or The Magic Kiss." In this play he depicted the Baron at four periods of his life. First at the age of one hundred years, then at the age of seventy-five, then at fifty, and at the age of twenty-five. Other well-known characters he has created on the stage are Hans Ritter in "The Great Genius," Frihiof in "The Wanderer," "The Norseman," "Rob Roy," "Brian Boru," etc.

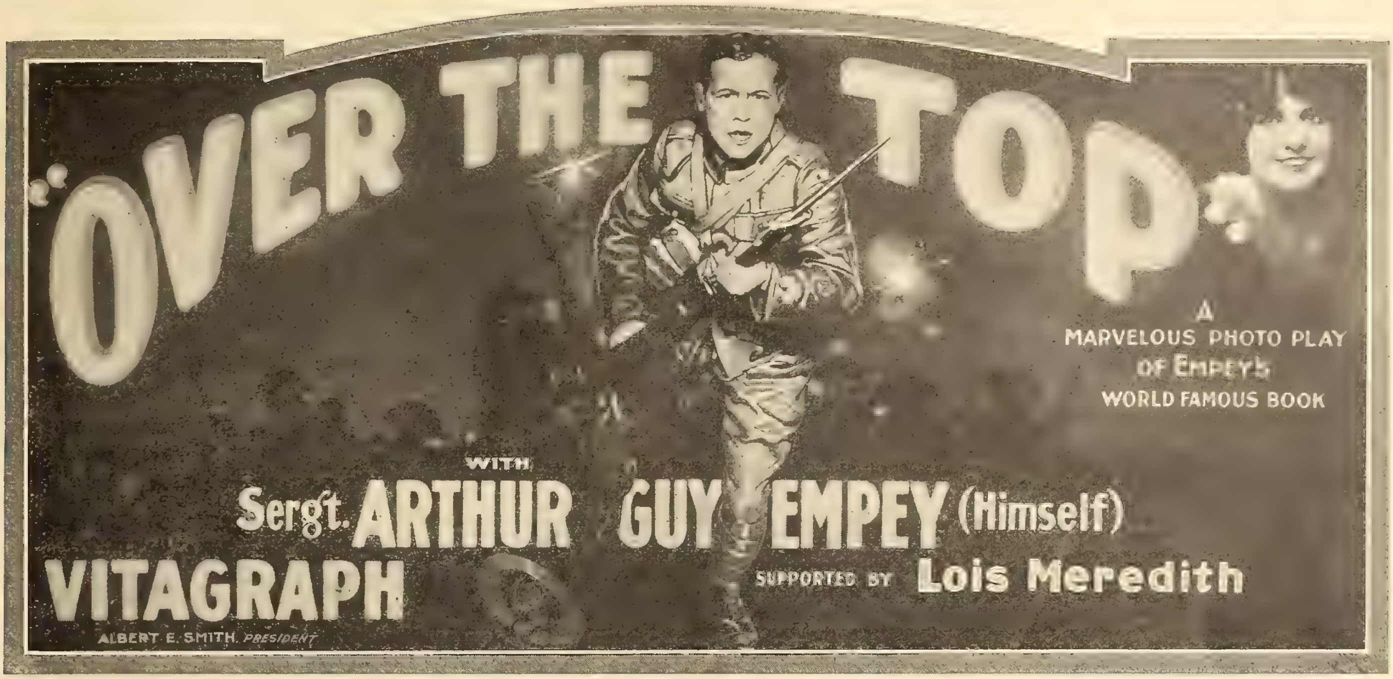
Since going into the motion picture field, however, he has done more remarkable work in the make-up line than on the stage. In motion pictures it is possible to go to lengths that would be impracticable for everyday theatrical use.

Perhaps the most remarkable motion picture he has done, and perhaps it is the most remarkable of any screen make-up is his characterization of the fanatical Blue-gum negro priest in "The Ghost of Twisted Oaks."

This characterization was so lifelike that Mr. Donaldson did not get the proper credit for it. He looked so much like a native African that audiences and critics simply took him for one and let it go at that. Therein lies one of the penalties of being a genius at anything—it's so natural that it's easy. When Mr Donaldson is cast in a picture or play he disappears for a few days and leaves no clue. If he were to be seriously traced, however, he would be found around the wharves or railroad yards or in some lodging house or park, studying or searching for a certain type.

The more strange and outlandish a character the better he likes it. It sets his artist's spirit to work, and all that is necessary is to turn him loose with pad and pencil and give him access to his immense roomful of costumes, wigs, beards, and other things. The rest of his occult imaginings and considerable fussing over an alcohol lamp.

Since he became a Vitagraph player he has appeared in the following Features—"For France," "Who Goes There?" "I Will Repay," "His Own People," "Over the Top," etc.



"OVER THE TOP"

Sergt. ARTHUR GUY EMPEY (Himself)
VITAGRAPH
ALBERT E. SMITH, PRESIDENT
SUPPORTED BY Lois Meredith
A MARVELOUS PHOTO PLAY OF EMPEY'S WORLD FAMOUS BOOK

Striking twenty-four sheet which Vitagraph is offering free to all exhibitors and has posted through the U. S.

Many Varied Appeals in the Film

"OVER THE TOP" is such a universal expression these days that there could be no better phrase imagined for a teaser campaign, but we believe that this is the sort of a picture in which the teaser idea is unnecessary. It would be a great deal better to come out with the straight announcement of the production, for the interest in the film itself, we believe, will be greater than any curiosity that might be aroused by the appearance of only the phrase all over town.

Vitagraph has issues an unusual line of poster matter for this picture, always keeping the charging figure of Empey as the most prominent thing. The exhibitor here has a real chance for the circus appeal without the circus adjectives.

The twenty-four sheet is a particularly striking piece of work showing the charging figure of Empey with other soldiers silhouetted behind him, and the shells breaking over them. A picture of Lois Meredith, the heroine appears in the upper right-hand corner, and there is just enough reading matter to tell the essential facts. Vitagraph is offering to furnish this paper free to all exhibitors who will use them, and certainly these used for two weeks to a month before the showing of the picture ought to stimulate the interest. Vitagraph itself has posted this through the nation.

For lesser display work there is a six sheet which shows the same figure with a ruined church in the background; a three sheet showing practically the same thing and a second showing Empey, sword in hand, defending Lois Meredith and two one sheets, one of which shows the charging figure and the other a portrait of Empey with smaller ones of James Morrison and Lois Meredith.

Cut Outs of Empey Easy to Make

The three sheet and the six sheets lend themselves particularly well to cut outs. And here is one thing to remember. There are many merchants who will not be willing to allow you to hang a poster on their window, but who will be willing to use a figure of Empey that you can arrange attractively, and which the merchant can use without hiding the rest of the display.

Especially if you can arrange with the merchants to hold "Over the Top" sales about the time that you are showing the picture, this matter ought to fit in mighty well. The same figure is carried out in the window card and in the two styles of slides.

We have already referred to the fact that it ought to be easy to get co-operation of the booksellers on this. But don't wait until the last day so that they will have no stock of the two books on hand, but take the matter up as soon as you book the picture. Arrange for window displays that will bring people to your theatre and that will sell the books for the dealer. You don't have to have the name of your theatre plastered all over the place. One or two of these cutouts with the possible addition of some crossed rifles or any war trophies that you may be able to assemble, plus the volumes themselves ought to attract plenty of attention.

Two of these cutouts, or more, if you have the space, could be put up at the top of your lobbies at once without interfering with the displays on current production. Keep Empey's name and the name of the production on these displays from the start, even if you do not use the date. This is in advance of your main lobby display.

Suggestions for Your Lobby Display

Now, a few days before you are to show this picture, you can devote the larger part of your attention to the picture itself. Use the large cut outs and add various patriotic elements to the display—there are so many that it seems almost foolish to attempt to suggest them. Of course, the first thing that occurs is to use a wealth of American flags together with the flags of the Allies, especially that of the British, for it was in the army of England that Empey fought. But still this element can be arranged to suit the element to which you appeal, for if there is a large Italian, French or Slav population in your neighborhood the course for you to take should be plain.

Portraits of Wilson and other great Americans of to-day and past generations can be used liberally. There are all sorts of arrangements that can be made to have the lobby take on the war atmosphere, all the way from arranging a regular camp down to merely stacking a few guns in one of the corners of the lobby. Inventive managers will find plenty of ways for duplicating real weapons of war and including them in the display.

By covering the walls with gray canvass and using boarding the lobby would be given the appearance of a trench, and especially at night the lighting effects would make such a display all the more realistic. Drops of various kinds would be splendid, showing camp scenes at night or even battle effects. An enterprising electrician with the use of a few red lights carefully concealed and arranged to flash just at the right moment can get results that will make every one passing down the street look. Similar effects could be carried out in the foyer, and even in the theatre itself.

Chance for Excellent Stage Settings

The stage settings that could be used for this production are equally apparent. Here is a real chance for managers who have never done anything along this line to experiment, and especially to do so in connection with the Liberty Loan or any of the other patriotic causes that we have already mentioned. Your settings can easily couple up the appeal of the picture with the appeal to help the nation.

In fact, here is another field that this picture opens up in the shape of curtain raisers and tableaux. Many of the smaller exhibitors have envied the fact that some of the large theatres of the country are able to put on these special settings and that they themselves cannot afford the expense. Here is a chance for doing this at almost any range of outlay that you desire. Civil War veterans, Spanish-American war soldiers and even the boy scouts can be utilized for this purpose. These would be the simplest form without any expense. This might be carried further into the elaborate tableaux effect. Vitagraph suggests that the Rosemary Pageant, which was recently held as an Allied benefit in New York presented one that might be used for this picture. It consisted of presenting the different nations, represented by women in appropriate dress. As Belgium, in her widow's robes of mourning appeared, the Belgian national air was heard. Then came heroic France, wrapped in her tricolor; Britain, queen of the Seas in her national colors; Serbia, Belgium, Scotland, and finally America, Goddess and Guardian of World Liberty. The heroes of all nations and all times might also be presented by young women and men. Among such characters could be Joan of Arc, Washington, Lincoln, Lafayette and Garibaldi. When these have appeared and taken their places in a group to the back of the stage, they might part and point to the rear centre of the stage, where a spotlight reveals a plain American Sammy, posed as is Sergeant Empey on the cover of his book and on the posters.

Costuming the Ushers a Chance

Still further this idea can be carried out by dressing the ushers, if they are men in the uniforms of the army and navy, or rather as near to them as is permissible, or even in the uniforms of the various allied countries. If girls they might appear in costumes typical or the different nationalities.

Illumination of the front of the theatre at night during the showing of "Over the Top" is strongly recommended. This can be done with red light, as has already been suggested, or if these are not available red fire would give the effect desired.

In fact, there is such a wide range of suggestions to be made that one hesitated to go further. In answer to one of the questions recently appearing in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Mr. Rothapfel said that a great deal had been accomplished if the exhibitor was made to think.

Certainly "Over the Top" with its wealth of apparent material ought to have this effect, and it ought, therefore, to prove a great benefit not alone during the run of the picture itself, but as a builder for better business in the future.

GET THE SOLDIER INTEREST

Everyone Whose Kin Have Gone to War Will Be Deeply Interested in This Picture

WITH the scores of army camps scattered through the country the exhibitors who are located near these will overlook a bet if they fail to call attention of the soldiers to "Over the Top." Many of the scenes having been made at Camp Wheeler, Ga., the boys will be given a chance to see how they themselves look in training, and they will also have laid before them conditions such as they will soon be facing in France.

Every person whose kin is in the war, and these days this applies to just about everyone, ought to be very much interested in this picture. In the first place it has as the central figure the man who has been there, and who has written about the situation, then it pictures the training camp scenes, and finally it contains some of the best battle scenes that have ever been filmed. The patriotic element that runs so strongly through the interesting plot literally carries the audience along with the picture.

Here you have a chance to advertise a film written by a man who has been in the war, enacted by people who are getting ready for the war, and breathing the very spirit of America's battle that democracy shall live.

James Morrison as the "Coward," Betty Blythe as "Mme. Arnot" and Lois Meredith as "Helen Lloyd"

Points to Be Remembered

THERE are a good many things that the exhibitor ought to know about the picture than merely that it is the story of Empey's famous book and that the soldier-author himself appears in it.

In the first place it is a real picture and one that was hailed by a capacity audience at the Lyric theatre, New York, as a real hit, such a one that the seats promise to be sold far in advance during the first few weeks of the engagement. It is a picture that would appeal even if it were not made from the celebrated book.

As Empey said when he agreed to go into a motion picture production, it shows "just what we are up against over there," and in addition it shows that Americans can take care of themselves.

To see Empey and the boys "go over the top" in a trench raid at night will reassure and hearten everyone who has a loved one at the front, because they will feel proud to be of the blood of real men, unafraid and willing to make the supreme sacrifices for their country.

Those who have read Empey's great book will see many of the highlights that made the book a joy, and they will recognize many of the characters that they met in the book, particularly Albert Lloyd, the coward. This incident of a man who feared and then, when he had been sentenced to death as a coward, redeemed himself by rescuing his comrades in the face of a torrent of enemy bullets, stood out with the sharpness of a cameo in the book and it has been reproduced on the screen with even greater vividness.

"Over the Top" is convincing, because one feels that it is accurate in detail and in action. Empey, the hero of the play, lives again on the screen the thrilling moments he expereinced during the eighteen months he was on the battlefront; and, in view of the fact that he personally directed the building of the trenches, the outfitting of the soldiers who take part in the raiding scenes and everything connected with the military phases of the picture, these are the most realistic scenes conceivable.

By special arrangement with the War Department, the trench scenes were made at Camp Wheeler, near Macon, Ga., and more than 7,500 U. S. Regulars were used in the raiding operations. The airplane scenes, the most thrilling of the kind ever seen on the screen, also were made by Government consent, the filming being done at one of the army aviation camps on Long Island.

The Vitagraph Company has been more than three months in the making of the picture and is said to have expended a vast sum of money on it. One of the high lights in it is the actual reproduction of President Wilson in the act of signing the proclamation of war against Germany. Another is the sinking of the Lusitania, the act of frightfulness that transported Empey from an office in Jersey City, whither he had retired after long service in the United States Cavalry, and sent him to the front line in France as an avenger.

ROBERT GORDON ANDERSON is the man who wrote the scenario for "Over the Top." Mr. Anderson has done much writing for magazines and newspapers and has edited and collaborated in a number of successful books.

More than being the author of the excellent scenario, Mr. Anderson is a close friend of Arthur Guy Empey, and as sales manager of G. P. Putnam & Sons, he is responsible for having induced Empey to write the story which has had such a remarkable sale.

Robert Gordon Anderson, who wrote scenario of "Over the Top"

Mr. Anderson claims Jersey as his native state. He saw a little of the inside of college walls at New York University but was forced to leave because the exchequer got rather low. Then at 18, ambitious to be president, perhaps, he taught a little country school for a year; managed the book department of a New York store, wrote "ads.," traveled over the U. S. A. in big towns and small as a salesman, reported for the New York newspapers, spent two years in Montana roughing it in the cattle country, and then, having gained such a rich store of material, settled down to writing and publishing. He says he would rather do the former than anything he knows, and has for some time written for the leading newspapers, magazines, and for the films, and has edited and collaborated on some books that have proved very popular. Nothing, however, in his experience has proved more enjoyable than the work on "Over the Top." This book of personal narrative furnished a splendid background on which to paint a thrilling story of love, war, and patriotism.

G. P. Putnam & Sons are announcing for publication about the latter part of August or the first of September, a new novel by Mr. Anderson.

Arthur Guy Empey, Julia Swayne Gordon as "Mrs. Wagner" and Arthur Donaldson as "Friedrich von Emden"

Who Are Who Among the Players

"OVER THE TOP" cast is perfectly balanced. Everyone in it has already been tried and not found wanting, but under the magnetic influence of Arthur Guy Empey each seems to excel his past efforts. Throughout the picture the master hand of Wilfred North is felt. Mr. North is lucky in having a continental viewpoint due to many years spent abroad. He is a man in whose work a fine touch is always felt.

Lois Meredith is the ideal "girl he left behind" though she does not stay left behind in "Over the Top." Her beauty and charm is so compelling that one does not wonder at her ability to entertain forty German officers when everything depends on keeping them occupied. One is not even surprised at her trip to Europe in a submarine or her flights in war planes, so apparent is her daring and love of adventure.

James Morrison portrays the evolution of a hero from a weakling. Albert Lloyd abhored the draft though he submitted. At training camp he acquitted himself well. But in the front-line trenches he was physically incapable of standing the sound. He became half crazed and imbued with abnormal cunning. He escaped and hid in a deserted dug-out. He was discovered, court-martialed and sentenced to be shot. While he was waiting that hour in the guard house it was destroyed by a shell. His guards were killed and he was free. In the distance he saw his men start to go over in the first wave. His one thought was to go over with them. He fought his path through barbed wire, over bayonets, across crater holes trying to catch up with them. He ran into a machine gun whose whole squad had been wiped out. He looked up and saw the German flanks closing in. He grabbed the machine gun and saved the day. His men coming back saw what he had done, but before they could get to him he was hit by a shell and fell dead. It was the exact hour at which he was sentenced to be shot. Mr. Morrison has poignantly interpreted Lloyd.

Arthur Donaldson adds one more to a long list of triumphs in his characterization of Friederick von Emden. In the difficult part of an enemy spy Mr. Donaldson puts such subtility that in his work alone a great lesson and warning is felt. Mr. Donaldson, who by the way, was the original Prince of Pilsen, and after whom the well known Arthur Donaldson cigar was named, is at the very top of character men. He has played one big part after another in feature pictures, but in "Over the Top" he surpasses his previous efforts. The character he portrays is of international importance. Mr. Donaldson has made him exactly what we should recognize him, the arch enemy, the traitor to humanity.

FEATURE THESE PLAYERS

Many Well Known Names Included in the Cast of "Over the Top"

THERE are a number of noted actors in the cast of "Over the Top," and the picture has the perfect right to be called an all-star creation. There are many of these players who are probably favorites with your audience, and you can feature them in your advertising and in your program matter. Here is the cast of principals:

Garry Owen	Arthur Guy Empey
Helen Lloyd	Lois Meredith
Albert Lloyd	James W. Morrison
Friederich von Emden	Arthur Donaldson
Mrs. Wagner	Julia Swayne Gordon
Mrs. Margaret McNeal	Mary Maurice
Madame Arnot	Betty Blythe
Sonia	Nellie Anderson
Thomas Waldron	William Calhoun
Geoffery Blake	William H. Stucky

DIRECTED BY WILFRID NORTH

Under Personal Supervision of Albert E. Smith

Betty Blythe's tall, dark young beauty suits well the character of the lovely French countess, Mme. Arnot. In this, her first tragic part, Miss Blythe plays with a depth of feeling, which gives promise of a most brilliant future. After she has lost everything which makes life worth living, her husband, her home, her friends, at the hands of the ruthless Huns, she lives for her country only to die for it. In every look, every gesture she portrays France triumphant though losing all.

Julia Swayne Gordon has put into the German spy, Mme. Wagner, the lust of a woman who would forfeit honor and even life rather than do without money. She has made her a white-haired woman, cold as steel, and money mad. She is ruthless, domineering, ready to stake everything for gold. She has dressed her superbly in furs and satins. She has made us realize in her that there are people to be feared for other motives than patriotism. She has played her part with fine discrimination and reserve.

Mother Maurice as Empey's old nurse does a touching bit of work—as does Nellie Anderson, Mme. Arnot's last remaining retainer.

Four Keystones for April Triangle Schedule

Four two-reel Keystone Comedies, recently completed at the Triangle Culver City studio, are listed for April release on the Triangle card. The first is "Mr. Briggs Closes the House," by Kate Corbaley, author of "Real Folks," the $1,000 prize story in the recent Triangle Photoplay contest. It deals with the comedies and errors of domestic life. In the cast are Edwin Brady, Myrtle Rishell, Anna Dodge, Fred Mack and Frank Caffrey.

In "First Aid," released on the April 14 program, are Williams Franey, Maud Wayne, Diana Carrillo, twelve-year-old Burwell Hamrick, and Myrtle Reeves. It follows the fortunes of a first aid "fiend" who spends her time at the Red Cross meetings learning how to bandage the injured, but who applies her knowledge in the first practical instance with disastrous results.

"Their Neighbor's" Baby" is the comedy release for the week of April 21. In the cast are Fritzie Ridgeway, Rae Godfrey, Ray Griffith and Charles Dorian, Joey Jacobs, Little Barbara Connelly, who appeared in "Little Red Decides," and several other children.

"Mr. Miller's Economies" is the fourth and concluding comedy of the month. Edward Brady and Charles Dorian are the featured players.

"Heart of the Sunset" to Be Ready Soon

"Heart of the Sunset," Rex Beach's melodramatic romance of the great American Southwest in the comparatively recent days of the American occupation of Vera Cruz, is shortly to be released by Goldwyn. "This picture," says a Goldwyn announcement, "has been produced with the skill and care always given to the Rex Beach productions. It is packed with thrilling action and incident."

Success Predicted

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation expects that Elsie Ferguson will score another success in her next Artcraft picture, "The Lie," to be released April 8, as it provides a subject for the exercise of her emotional talent.

COMING PROGRAM OFFERINGS

Fox Names April Productions

List Includes Two Standards and Four Specials, in Addition to Cartoons and Comedy—Theda Bara Among Stars

THE April releases of the Fox Films Corporation include two Standard Plays, four Special Features, two Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons and one Sunshine comedy.

Of the Standard Plays, "The Soul of Buddha" is a Theda Bara Super-Production, written by Miss Bara herself and featuring her as a half-caste Indian girl. The star is first shown as a sacred dancer sworn to the worship of Buddha. But she falls in love with a British officer, is cursed by the High Priest, and later is struck down on a Paris concert stage just as she is entering upon a promising stage career. Her adventures lead her through the gay life of Paris, and she is given many opportunities by her weird role to run the gamut of emotional acting. The picture was directed by J. Gordon Edwards.

"The Blindness of Divorce," the other Standard Picture release, was written and directed by Frank Lloyd. It is played by an all-star cast.

Jewel Carmen, in "The Bride of Fear," a Fox Special Feature, portrays the part of a young girl, discouraged in her attempt to make a way for herself in a great city, who is saved from suicide by a crook.

"American Buds" features Jane and Katherine Lee in a romantic drama in which the two children are seen as inmates of a poor farm.

Tom Mix has a comedy in "Western Blood." The play is said to be something quite different from what Mix has been accustomed to appear in because it features him and his cowpuncher friends in dress suits. The story was written by Tom Mix himself and the acting was directed by Lynn Reynolds.

Tom Mix Will Next Appear for William Fox in "Western Blood"

George Scarborough's drama, "Her One Mistake," is the April Special Feature written for Gladys Brockwell. In this play the star again brings to the screen a dual role, playing the part of Harriet Gordon, a wealthy heiress, and Peggy Malone, her maid.

The Henry Lehrman Sunshine Comedy scheduled for release in April is "A Waiter's Wasted Life." This farce is said to be fully up to the standard which Lehrman has set for variety, action, daring escapades and laughable situations.

Mutt and Jeff, Bud Fisher's cartoon characters, recently adopted by William Fox, will disport themselves in two April releases. One is "The Freight Investigation" and the other is "The Leak." These Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons are declared by the Fox forces to be a real "find," for in the short time since they have been taken over they have won enthusiastic approval not only in the United States but in Europe and South America.

Russian Art Heads Pathe List April 14

MADAME NADYA LESIENKO in "The Busy Inn," a Russian Art drama, "The Whispering Wires of War," the sixth episode of "The House of Hate," and another rousing Harold Lloyd comedy, head Pathe's program for April 14.

"The Busy Inn" is said to be a strong Russian play of middle-class life adapted for the screen from the drama by Alexander Ostrovsky. The cast includes N. I. Panoff and Madame Orlova. The play is rather unique in that it has a happy ending.

Questions of vital interest concerning the manoeuvres of vast armies are vividly answered in the graphic one-reel feature, "The Whispering Wires of War," showing the spectacular work of the telephone and wireless divisions of the United States Signal Corps in France.

"A Live Target" is the title of the sixth episode of the Pathe serial, "The House of Hate." This episode opens with the Hooded Terror overpowering Pearl Waldon, played by Pearl White, in the apartment of Harvey Gresham, played by Antonio Moreno.

"Pipe the Whiskers" is the name of Harold Lloyd's new one-reel comedy, produced by Rolin and released by Pathe. It is said to be a masterpiece of fun and action which takes place in a "Midutorium," where the old boys can turn hand springs after one week's treatment.

Two split-reel Pathe colors for the week are "The Valley of the Dordogne" and "The Horse in Action."

Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 32 and 33 are released on this program.

Wanda Hawley Was Formerly Miss Petit. She Has the Lead With Douglas Fairbanks In "Mr. Fix-It," a New Artcraft

Pathe Feature Promises Most Everything

Comedy, thrills and pathos are said to be attractively blended in the Pathe feature, "Mrs. Slacker," starring Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale, announced for March 31, and marking the first release of a picture in which these two stars have appeared. The company went to Florida to make the scenes. The Pathe "twin stars" make an ideal team and render the picture one of unusual charm, it is said. It deals from a "different" angle with military service and is particularly timely with the second draft claiming public attention.

Fox Makes Standard a Special Film

Again William Fox has strengthened his 52-a-year Special Feature series by adding to it one of his Standard Pictures. Mr. Fox announced a few days ago that Jane and Katherine Lee have proven so popular with the public that he has just taken their latest comedy, "American Buds," even though it was made as a high-class Standard picture, and has delivered it over to the Special Feature exhibitors at the lower rate.

The reason given by Mr. Fox is that he desires to add to the value of his Special Features whenever it is possible for him to do so.

Chambers Story Leads Off for Vitagraph

President Albert E. Smith announces that "The Business of Life," by Robert W. Chambers, and featuring Alice Joyce with Walter McGrail, Percy Standing and Betty Blythe, will be the Blue Ribbon Feature on the Vitagraph schedule for the week of April 8. The serial offering is the first episode of "The Woman in the Web," titled "Caught in the Web." Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon are featured. The Vitagraph Drew Comedy is "The Home Cure," while "Rummies and Razors," featuring Lawrence Semon, is the Big V offering.

Glances at the Program

Part two of Pathe's analysis of motion, called "The Horse In Action," is scheduled for release shortly. The first part was received well by audiences.

Every part in "His Majesty, Bunker Bean," which Paramount has set for April 8, has been entrusted to a player ideally suited to the characterization required, it is said.

General Film has released the first of the Merkel Films, split reel novelty subjects said to be of an unusually attractive nature. Cartoons, scenics and novelties are introduced in the first six.

Jealousy is the theme of "The Vortex," Norman Sherbrook's Wall Street story which heads the Triangle April 7 program. Mary Warren has the leading feminine role, with Jack King featured.

Paramount aims to release sometime in April a Charles Ray picture which is expected to be a powerful argument for patriotism. It is said to be propaganda, yet retains points to make it interesting.

World Pictures has set for release May 6 "Masks and Faces," with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson and fifty other stars of the English stage. The picture can be exploited on the cast alone.

William Fox has not missed his guess in bringing forth "The Spy" again, and putting the feature out for use among exhibitors. It exposes German spy plots in America, and is most timely.

"The Bull's Eye," the Universal serial the tenth episode of which is showing in the first release houses the week of April 8, is said to be doing a better average business than former Universal serials.

In "The Tiger Man," Artcraft current release, William S. Hart has under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince again painted a vital screen character, expected to rank among his best.

Pathe is releasing a one-reel feature called "The Whispering Wires," which is said to be an answer to the question, whence come the commands directing allied troops against the Germans?

The completion of "Mr. Fix-It" marks the eighth picture produced by Douglas Fairbanks for the Artcraft program. It will follow "Headin' South," on April 22. Marjorie Daw is in it.

Rural chickens and Broadway chickens, pigs, cows and other varieties of the barn yard family, are used in the two-reel L-Ko comedy release of April 23, featuring Gale Henry and a big cast.

Hearst-Pathe News No. 25, for March 24, contains many features showing what is being done to meet the enemy's offensive in the big war. One of these is the taking over by the U. S. of Dutch ships here.

"How Could You, Jean?" is Mary Pickford's new Artcraft feature, which is to be released shortly. It is nearing completion in California, after which the star campaigns for the Red Cross.

"The Boss of Lazy Y," with Roy Stewart in the title role, is to be a Triangle release April 7. Director Cliff Smith supervised.

The Pathe colored scenics are attracting nation-wide interest and attention. "Timber Transportation in Sweden" and "The Valley of the Dordogne" are among the most recent to meet with approval.

Shipbuilding stands out prominently in Unilversal Current Events No. 46. The picture shows the launching of three steel cargo steamers on the West Coast.

With the exception of one or two subjects, all of the Mutual Screen Telegram released March 27 pertained to the war. Nine subjects were scheduled.

In the new Paramount picture starring Wallace Reid, "The House of Silence," by Elwyn Barron, the scenario by Margaret Turnbull, there is said to be everything that goes to make a story full of mystery.

"It's a Wild Life" is a new comedy starring Harold Lloyd that is scheduled for release April 21. It is said to be one of the best pictures that Lloyd has ever done.

Women as Sharpshooters in Pictograph

The 113th release of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph depicts under the title of "Training Women Sharpshooters" the beginning of a movement to train women in the handling of a rifle. Miss June Haughton, international woman champion rifle shot, is the instructor.

"A New Use for a House Boat" illustrates how an enterprising New Yorker is raising pedigreed dogs on a house boat anchored in the Hudson river.

L. M. Glackens, of the Bray Studios, Inc., contributes "Me und Gott," a timely political cartoon; also "Our Bone Relatives," an animated drawing which shows the relationship in bone structure between man and the lower species of vertebrates.

Louise Lovely in Bluebird for April 15

Louise Lovely is featured in "A Rich Man's Darling," the Bluebird offering for April 15. Harvey Gates, author of the story, is said to have succeeded in striking a happy medium between society drama and melodrama in "A Rich Man's Darling," which places a wealthy banker and an unscrupulous adventuress in numerous amusing but highly possible situations of mistaken identity. Miss Lovely has the part of a charming young dressmaker's assistant who is mistaken for a vampire.

Katzenjammer Kids Again Due April 15

"Vanity and Vengeance," the latest Katzenjammer Kids cartoon comedy, will be released the fifteenth of this month. This series, produced by the International Film Service and released through the Educational Films Corporation of America, is said to be meeting with a heavy demand. "Vanity and Vengeance" will be released in conjunction with "The Living Book of Nature," the animal feature put out by the Educational corporation.

Reginald Barker, Directed "Carmen of the Klondike," a State Rights Distributors' Picture

"Carmen of Klondike" Booked Heavily

The booking for "Carmen of the Klondike," the New York and Northern New Jersey rights to which are controlled by the Pioneer Film Corporation, are reported to be heavy, by this company.

Following the run at the New York and Strand theatres, this production has been booked for seventy days over the Marcus Loew Circuit in New York City, to be followed with other large circuits running simultaneously with and after. Fifteen prints have been ordered by the Pioneer Corporation for New York State and Northern New Jersey, and indications are that five more prints will be needed to accommodate all bookings. Aside from that, five prints will be worked out of the Buffalo office for the western New York territory.

"Carmen of the Klondike" is a strong, red-blooded drama of Alaska, written by Monte M. Katterjohn, who is responsible for the stories of many of the Hart-Ince Productions. It was directed by Reginald Barker, who directed William S. Hart in many of his successes for the Ince-Triangle productions. Clara Williams, famous as an Ince-Triangle star, is featured.

"Kaiser" Received by Chicagoans

Jewel Production's Release Stands 'Em Up at Ziegfeld's Theatre—Critics Give High Praise

JEWEL Production, which organization purchased the world rights to Rupert Julian's production, "The Kaiser," the Beast of Berlin, announces that Marcus Loew has booked the feature over his Greater New York circuit and that William Fox has booked it for his circuit in the same territory.

The following out-of-town theatres have booked "The Kaiser": Globe, Boston, Mass.; Palace, Phila. Pa.; Playhouse, Wilmington, Del.; Adams, Detroit, Mich.; Premiere, Lowell, Mass.; Bijou, Bay City, Mich.; Strand, Flint, Mich.; Standard, Cleveland, Ohio; Rialto, Rochester, N. Y., Springfield, Mass., Youngstown, Ohio; Tulsa, Okla.; Superba, Los Angeles; Strand, San Francisco; Arcadia, Reading, Pa.; Royal, Kansas City; Royal, St. Louis; Lyceum, Pittsburgh; Holman, Montreal.

Chicago gave the picture an enthusiastic greeting when it opened at the Ziegfeld theatre, the big Michigan avenue house. Executives and salesmen of Jewel Productions, Inc., who went to Chicago for the opening said that they had to fight their way through the crowds in front of the Ziegfeld in order to attend the opening performance at one o'clock on Sunday afternoon.

Chicago critics were of one mind on "The Kaiser." All praised it. There was not a dissenting voice. All of the daily papers spoke of it in highest terms and devoted news space to their reviews, from which the following are taken:

W. K. Hollander in "The Daily News" wrote:

"You will shout, hiss and applaud in turn at its timely and pungent utterances, and by the same token you will marvel at its exactness and general photographic brillance."

May Tinee in "The Tribune" said:

"If you would be interested in a comprehensive study of the Madman of Europe as he is in his quieter hours, alone in his home and with his staff, you are recommended to see Jewel's seven reel picture, 'The Kaiser.'"

Kitty Kelly in "The Examiner":

"It stirs the blood anew against the terrible power that has striken the world with war. It's a patriotic duty to see it."

Rob Reel in "The American":

"Here is the war picture that with its final fade out puts the spirits soaring skyward and the mind in a frame that all's right with the world."

Louella Parsons in "The Herald":

"So absorbing is this tale of the kaiser it held me fascinated until seven reels whirled by without any consciousness of time, place or anything save the subject at hand."

King-Bee to Celebrate First Anniversary

KING-BEE FILMS CORPORATION will celebrate its first anniversary, May 1st. During the course of a year, this producing and distributing concern has made marked progress and has developed into one of the most successful operators in the comedy branch of the independent field.

Louis Bernstein, president of King-Bee, will leave Los Angeles early in April with three prints of the latest Billy West Comedies, which will be given a trade showing in New York the latter part of April or the first of May. After the trade showing, it is announced that a luncheon will be tendered the press and trade. Nat H. Spitzer, sales manager, King-Bee, will be guest of honor. Mr. Spitzer has sold the entire world rights for the Billy West Comedies.

Territories handling the Billy West King-Bee Comedies throughout the United States have been sold to new concerns who will handle this brand of two-reelers exclusively in their respective zones. R. C. Cropper, formerly of the Standard Film Corporation, has secured the following territory in the State of Illinois—north of and including Adams, Brown, Cass, Menard, Logan, DeWitt, Piatt, Champaign and Vermilion counties, also that part of the State of Wisconsin south of and including La Crosse, Monroe, Wood, Portage, Shawano, Oconto and Marinette counties.

Mr. Cropper has received permission from the Bee-Hive Exchange of New York to use that name as a trade-mark for his new exchange at 220 South State street, Chicago. The first picture released under this new arrangement is "The Stranger."

Joe Levy is manager of a new exchange that will handle the Billy West King-Bee Comedies in Missouri, Kansas and the southern part of Illinois. This exchange will also be known as the Bee-Hive Company, with offices at 3630 Olive street, St. Louis, Mo. The first picture release is "The Stranger."

Another Bee-Hive exchange company has been formed with D. H. Mitchell as manager, with offices at 304 Film Exchange building, Minneapolis, handling the territories of North and South Dakota, Minnesota, and the northern part of Wisconsin. "The Stranger" is the first picture released by this concern.

Exhibitors Prepare for Wharton Serial

WHEN "The Eagle's Eye," the serial story of the Imperial German Government's spies and plots in America, by William J. Flynn, recently retired Chief of the United States Secret Service, produced by Whartons, Inc., opens at the Bijou theatre, in LaCrosse, Wis., April 10, it will be with the endorsement of local and national government officials. Manager Harry H. Burford of the Bijou sacrificed a matinee to give a private showing of the first three episodes of Chief Flynn's serial to representative LaCrosse citizens.

Among those who gave public endorsement of the picture to Mr. Burford are Captain W. A. Thompson, chief engineer of government construction on the upper Mississippi River; James E. Kinsloe, secretary of the LaCrosse Chamber of Commerce; B. E. McCormack, principal of the LaCrosse High School, and J. B. Weber, the chief of the LaCrosse police.

Mr. Burford has received unexpected cooperation in the advertising and publicity campaign he had mapped out preliminary to the opening of "The Eagle's Eye." After witnessing a private showing of the first three episodes of the serial, Chief of Police J. B Weber said:

"'The Eagle's Eye' is the evidence that will convince the lukewarm patriots, if anything will, that everybody in the country should do their bit in wiping out Imperial Germany. I think that urgent invitations to the showing of the different episodes should be given to certain persons in LaCrosse."

Manager Abe Frankel of the Iowa Amusement Company, Des Moines, Iowa, owner of a chain of theatres in Des Moines and surrounding territory, and Manager William O'Hare of the Majestic, of the circuit where "The Eagle's Eye" will have its premiere on March 31, are making preparations to make a special feature of the serial. A military parade, made up of troops from the cantonment at Camp Dodge, just outside Des Moines, will precede the first public showing of the first episode. The soldiers will afterward be the guests of the house in a special reserved section.

"I look for 'The Eagle's Eye' to be the biggest serial money maker which has ever been booked at the Majestic," said Mr. Frankel.

Walter Goetzinger, blind organist at the Bijou theatre in LaCrosse, Wis., is preparing a special musical score for the opening of "The Eagle's Eye" at the Bijou. Much attention has been attracted to him because of a peculiar "picture sense" which he has developed to a remarkable degree of keenness.

He was at the exhibitor's showing of the first three episodes of the serial and evinced a great interest in the picture. He had a friend tell him the detailed story of the episodes and then received from the Foursquare Exchange a schedule of footage on the various scenes. He is timing his music to agree with the footage and practically the entire score will be his original composition.

"Unusual Activity in Michigan"

R. K. Shallenberger, brother of W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, who recently entered the independent field of motion picture buyers and distributors in Michigan, reports an unusual amount of activity among the exhibitors throughout his territory and says that picture conditions were never better than they are at the present time. Mr. Shallenberger expects to close a deal for a number of big independent productions within the next few days. His last "buy" was the Edward Warren production "Souls Redeemed," which he reports is being booked heavily throughout Michigan.

Hamlin Featured in "For Dear Old Glory"

William Night, who directed James W. Gerard's screen version of "My Four Years in Germany," gives a word of praise to Hugo Hamlin for his work in this picture. The Gwendolyn Films, New York, will present Mr. Hamlin in the featured role in "For Dear Old Glory," its first release. The production will be offered on the independent market. Mr. Hamlin is new to the picture public but his work in this picture is said to be of a quality that will place him in rank with the stars.

Piedmont to Commence Second Production

Piedmont Pictures Corporation announces that following the completion of releasing arrangements for "His Daughter Pays," in which Gertrude McCoy is featured, will commence the second special feature, the theme of which will expose the treatment which the Italians have received at the hands of their enemies and will treat, in general, of the world war.

George A. Rush to Manage Brenon Studios

George A. Rush, who has been production manager for the Herbert Brenon Productions, has taken over complete managership of the studios and adjoining property formerly occupied by the Brenon company. At present the Edward Warren Productions are being made there and Sydney A. Goldin will shortly begin producing a series of features. The Ideal Studios overlook the Hudson at Hudson Heights, N. J., and are completely equipped with every modern convenience for picture producing.

Mr. Rush has been closely affiliated with the film industry for the past few years. He has been identified with many big features, including "The Fall of the Romanoffs"; "Empty Pockets"; "War Brides"; "The Lone Wolf" and "The Auction Block."

First National Gives "Tarzan" Send-off

Two complete editions of lithographic paper, comprising one, three, six and twenty-four sheets, have been sent out in connection with the advertising and publicity campaign instituted by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, in the exploitation of "Tarzan of the Apes," it is announced. Both the J. H. Tooker Lithographic Company and the Greenwich Lithographic Company have furnished sets of posters for the promoters and distributors of "Tarzan." The combination of jungle scenery, wild animals in their native state and picturesquely garbed human beings has made it possible to get many striking color effects which appear to excellent advantage on the stands.

"Some Shooting" for West Comedies

One hundred and seventy thousand feet of film were shot to make negatives of Billy West Comedies, two thousand feet in length, aggregating twenty comedies. Over fourteen hundred actors and extras were used in the twenty comedies. Two hundred assorted pies, eighty-five buckets of soap-suds and twelve barrels of flour were used; six automobiles were smashed; twenty-nine evening gowns were ruined, and only one accident to Mr. West is recorded. The King-Bee Brand of Comedies will be one year old May 1st.

"Shame" Booking Strong in Middle West

The "Gifts" theatre, Cincinnati, has booked the John W. Noble production, "Shame," with Zena Keefe and Niles Welch featured, for a week's run, Branch Manager H. L. Orcar reports to General Film headquarters.

Chicago is booking the attraction freely, it is reported. The Casino theatre and the Star theatre, downtown houses, have engaged it for week runs, while several of the Lubliner and Trinz houses are running it.

Foursquare and U. S. Exhibitors

Foursquare Contracts to Distribute All U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation Product—Sell and Distribute

By the terms of the contract entered into between Foursquare Pictures and the U. S. Booking Corporation, the first-named distributing organization will sell all features controlled by the latter and will handle all other details pertaining to their distribution. This announcement is made by Pierre V. R. Key, of Foursquare Pictures. Mr. Key in making the announcement for George Backer, president of Foursquares, said:

"Most of the U. S. Exhibitors salesmen in the various territories have now become Foursquare representatives, and part of the selling organization of this company. The move was made in the interests of a more intensive development of the growing U. S. Exhibitors business and to prepare for the greatest possible efficiency in the distribution of its product.

"The plans now completed by Frank G. Hall, of the U. S. Exhibitors, provide for the acquiring of features of exceptional pretentiousness and quality. And these plans necessitate a broadening of the selling operations which the arrangement with Foursquare provides. Mr. Backer is constructing a motion picture distributing organization similar in solidity and worth to the buildings he erects. He has been of the opinion, for some time, that both the Foursquare and U. S. Exhibitors would benefit by a closer cementing of their business relationship and Mr. Hall shares that opinion.

"There is no keener judge of motion picture values than Mr. Hall," continued Mr. Key, "and few men in the trade possess a more accurate estimate of conditions and how they may be met to the greatest advantage of both exhibitor and distributor.

"Mr. Backer and Jacob Wildberg, treasurer of Foursquare, are evolving policies which are fundamentally constructive, and which will be carried out under their active supervision by general manager M. H. Hoffman, the Foursquare exchange managers and the members of the combined selling staff.

"Lynn S. Card, general sales manager for the U. S. Exhibitors Corp., will continue in that capacity to perform certain important duties of the utmost benefit to the enlarged plan of distribution of Mr. Hall's product, with special representatives still in the field. The Southern States Film Company of Atlanta, Globe Feature Film Co., of Boston, Superfeatures, Ltd., of Toronto and Frank Gersten, Inc., of New Jersey, will continue to handle U. S. productions under their existing contracts."

Mr. Hall said:

"The broadening of my plans led quite naturally to the arrangement just concluded between U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corp. and Foursquare Pictures. I am interested only in pictures of distinctive type, the sort of pictures that command consideration of progressive exhibitors because they possess the unique qualities which attracts motion picture patrons. 'The Zeppelin's Last Raid,' 'The Belgian' and 'Those Who Pay' have set a standard which I shall strive to maintain to the utmost in future features I acquire.

"A contract has just been signed by me for an option on six new pictures, the first of which is now entering upon its initial stage of production. I am also expecting to announce the purchase of another special feature before the end of the mouth as 'Just a Woman' is being launched in New York with 143 days of big circuit booking."

"Who Said Failures?"

By Joseph Simmonds—W. H. Productions

JOSEPH SIMMONDS, president, W. H. Productions, champions the cause of the re-issues in the following statement:

"The general consensus of opinion is that the film business is unstable, in that it is different from any other industry. We have proven that this business can be made as stable and as solid as any other of the big industries. The same basic principles as applied by Ford, Woolworth, Sears Roebuck, etc., can be successfully applied to the film industry. Let us take as our premises the following known facts: First, the public want entertainment. Second, they want it at the right price. They also want consideration, which, of course, brings additional patronage. Ford's policy was the result of his recognition of these premises. He proceeded to produce a product consistent with these premises, namely, to produce and sell to the public something at a reasonable price. He therefore secured a volume of business and perfected a more solid organization. He was not obliged to advertise extensively because he secured free advertising, and now he is unable to satisfy the demand for his product.

"W. H. Productions Company from its inception has given to the public, through the medium of the independent exchanges and exhibitors, the best films that have ever been produced at a price within the range of all. In many cases we have found that were it not for these productions, a number of the independent exchanges and exhibitors would have been obliged to go out of business because of the fact that they could not make a profitable investment on the majority of new productions released today, on account of the inflated prices.

"It is a well known fact that the motion picture going public has increased almost one-thousand per cent within the past two years, so that the productions we are now releasing were never seen by the new film fans.

"There is a reason for it. It is due to the treatment given to these classics of the screen drama on which W. H. Productions Company have spared neither time nor expense in perfecting them and modernizing them in every respect.

"W. H. Productions Company features are new in every respect except the stories, which in most cases have been improved by their reconstruction. The prints are new and the tintings are the most modern obtainable from the laboratory where they have spent hundreds of dollars in experimenting to obtain the best. The modern phraseology of titling has been obtained by the joint labors of several well known authors and title editors, in fact, everything possible has been done to make them new from every viewpoint.

"There are from two to four prominent screen stars in each one of our features and because they were making a reputation during the time these features were being produced they put the best work of their career into them, and consequently even five or ten years from now these productions will be stamped as masterpieces and will be just as popular as they are today. We have acquired the rights to ninety per cent of the most successful productions that have ever been released to date, and intend to reissue them from time to time through the reliable independent exchanges throughout the country.

"We are applying the Ford and Woolworth methods to our basic principles. We intend to do a large business at a small margin of profit, so that the public can be made a part of our organization. We are creating in the minds of the independent exchange man and the exhibitors a desire to come to W. H. Productions Company for the best, because they are assured of good treatment, good pictures and fair prices. We will not advertise one thing and try to sell another. Every one of our productions is chosen with care, and above all, the prices are right. Exhibitors are warranted in giving W. H. Productions Company features longer runs the same as the legitimate theatrical producers apply to their shows, and this naturally assures larger profits.

"We do not have to—nor do we intend to—resort to misrepresentation to sell our product. Live, independent exchange men and exhibitors know a good proposition when they see it, and they do not have to wear binocular glasses to see that the W. H. Productions Company proposition is on the level and for their own good and welfare.

"We could make a greater percentage of profit on our productions, but in mapping out our campaign we kept the future in mind. We save money in every possible way, giving the advantage of these savings directly to the independent exchange men, so that they in turn are in position to give a like advantage to the exhibitor. We do not transact any business through brokers or middlemen. We have been able to purchase our various productions at a fair price, and have been successful in choosing box office winners, so that it can readily be seen that we can well afford to dispose of our product at a fair profit and still give the benefit to the independent exchange men and exhibitors.

"We predicted in November that our product would create a condition in the film market necessitating a readjustment of conditions to the benefit of the independent exchange men and exhibitors, and it seems as if the results are beginning to show. We are now about to release a series of five Bessie Barriscale Super-Features, and also a series of eighteen two-reel Shorty Hamilton pictures. We are reconstructing each one of these in their entirety, so that when they go to the public they will be as modern, as interesting, and as new as it is possible to make them. In fact, in giving these productions their new main title, in all of our advertising matter there will be a caption stating that it has been adapted from the original production, because a number of exhibitors have advised us that such patrons who had originally seen these features, upon recognizing the title, would want to see them again. These productions are now being sold to the independent exchanges throughout the country at prices that assure profitable bookings for them and good pictures at the right price for the exhibitor."

"Twede-Dan," Tweedledum, of Europe

THE identity of Twede-Dan, featured comedian in Jester Comedies, is made known. William Steiner announces that he was unable to keep the secret longer. "Twede-Dan is none other than Tweedledum, of European fame," said Mr. Steiner in making the announcement.

"Twede-Dan, as he is known to the American movie goers, has now been in this country for nearly two years," continued Mr. Steiner, "and has spent the greater part of that time studying the American methods and ways of making pictures. That he has succeeded in doing this is well proven in the first three Jester releases, 'The Recruit,' 'The Golden Romance' and 'All "fur" Her.' Today we see Tweedledum, alias Twede-Dan, doing things the real American way. It was hard on him at first, but he soon rid himself of the foreign style of acting, and now he is presented as himself, made over with all modern improvements, a real American type actor with a distinctive line of comedy that can be called inimitable.

"During Twede-Dan's engagement under the Eclipse banner, in Europe, he created a sensation in the film world as the most phenomenal seller ever presented."

"Since I have been in America," said Twede-Dan, "I have learned much about what is needed to amuse the American people. At first American humor was too deep for me, but now that I have caught on to their ways I am going to go the limit to please the American theatregoers who have welcomed me, and I am going to try again for the high mark."

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

Mabel Normand, In "Mickey," Rights Controlled By Western Import Co.

Orringer Buys Territory for "Zongar"

Jacob Orringer, 804 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, last week secured state rights on "Zongar," the five-part feature produced by Physical Culture Photo Plays, Inc., for the territory of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Mr. Orringer is in the habit of buying at least one special feature a month, and "Zongar" because of its daring and sensational action appealed to him strongly.

Mr. Orringer, while comparatively a newcomer in the film exchange business, has been successful in exploiting small productions in the same territory for the past year. He entered the motion picture business as an exhibitor at the time when a two-reeler was considered a feature.

Sterling to Distribute "Natural Law"

Charles H. France, France Films, announces that he has closed a deal with the Sterling Pictures Corporation, whereby the latter organization will distribute his production, "The Natural Law," featuring Marguerite Courtot and George Larkin. The screen version is adapted from the stage play of the same name, by Howard Hall. Arthur F. Beck, president of Sterling and Mr. France closed the deal last week. H. R. Ebenstein, sales manager, Sterling, is now on a ten weeks' trip throughout the country exploiting this and other productions handled by Sterling.

Jester Comedies for Scandinavian Countries

Chester Beecroft, representing foreign interests, has placed the series of Jester Comedies, featuring Twede-Dan, in the Scandinavian Countries, Sweden, Norway and Denmark. The first three releases "The Recruit," "His Golden Romance" and "All Fur Her," are now on their way to these countries.

Edna Emerson Appears in the First Francis Ford Production, "Berlin via America"

Specialty Closes Deal With Arrow

The Specialty Film Company, of Dallas, Texas, has closed with the Arrow Film Corporation for the Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana and Oklahoma rights to W. H. Clune production "The Eyes of the World." The Specialty Film Company recently entered the independent field and plans to inaugurate a number of new ideas in the way of film distribution. W. G. Underwood and L. C. Baxley head the organization. "The Eyes of the World" will be shown throughout the four states as a road show attraction, special musical and lighting effects being used at each performance.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, says that reports received from different parts of the country regarding the big Clune picture are unusually favorable. "We expected this picture to do well," said Mr. Shallenberger, "but we hadn't anticipated the record business it has been doing. The picture has struck a wide popular appeal and in many states, where it is being shown as a road show attraction, it has been going over the same route time and time again and always successfully.

"The reports from Canada indicate that 'The Eyes of the World' is doing equally well there. Canadian audiences, judging from our daily reports, like the big feature as much as the American. 'The Eyes of the World' has been a success. Audiences like it because the story is so human."

"The Whip" Going Big in Southwest

Paul E. Thompson, True Film Company, Dallas, Tex., who has the territorial rights to "The Whip" for the states of Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi, reports that the big melodrama is "meeting with wonderful success in this territory."

"The Liberty theatre, Houston, Texas, opened with 'The Whip' for one week to capacity business at advanced prices. Return dates will be necessary to take care of the crowds that were turned away. We are now arranging dates for Dallas, New Orleans and other large cities in our territory," said Mr. Thompson.

Goldberg to Handle Outing-Chester Pictures

COMMENCING April 22nd Jesse J. Goldburg, sales and exploitation representative will release on open market one reel Travel-Scenics made by C. L. Chester, in co-operation with "Outing" magazine, outdoor and sporting magazine. These pictures will be known as the Outing-Chester pictures and are issued in the form of a motion picture supplement to the "Outing" magazine, and will cover all phases of travel and active, interesting outdoor life of all peoples.

The pictures are made under the personal supervision of C. L. Chester who has been engaged for ten years past in making travel pictures, and the assembling and titling of the productions, and the editorial work in connection with them is under the direction of the editorial staff of the "Outing" magazine.

Arrangements have been made with that publication to give this series of fifty-two releases exclusive publicity in each issue of "Outing," also to publish the names of the first run theatres, and the exchanges handling these productions.

The range covered by these productions the first twenty of which are completed, is as wide as the great outdoors itself.

Special emphasis has been laid on accuracy; and the films present things as they are without gloss or exaggeration.

The subjects are as varied as can be possibly made. The first four releases are "A Jungle Joy Ride," "Kaieteur the Perfect Cataract" made in British Guiana, "Mountaineering Memory" made in British Columbia, "A Coorial on the Orinoco" made in Venezuela, and the tinting and toning is with specially prepared formulae, so that each shade of tint or tone will be in keeping with the scene photographed.

The method of releasing has not been determined, but a contract has been made with Jesse J. Goldburg, states rights and sales exploitation representative, to handle these productions in a manner which will assure the widest form of distribution.

Francis Ford Will Move to Coast

HAVING finished his first independent production, Francis Ford, who organized recently, the Francis Ford Production, will take his company to Los Angeles, where all his future productions will be made. Mr. Ford announces that he will arrive in Los Angeles about April 15th, and will make plans for the erection of a modern studio. The first production by Mr. Ford, made in the East, is titled "Berlin via America." The New York office will take charge of Mr. Ford's interest in the East and will handle the distribution of his product. He will devote all his time to the production of special features for the market. Mr. Ford said:

"It has always been my ambition to make pictures independently because the innumerable expressions of opinion I have received from fans—and they are the ultimate judges—make me feel that I know what they want. Now that my opportunity has come and I can produce with a free hand, I shall strive to make what they want. And not the least important, it is that type of picture from which the exhibitor is deriving the greatest benefit.

"To do this, the first and foremost duty of the producer is to get a story that is a story. That is one of the fundamental principles upon which I will base my work."

On his way to the coast it is his intention to take scenes at the principal points of interest which will be incorporated in the second Ford Art Production. With the company will be Edna Emerson, leading woman; Elsie Van Name, scenario writer; a camera man, and a company of extras and the working staff.

Mundusfilm Get Big Order—Garrett, Agent

WHAT is considered one of the largest shipments of positive film ever exported to foreign lands, is one that was consigned to France last week to the Mundusfilm Company of Paris. The Mundusfilm Company is a newly formed organization. Sidney Garrett has been elected exclusive purchasing agent for the new company.

Mr. Garrett purchased the exclusive rights to France and other parts of Europe, for Charlie Chaplin's latest, "A Dog's Life," "The Whip," "The Bar Sinister," "The Cold Deck," "The Submarine Eye," "The Barrier," King-Bee Billy West Comedies and late Metro's and Paralta's. Mr. Garrett is president of the J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., which is one of the largest distributors of film in foreign countries. Recently, he was elected president of the newly formed Bengar Pictures, Inc., organized to export all Selig productions. He announces that he has closed for the Scandinavian territory for the features mentioned above, and in conjunction with other product, expects to ship more than a million feet of film before the first of May.

Third Week for Gerard's Picture

"My Four Years in Germany" enters upon its third week at the Knickerbocker theatre with increasing success. The story of German infamies has been seen enacted on the screen to crowded houses. The actual happenings before and during the war, that disgrace the Prussian Empire, that has impelled the United States to enter the conflict in defense of civilization and democracy are revealed.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

With Pathe Players

A. C. Rousseau, secretary of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., is in Los Angeles to spend several days, making a general survey of producing facilities in this field, and in going over the production work of the several units making subjects for the Pathe exchanges.

The Bryant Washburn Company is making the final scenes for "The Range Rider," an adaptation by Jack Cunningham from the Arthur Henry Gooden novel. William Worthington continues as director of this subject, and has Rhea Mitchell as the leading woman, and a cast that includes George Fields, Joseph Dowling and others. With the completion of this, the Washburn company will immediately begin filming "All Wrong," which is a farce comedy.

The Frank Keenan company is now at work on a situation comedy titled "More Trouble," which is also an adaptation by Jack Cunningham from a magazine story. Keenan has a cast of very well known players supporting him, the list including Roberta Wilson, Jack Gilbert, Ida Lewis, Helen Dunbar, Aggie Herring, Al Ray, Jack Rawlins and others. This picture will be finished within the next few days, and then Keenan will begin the filming of an adaptation from a famous play.

A new play has been prepared as the starring vehicle of Bessie Love, which is an adaptation from the Rose Endicot novel, "Caroline of Corner's." Robert Thornby, directing the present Love story will be the director of this new play which has not been cast.

At Universal City the Astra Company producing units headed by Fannie Ward is at work on "The Japanese Nightingale," under the direction of George Fitzmaurice

Fox Studio Doings

The City of Jerusalem has been built in Hollywood at the William Fox studio for the Theda Bara production of "Salome," now being filmed by J. Gordon Edwards. It is a composite of the old streets of London and Paris, used in the film "The Tale of Two Cities." The camouflage has been so well done that one cannot distinguish anything of an English or French nature in this subject.

Time has been lost on this production for two reasons. Director Edwards, while searching for a location on the desert, was caught in a downpour on a mountain road while returning to Los Angeles, and when the machine stuck in the mire, he was forced to abandon the car and take to a Ford. On another day, Theda Bara was called as expert witness to a murder trial of a man who was accused of killing a woman known as "the Vampire of Sanora Town." Just what the defence sought to prove by the expert testimony by Miss Bara is not known definitely but he stated in open court that he considered her the foremost portrayer of vampire roles, and therefore able to say something to the jury with regard to the psychology of a vampire.

Harvey Thew has written both story and scenario for the coming production which will star Jewel Carmen, and work on this has been commenced by Director Lynn Reynolds. The cast has not been named, but it is understood everything will be ready for filming within a few days. The story is laid in New York and Miss Carmen will take the role of a Broadway girl who is a frequenter of cafes.

Director Lynn Reynolds is beginning the production of another Tom Mix western story which promises to be more thrilling and melodramatic than anything this actor has appeared in in recent months at least.

Edward J. LeSaint is shortly to begin the filming of another Gladys Brockwell story written especially for her by Charles Kenyon.

Live Triangle Items

The second special subject of the Triangle, to follow in release, "The Servant in the House," is nearing completion at the studio, and has been given for a title the Japanese motto, "See no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil." This production was originally known as "Smoke," and General Manager H. O. Davis has worked out for this a very interesting title design which is done in triple exposure. Three monkeys, emblematic of the Japanese motto, will be seen on the main title. One holds its eyes closed, another with hands over its ears, and the third with its hands over its mouth. To secure this triple exposure required many painstaking attempts on the part of the cameraman.

The Triangle studio is working at capacity, with all directors save three having subjects under production. The Roy-Stewart-Director Cliff Smith unit began the filming of "The Man Worth While." This film, is laid on the U. S. Mexican border, and deals with the troubles of American cattlemen, who are frequently annoyed by Mexican outlaws. Josie Sedgwick will continue as leading woman for Stewart, and Jack Curtis will be the heavy. The entire troop of buckeroos will be seen in this picture. This company has just finished filming "Paying His Debts," and one of the last scenes made was that showing Bill Patton running from a ranch house carrying a Winchester rifle in each hand, and leaping onto the waiting broncho without touching the saddle or stirrups.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

The Famous Players-Lasky studio is a hive of activity, as both the Pickford and Fairbanks Companies are working overtime to finish productions that these stars may leave to aid in the Liberty Loan drive.

William D. Taylor will finish "How Could You, Jean?" which is the next starring vehicle for Miss Pickford by the middle of the coming week.

Cecil B. De Mille, will complete the filming of the important scenes for "Old Wives For New," within the next ten days, and J. Stuart Blackton and James Young have the Mrs. Humphrey Ward wartime story fairly well underway.

At the Morosco studio of this company, Director Walter Edwards has just completed the filming of a story adapted from the Charles Nixon novel "Good Night Paul," which was adapted for the screen by Julia Crawford Ivers, and will offer Constance Talmadge as star. He is now beginning work on "Viviette" which stars Vivian Martin, and was written by William J. Locke. "Good Night Paul" will be Mr. Edwards' first production for Select Pictures. He will be remembered as producer of many photoplays for Mutual and Triangle, both during and since the administration of Thomas H. Ince. He has devoted almost a life time to the production of plays for the stage and screen, and has established a reputation in screendom for good technique and general excellence in productions directed by him.

Universal Newsettes

Considerable progress has been made by the Universal City producing companies during the week, and but one new production has been commenced. This is an adaptation of a magazine story, "Discipline in Genevra," which was adapted for the screen by Director Allen J. Holubar who will be in charge of his production. Dorothy Phillips is to be the star of this modern society play.

Elliott J. Clawson, author, and Rupert Julian, director of "The Kaiser, Beast of Berlin," arrived home from New York Wednesday where they attended the trade showing of their most recent production, and have prepared a new story which will be put in production early during the coming week.

The serial companies likewise have had a good week. Director Ben Wilson and the "Pleasure Island" producing unit, have been at Catalina Island and Balboa Beach where a number of melodramatic stunts were filmed among the coves and reefs of the rugged shores. Incidentally the trip to Catalina was a honeymoon journey for Joe McDonough, assistant to Wilson, who early in the week was wed to Thelma Francis, ingenue, formerly with the Universal. The entire cast for the serial includes Juanita Hansen as featured player, Jack Mulhall, leading man; Ashton Dearholt, Joseph Girard and Hal Cooley in important parts.

Director James Horne and the "Bull's Eye" Company are working on episode number seventeen, and "The Lion's Claw" organization is now filming the eighth release under the direction of Harry Harvey.

Paralta Paragraphs

Several changes and additions have been made to the executive staff of the Paralta studios. Harry Chandlee arrived last week from New York to take charge of the scenario department which is now composed of Monte M. Katterjohn, Thomas Geraghty, J. Grubb Alexander, Fred Myton, Richard Schayer, Robert Kidd and Jane Holly. Gerald C. Duffy, former editor of the Picture Play Magazine, a Street & Smith publication, is expected at the Coast in a few days to take charge of the publicity department, which is now being conducted by J. Chapman, who succeeded Paul Dowling, who recently answered the call to the colors.

Perhaps the most important change is that with respect to the studio management, several new positions having been made. Nat Brown is to remain at the studio as general manager. Another office has been created which will be known as business manager, but the general supervision of production will continue in charge of Robert Brunton, whose official title is production manager.

For the past week many rumors have been heard to the effect that all Pathe Companies working at Paralta studio would be transferred to Universal City in the near future, but officers at the Paralta studios deny they have received any definite information with reference to this change. The Pathe stars now working at the Paralta plant are Bryant Washburn, Frank Keenan and Bessie Love. The unverified rumor has it that Pathe is either to discontinue the making of feature productions or that space has been leased at Universal City, and all activities will be centered there together with those of the Astra Company.

Two new Paralta subjects were put in production last week and within the next few days two others will be started. Director Raymond B. West with Clyde DeVinna, as cameraman, are now at work on a new Bessie Barriscale picture in which Charles Gunn will make his first appearance as a Paralta leading man.

Vitagraph News Bits

The Vitagraph Hollywood studio is to a more or less extent abandoned this week, inasmuch as the William Duncan Company of thirty-two people is at Bear Lake Valley; the Nell Shipman unit at Truckee, and "The Woman and the Web" serial company has gone to Santa Cruz for a stay of two weeks.

Considerable anxiety is felt by some at the studio for the William Duncan Company which ten days ago left for Bear Lake Valley, and then proceeded into the mountains against the advice of forest rangers. In ascending the Bear Lake Valley, which is 7,000 feet above the sea, the company was forced to abandon two cars, but took provisions on with them. Shortly after they arrived, Director Duncan telephoned the studio of their safety, but shortly afterwards the telephone connections were destroyed and nothing has been heard from the people for more than a week. When they arrived at the specially constructed log cabins, they had sufficient food for one week. Since that time no one has been able to penetrate the mountain retreat. Those familiar with the situation know the company is in no grave danger as there are sufficient mountain rangers to look after the safety and comfort of the Vitagraph unit.

The Curwood story being filmed by the Nell Shipman Company directed by David Smith, requires that a Malamute in its various stages of growth, shall appear in scenes, and so the company that left for Truckee to film snow stuff, for "Baree, Son of Kazan," took with them five dogs ranging from puppyhood to old age.

"The Woman and the Web" Company, directed by Paul C. Hurst and headed by Hedda Nova, consisted of about forty people, thirty of these being Japanese. After a stay of ten days at Santa Cruz Islands, this unit will return to the studio for a few days for interior making, and then the principals will leave for Honolulu where volcanic scenes will be taken.

Here and There

Two of the three American producing units abandoned the studio at Santa Barbara last week for Los Angeles, leaving only the Mary Miles Minter company working at the producing plant. William Russell and his entire cast filmed scenes in Los Angeles to finish the first play of the new William Russell series; and Margarita Fisher spent several days in the film metropolis preparing for her next subject, she having completed the film titled "A Square Deal." This story was produced under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, and Jack Mower continues as leading man with Val Paul, Constance Johnson, Nanine Wright, and L. M. Wells in the other leading parts of the cast.

The next story to be made by Miss Fisher will be titled "Impossible Susan." Will M. Ritchie, editor of the American scenario department, has also purchased "Beauty To Let."

APRIL 13, 1918 NEWS MORE NEWS

Yes, a little more rain.

W. W. Hodkinson's in our town.

A. C. Rousseau is in town.

Bill Hart's gone to the country.

Goldwyn's coming West to grow up with the country.

Helen Holmes is vacationing at her ranch at Lund, Idaho.

And now Charley Gunn is again leading man for Bessie Barriscale.

William Beaudine is the first to spring a new straw lid.

D. W. Griffith has invaded New York with "Hearts of the World."

George D. Baker is the latest Metroite to decide that he loves California. George is out here director generaling.

Marion Torre, formerly Mariana de la Torre, legally changed her name the other day, but she is not going to use the name of her husband.

Jerry Storm is so busy directing Enid Bennett, Ince Paramount features, that he doesn't comb his hair any more, and he has lots of it too.

Colin Campbell has been missed from his usual haunts about the Selig studio, but now that he is back, some production is to be expected.

Walley Worsley is next to direct a Kerrigan picture, but no explanation is given as to what this has to do with the new style of boots he wears.

Elmer Clifton has undertaken the task of filming "Silent Smith" or the man without words which may or may not be an innovation for the silent drama.

Jack Cunningham, one of the best known continuity writers that we have heard of, has been working all three shifts turning out new continuity every week.

Harry Holden, conceiver of realistic make-ups, was seen at Universal City recently without camouflage. He apologized with a statement that it was between pictures.

It is currently reported that William D. Taylor will be elected to succeed himself as president of the M. P. D. A., meaning—Motion Picture Directors' Association.

Marie Walcamp threatens to organize a woman's regiment, and Marie being known as the dare devil girl of the films, it is very probable something will happen if she does.

G. Harold Percival, who creates all the sets for Tom Ince productions, has been having the barber improve his exterior, and now Percival is without that well cultivated beard.

Bill Russell couldn't leave his pigs and chickens and goats and dogs at Santa Barbara, and our town won't foster such a flock, so Bill is back there makin' films again.

It is not Wanda Petit any more but—Wanda Hawley. And that reminds us that Margarita Fischer has removed the German camouflage, and she spells it now just plain f-i-s-h-e-r.

Vivian Martin went down to Camp Kearny to adopt a regiment, but the regiment beat her to it and adopted her, all of which may be used in a reverse English scenario—no rights retained.

Bill Duncan is reported lost with his ninety horsepowger car in the snow fields of Big Bear Valley, but Bill is the kind of a fellow that will get back. He will bring the scenes he went after, even if it is cold up there.

Jack Livingston accosted HOOKUM editor the other day, and was one of the first screen artists to make a confession of doing a bit of acting that was not just as good as he would liked to have done it—he didn't like the part. So, say we, an honest actor has been found.

Ruth Clifford is not superstitious. She accepted dressing room number thirteen without a murmur, and then made the claim that everything lucky has happened to her on the thirteenth, or Friday, the thirteenth—that is, with her affiliation with the film industry.

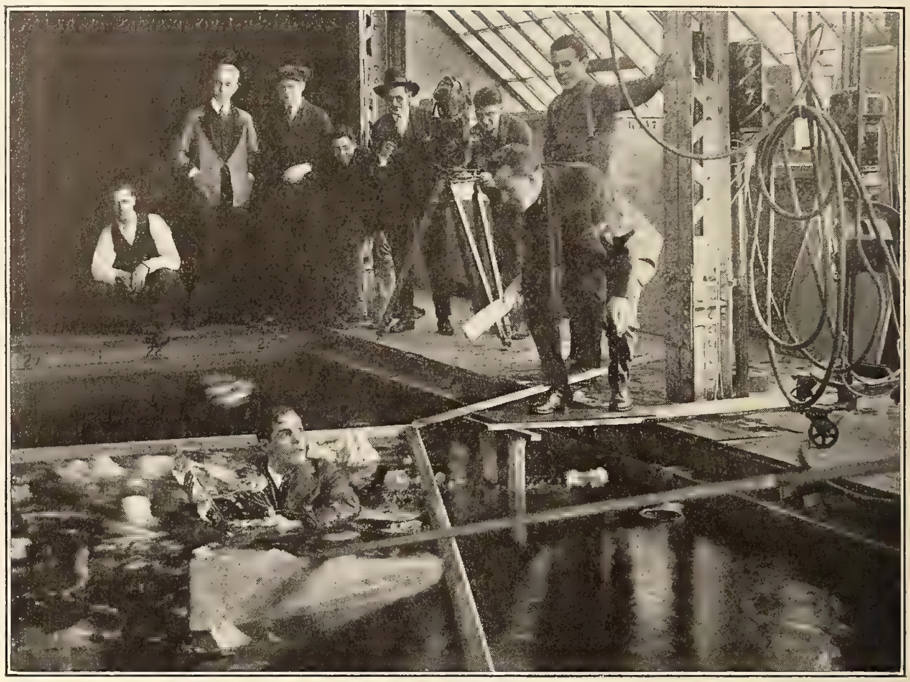
Hampton Del Ruth, upon being interviewed recently, stated emphatically that the industry had outgrown its baby clothes. In other words, Mr. Del Ruth is a believer in filming reaching its majority mile stone, or even being a little past there. "The surface," Mr. Del Ruth said, "has been scratched."

Our fellow townsmen and townswomen are very actively engaged in Red Crossing. Franklyn Farnum won a bet the other day by spending an afternoon cutting surgical bandages in a department given over to this work in one of our town's biggest stores. Franklyn was the lone man among all the women, but it didn't seem to bother him a bit. He smiled through the entire afternoon.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

[Realizing that the voluminous press agent material filling an exhibitor's mail often fails to provide the breezy little items so badly needed for program fillers and your newspaper photoplay editors, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has created this department. It will be conducted by Miss Dorothy Tarbell, and the gossipy personalities presented here will be gathered at first hand in the studios and from the players themselves. Not only the stars but the lesser known players whose good work has often gained them popularity in different localities, will be treated in human, intimate fashion in this department.

In connection with this "clip-sheet" service for programs and newspapers, this department also offers all the facilities of the Motion Picture Studio Directory to exhibitors and players in forwarding mail, locating players, furnishing information regarding pictures in which different players have appeared, and so on.]



No Hudson Ice Jam for Tony Moreno. He Prefers to Live to Finish "The House of Hate."

Henry Houry, recently discharged from the French Army on account of wounds, and formerly a director of the Eclipse Company in Paris, is soon to direct a feature for Vitagraph. He is obtaining experience here preparatory to returning and assuming charge of the Vitagraph Co. in Paris. However, we shall hope first to add him to the little group of talented French directors which includes Tourneur, Chautard and Perret.

Alice Terry, who played opposite Harry Morey in "A Bachelor's Children," has two brothers in U. S. Service, one in France and one on the sea. After a two weeks' vacation at her home in Washington she is about to begin a new picture.

Corine Uzzell's name on a program means beautiful gowns. So far Miss Uzzell has appeared mainly in society parts as in "The Grain of Dust" and "The Song of Songs," and has stood out so prominently as to be called one of the best gowned women on the screen, despite her short career of a year and a half.

Peggy Betts, one of the three stars in "Empty Pockets," is now visiting her father in Des Moines. She is to appear in person at several theatres when the picture reaches Iowa. If there is anything that draws it is a personal appearance, so watch out for movie stars visiting in your vicinity.

Ideas of leading the simple life differ. Last week after finishing "The Camouflage Kiss" and before beginning "Blue-Eyed Mary," June Caprice pursued her idea and fled to a farm in Massachusetts. There she spent a glorious week doing the three things she likes best, reading, playing the Victrola and eating chocolates.

Edna Patterson, who is one of the guests at the Chandler house party in "A Camouflage Kiss," was born and brought up in the same town with Miss Caprice. She is now living with Miss Caprice as the friend and companion.

A title in "The Camouflage Kiss" tells us that Bernard Thornton as Rudolph King is only about "six years old above the ears." In this unsympathetic and difficult part Mr. Thornton shows decided ability. It is quite a relief to find a leading man who is willing and able to play a part of this kind when in real life he is so absolutely different.

The pork magnate in "The Camouflage Kiss" is George Bunny, a brother of the famous comedian now dead.

Violet Palmer's delicate beauty is particularly effective in "Rough and Ready." From the first scene in which she seems a veritable Christmas angel to the last scenes in a rough mining camp of the Northwest she stands out as eminently fitted for the part.

In a recent episode from "The House of Hate" Antonio Moreno manages to untie Pearl White's bonds with his teeth. Bertram Millhauser, the adaptor of the serial, thought of this situation like a flash when he noticed what strong white teeth Mr. Moreno had.

Ketty Galanta, in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," plays the part of a young girl, a type quite the opposite of Rasputin's mistress, which she played in "The Fall of the Romanoffs." Miss Galanta is now a featured dancer in "Chu Chin Chow," but expects to continue with her screen work.

Vic Moore, of Klever Komedy fame, is back in vaudeville again playing at the Palace this week. He opened his act with a short film which showed him making up for his part in "The Clown," a movie.

Raymond Hatton in "One More American" ran a star a close second. In "The Whispering Chorus" he repeats. There is an inexplicable something about him which dominates each scene.

Pearl White's aim in life now is to get "over there." She has offered an ambulance and her services, but first hopes to do a war picture for the Government.

Seen in the Rivoli—a progressive movie fan who disdains an usher's help and brings forth his own little electric flashlight. Imagine the firefly effect if each patron did this.

If your audience enjoys "society dramas" in which well-groomed people react to all stimulus in a conventional manner Dorothy Dalton in "Love Me" will appeal.

Vera Thursby "adores" playing slaveys. Her experience began in the "Alabaster Box," was perfected in Big V comedies and culminated in "The Song of the Soul." Perhaps that is why her "slavey" always stands out.

When the announcement of a Sidney Drew comedy flashes on the screen a general relaxation and satisfaction is felt throughout an audience. In "Gas Logic" Bobbie Connelly, as Mr. and Mrs. Drew's small son, solves the problem of a heatless day.

FOR YOUR PROGRAM AND NEWSPAPERS

Courtney Ryley Cooper, the adapter of "The Eagle's Eye," was named in the Boston Transcript's review of the best short story writers of 1917. The story mentioned was "Congo," a tale picked up through Mr. Cooper's experience in the circus business.

Director Paul Scardon is starting on his twenty-fifth feature for Vitagraph. Its title, "The Golden Goal," seems quite appropriate. It stars the same trio who appeared in "The Desired Woman," Florence Deshon, Harry Morey and Jean Paige.

June Caprice is said to get more letters sent her from admiring fans than any other Fox star. She delights in reading them all herself, though she has to turn most of them over to her secretary to answer.

Barney Randell, whose characterizations in "The Auction Block" and "The Song of the Soul," were exceedingly clever, gave every one a surprise this week by sending around announcements of his marriage the first of January. He admits having old-fashioned ideas on the subject of marriage and chose a wife outside of the profession. His next appearance will be with June Caprice in "Blue-Eyed Mary."

Thomas F. Fallon will reappear on the screen in "Blue-Eyed Mary" for the first time since he supported Mary Pickford in "Less Than Dust." He has been producing vaudeville sketches, the most recent of which is "Winter and Spring," with W. H. Crane.

Director Harry Millarde can get true dramatic sense even out of kittens. In a certain scene in Blue-Eyed Mary" the butler enters carrying rather gingerly the big box which Mary has lugged with her to her aunt's home in Washington Square. The string breaks and out tumble four little bonnets and four little kittens. The bonnets land upside side, and each kitten crawls into one and gazes inquiringly at the camera.

It makes one gasp to see Helen Tracy in quick succession play such roles as Mother Superior in "Let's Get a Divorce," the drunken hag in "Sunshine Nan," and the Washington Square grande dame in "Blue-Eyed Mary." As the last mentioned she wears a most interesting piece of very old jewelry. It is a huge double bow knot with a double bow knot pendant made of French paste. It could not be duplicated as the secret process by which the setting gives to the paste the fire of real diamonds has been lost. It is a piece of a set which belonged to a Russian actress who committed suicide years ago in San Francisco and was given to Miss Tracy on her eighteenth birthday.

"Main Street" at Arctic City, Port Henry, N. Y., with Caribou Bill's Dog Team in the Foreground. This Is a Popular Location for "Snow Stuff"

Many people will be disappointed to hear that Corliss Giles, leading man for Clara Kimball Young in "Shirley Kaye," "The Marionettes" and "The House of Glass," has deserted the screen and returned to the legitimate stage, for the time being. His work, particularly in "Shirley Kaye," gave promise of a brilliant future in pictures.

It is reported that Ivan Mozukin, probably the greatest Russian star, was offered $1,000,000 for a year's work in an American studio. He has been seen recently in "The Inner Voice" and various other Pathe releases.

Now That June Caprice Has Learned The Art In "The Camouflage Kiss" We Are Glad She Didn't Practise It By Putting The Fan On This Side Of Her Face

In a Fox projection room the other day Jane and Katherine Lee showed the self possession of any "American Buds" through two long feature pictures. They appeared interested in every detail and could probably have written as complete reviews of the pictures as anyone present.

Jack McLean, whose clever work in "Moral Suicide" won instant recognition, has been cast for the leading male part in the new June Caprice picture, "Blue-Eyed Mary."

Mary Miles Minter on the first day of April, 1918, became a really truly "sweet sixteen" screen star. We offer our congratulations for things achieved and things to be achieved.

Edith Storey Lone Woman in the Cast

In "Treasure of the Sea," which Metro will release April 22, Edith Storey, the star, has the unusual distinction of being the only woman in the cast. The picture, moreover, is said to display Miss Storey's best abilities, both as an actress and as a sportswoman.

Frank Reicher, who directed Miss Storey in "The Claim," had charge of the production, which was scenarioized by Albert Shelby Le Vino and Leighton Osmun from the latter's story. James Hardwick appears as leading man and Lewis Willoughby, an English actor, makes his American screen debut as a member of the cast. Exteriors were photographed at Catalina Island, where Miss Storey combined art and patriotism by selling Smileage Books to tourists.

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

Choosing Your Scenics and Other Shorts

HOW do you choose your short subject? By the watch and yardstick method—so many feet for so many minutes to fill? Or with the thought and care you bestow on your feature?

If we were in an apologetic mood, which we are not, we would say that "even educationals" differ in merit as theatre offerings. So believing entirely in the entertainment value of scenics, screen magazines, nature studies, and the like, when properly handled, we make herewith a few observations by which you may judge of the merit and suitability of this type of reel.

The Scenic.—It must have beauty and action. Have you ever noticed how uniformly pleasing on the screen is moving water? Crashing surf, waterfalls, geysers, and rapids almost invariably win applause. Nature in repose is often wonderful beyond words. For the purposes of an oil painting she is admirable. But in motion pictures nature must move. Sometimes the beauty of the scene or the picturesque quality of architecture plus scenery tempts the camera man. If he is of the old-fashioned, unthinking type he grinds off a few hundred feet and gives us a succession of slides. And we yawn. But if he realizes that his product is to compete with slapstick and "the play with a punch," he will take care that against his beautiful background are humans and animals engaged in characteristic and interesting activities.

Then it's up to the editor and title man. If the material is of unusual excellence, he may venture to let it go to the extent of a thousand feet. But he is on dangerous ground. Better a half-reel titled tersely and to the point, and in itself noticeably attractive and interesting, than a longer allowance that conscientiously tries to render an impression complete.

A scenic is not a lesson in geography. It is, or should be, a brief glimpse into a land beyond our present ken. It should refresh, stimulate, fascinate. It should be over almost before the spectator realizes that it is well under way.

The Nature Study.—No type of short subject is capable of more sympathetic handling. Men naturally love animals, and respond instantly to whatever is appealing or amusing in them. The wise film editor treats his furred and feathered subjects as real human beings, emphasizing in the titles the qualities that are more or less apparent to the spectator. A bit of story woven round one or two of the actors adds greatly to the entertaining quality. The educator who wishes to impart biological information has a valuable instrument in the camera, but his product is for the classroom, not the theatre. Happily, the old idea of prefixing a fifty-word title to each separate picture on a "nature study" film is passing away, and producers are treating this type with an increasing appreciation of the fact that it is not a textbook but a diversion. As we pointed out last week, there are two varieties of animal picture, each excellent in its way, and each filling a legitimate place as a theatre offering.

One of these days we shall have a few words to say on such topics as the News Weeklies, the Magazines, and Cartoons. Perhaps especially the latter.

THE CLAMS DIG IN

The undersea pictures issued from the Ditmars Studio continue to surprise and fascinate with their portrayal of the curious forms of life and activity hidden away on the ocean's shore. This time it is the anemones, those strange creatures that are said to be animals but that look exactly like chrysanthemums, that play the leading part. Two of them, finding a dead fish conveniently adjacent, proceed to envelope him with their clustered tentacles and are enjoying a fraternal banquet when the hermit crab, a natural-born butter-in, interrupts the party. Meantime, the tube worms, who live in chalky cylinders built by themselves, burst out of the tops of their homes like fat sky rockets. The clams, however, who are apparently relished on the whole shell by fish, get the alarm and proceed to "dig in" hastily and very effectively by means of the long muscle that serves as a combined leg and trench tool. When the fish arrive, nary a clam is to be seen.

Pictures such as these, interesting, curiosity-provoking, and laughable, are a most valuable addition to the program of a house aiming to offer its patrons the very best productions for the screen.

Anticipating the Red Cross Drive that begins on May 20th, Town and Country Films, under the management of Jack Eaton, has just completed a two-part picture, "The Spirit of the Red Cross," which will be available for exhibitors on April 28.

Though the work of the Red Cross is of course the theme of the picture, the plea for support is made through the medium of a humanly appealing story of "Sammy" and the Red Cross nurse who loved him and followed him in spirit and then in the flesh to the battlefields of France. The part of "Sammy" is played by Ray McKee, who appeared to such advantage in "The Unbeliever."

Copies of the picture will be held for distribution by all the big film exchanges throughout the country. Exhibitors should arrange without delay to secure it for their theatres before or during the "Red Cross Drive" of May 20 to 27.

OUTING-CHESTER PICTURES OF SOUTH AMERICA AND THE CANADIAN ROCKIES

Unusually dramatic and interesting are the first four of the new scenic series known as the "Outing-Chester Pictures," announcement of which is made elsewhere in this number. The material in some of them is decidedly out of the ordinary, and unusual pains have been bestowed in the wording and printing of the titles.

"Kaietur the Perfect Cataract" and "A Jungle Joy Ride" chronicle trips made in the crude river boats of the natives deep into the heart of British Guiana, South America. Kaietur, plunging to a depth five times greater than that of Niagara, lies deep with the tropical forests, and is reached only by the hardest kind of work over rapids and up the mountain side on which it lies. But if the scenes that met the travelers with the camera were one-tenth as impressive as they are on the screen, they were well rewarded. The distant and closer views of the mighty cataract are of unexampled grandeur. "A Jungle Joy Ride" affords interesting glimpses of Indian life in the forests, their pimitive houses and occupations, and the birds and beasts that live at their front doors. It then takes its way as a genuine "joy ride" over the most dangerous river rapids ever negotiated. There are thrills a-plenty, for the camera man had a place in one of the boats that made the trip, and pictures of rich beauty in the jungle deeps.

"A Cooreal on the Orinoco" (a cooreal, be it explained, is a skiff of native manufacture) carries us by a number of small villages and affords interesting glimpses of native life and house building.

"A Mountaineer Memory" has to do with the ascent of Mount Assiniboine in the Canadian Rockies. It contains the fine scenic views always afforded by the great mountains of the northwest, and some amusing shots of the animal visitors to the camp.

ACCORDING TO DARWIN

Every once in so often the animated cartoon springs a fresh surprise in demonstrating its ability along lines peculiar to itself. As for instance, in the current Pictograph it shows us by what easy steps we are descended from "our bone relatives" the elephant and the gorilla. A few dissolving views, and the ungainly Jumbo on four feet has raised himself to stand, with some forward inclination, on two; his neck has straightened, his jawbone shrunk back. And he is identical with the skeleton of the gorilla previously shown. Another set of transformations, and our arboreal ancestor stands erect, with graceful carriage and the most classical of profiles, a fine figure of a man indeed.

A cartoon of another type is the political one which closes the reel, drawn as was the first by L. M. Glackens. It is an artist's conception of the Hohenzollern notion of "Me und Gott."

The two other subjects on the reel have to do with women who are following unusual occupations. June Haughton, international woman rifle champion, conducts classes for the young women students at the Scudder School in all that pertains to the correct knowledge and handling of firearms, while two ladies of quieter tastes exhibit the canine pets they raise on a houseboat anchored up on the Hudson.

SPAIN IN THE ANDES

If the yarn from which our patriotic hosiery is fashioned comes from South America, it is subject to foot work long before it becomes a gray or khaki sock. For details, see the current number of the Lincoln & Parker scenic taken in Southern Peru. From which we judge that labor is expended at least on sheep raising. And there is evidence that hard toil on the part of the whole family goes into the planting of corn. Aside from that, no one in this happy land seems to do much except patronize shops—the fine ones in the colonnade and the cheap little stalls tucked inside the old Spanish walls. Except on Holy Days, which are of course holidays, when everyone either walks in a religious procession or lines the sidewalks to view it.

Were it not for the numerous Indians present on all occasions, the reel might well be mistaken for one of Spain. Entirely Spanish and consequently exceedingly artistic is the architecture, whether seen in distant panorama or close-up, to which the lofty snow-clad Andes makes a fitting background.

A SCENIC REPEATS

A record surprising even for the Bruce Scenics, whose excellence has been so often attested, has just been made by "The Hound of the Hills," in which Bruce's famous Great Dane dog is featured. Booked for a week at a theatre in Newark, the picture was so successful that its run was continued for a second week.

"Rough and Ready"

(Fox Standard—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

WILLIAM FARNUM has another of those virile, fighting roles in "Rough and Ready," a melodrama laid in New York and Alaska. As one of the Alaskan dance hall girls remarked in a subtitle "He's a man." There was great emphasis on the "he." And there will be few able to repress the same sentiment. It may be spoken or merely thought but it will immediately assert itself. This is partly due the author and partly due Mr. Farnum. The former has given him a role that fits him as a glove. When opposed to a man he is all fight, when a woman picks on him he refuses to defend himself. Could a hero have more ideal manners? And Mr. Farnum with his fine physique and expressive face finishes off the role to the proverbial "t."

Of course we couldn't have an Alaskan picture without a fight, much less a William Farnum picture. In the sixth reel of "Rough and Ready" the big encounter is staged and it is a fight that the combined thrills of professional wrestling and boxing matches would find hard to surpass. The ring is again the Alaskan dance hall. Everyone from the roulette dealer to the toughest girl in the place comes to a realization of what is going to happen when Bill Stratton (that's Farnum) strides across the floor with fire in his eyes. There is an intensity in the situation that makes one catch his breath. Then, when a moment later he comes rolling down stairs out of the villain's room, the suspense becomes even tighter. With that the fight is on to the death. And Bill is the live one when its all over. It is a real fight. One can see the muscles of the participants quiver.

"Rough and Ready" has been staged realistically and lavishly. The dance hall is huge and alive with a horde of people. The snow scenes are excellent and the Yellow Gulch street is a fine setting. Richard Stanton and Ed. Sedgwick, who prepared the story and scenario have combined the elements of heart interest, pathos and melodramatic thrills in the right proportions. Their story is well balanced and moves forward with ever-increasing interest. Stanton's direction is good from every standpoint and the camera work of Harry Forbes is all that could be desired.

Violet Palmer is the ingenue, Alphonze Ethier the heavy, while Jessie Arnold, David Higgins, Franklyn McGlynn and Edward Roseman handle other characters typical of the Alaskan story.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Bill Stratton (William Farnum) protecting the honor of the wife of his friend in New York casts himself in a suspicious light in the eyes of the girl he loves, Evelyn (Violet Palmer). She breaks her engagement with him and in remorse he goes back to Alaska. In Yellow Gulch he meets "Silver" Jack Belmont (Alphonse Ethier), the man from whom he protected the woman and their antagonism for one another is renewed. Bill learns that "Lucky" Matthew Durant (David Higgins) an old miner is father of Evelyn. Many years he has lied to his daughter, saying he is the richest man in Alaska, all the while slaving to send her money enough to make good his boast. When she announces her intention of visiting him he breaks down. He fails to meet the stage on its arrival and Bill endeavors to break the news gently to her that her father is not rich. She refuses to believe him, instead taking the word of Jack that he will take her to her father's mine. Jack's intentions are in no way honorable and after many hardships and narrow escapes Bill is able to confront the villain and bring on a fight, from which he emerges victorious. He then brings Evelyn and her father together and Evelyn at last sees the greatness of the man she previously spurned.

"The Blue Bird"

(Artcraft—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

IN "The Blue Bird," Maurice Maeterlinck tells of two children's search for happiness, which he embodies as a blue bird. The fantasy he constructed around this search leads the two youngsters through the land of those who have passed on, through the portals of a heavenly kingdom where are the unborn children, through the palace of vain Pleasure, through the gardens of Eternal Spring and the stern vaults of Night, but their varied journey fails to bear the desired results. It is not until little Tyltyl and Mytyl return to the confines of their humble home and cease their search for happiness that they find it. Here, indeed, is the complete understanding of human nature. To strive for happiness is the surest way of putting it far from reach; to rest content in doing good is to attain it. It is this moral which makes Maeterlinck's play food for grownups as well as for children.

Maurice Tourneur, who was entrusted with the hazardous task of transferring the fantastical allegory to the screen, has accomplished wonders. His whole production is one inspired. There is nothing of the commonplace about it, nothing to jar one from the beautiful fantasy into harsh realities. Its one realistic note its its theme. The mountings devised for some of the scenes bespeak the work of an artist. Castles in silhouette, straight backdrops with perhaps only a single prop in the foreground bring out the spirit of the play better than all the lavishness in the world. The miracle of the graveyard's transformation into a beautiful garden of flowers is one of the most beautiful and at the same time one of the cleverest pieces of screencraft ever successfully attempted. Here too, is one of the beautiful passages of the picture. At the sudden change one of the children asks the other: "Where are the dead?" And the reply is: "There are no dead." A beautiful thought told in simple language. Mr. Tourneur is never out of tune. The Palace of Night with its weird mysteries is as well presented as the Land of the Unborn. The lightings and dissolves are employed to masterful effect.

To the writer the possibility of any one not enjoying "The Blue Bird" is not to be entertained. Someone remarked at the private showing at the Rivoli that it was for children and high-brows. Then if this be the case, it might be concluded that its appeal is universal. For both high-brows and low-brows come under the heading of children. Either Charles Maigne who made the adaptation or Mr. Tourneur have altered somewhat the original play of Maeterlinck's. A certain act of the play which pictures the trees and wild animals as taking form has been omitted, possibly because the difficulties that arose from it were enormous. And the producers have filled along the gap by supplying additional episodes which are not Maeterlinck's. But even the playwright himself would hardly object at the scenes in the land of Eternal Spring. And as for the Hall of Pleasure, this affords some contrast and still keeps in the spirit of the play.

The two children are played by Robin Macdougall and Tula Belle; clever, genuine and pretty children. Tom Corless as the Cat in human form gives an extremely clever performance. Lillian Cook, Gertrude McCoy, Edwin Reed, Emma Lowry, Edward Elkas and Charles Ascot give creditable performances. But after all it is Mr. Tourneur that is responsible for the beauty of "The Blue Bird." No individual performance stands out except his.

"The Life Mask"

(Petrova-First National Exhibitors—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

MME. PETROVA tackles the murder mystery plot in "The Life Mask," her third picture produced by her own company. Written by the author of "To M. L. G.," as the leader says, it presents one of the most skilfully knit plots of this type which the writer has seen. Events preceding the murder are handled with a fine regard of values. And even though the producers have stated that there is to be a murder the interest is accumulative and the suspense increasing in proportion until this point in the story is reached. Here the author has deftly shadowed various of the characters with suspicion and the unravelling of the mystery offers entertainment as sustaining as the first half. The author of "To M. L. G." has triumphed. He or she has written a fine picture. We only wish that the person's identity was not so anonymous

Frank Crane directed from a scenario prepared by Mrs. L. Case Russell. The film has been quite ideally presented. The exteriors procured in Florida are a delight to the eye and when the locale shifts to rural Spain suffice with reality. The players perform in an even tone throughout. Mme. Petrova, always suppressed to a point bordering on coldness acts with a slow precision and the supporting cast has molded its various performances accordingly. There are times when one wishes that the star would forsake her rather studied manner of acting. Her gestures denoting anguish are becoming mannerisms and are employed so often that emotional facial expression is missed.

However, there are Petrova fans and to these "The Life Mask" will appeal as thoroughly enjoyable. And the lover of a good mystery story will not be disappointed. It is so well constructed and worked out with such good sense of pictorial construction that it holds the interest completely. Wyndham Standing, though cast in the heavy role, is next of importance to Mme. Petrova, acting with an ability that makes him thoroughly despicable. Thomas Holding is hero and Matilda Brundage, Lucille LaVerne, Christine Mayo and E. J. Burns have prominent parts.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Anita (Mme. Petrova) is forced into a loveless marriage with Woodruffe Clay (Wyndham Standing) because he holds a check forged by her step-mother (Matilda Brundage). On her wedding night she discovers him in the embrace of Florence Robert (Christine Mayo), a woman who lives by her wits. When later he attempts to force his attentions upon her she repulses him. He falls and strikes his head. Bed-ridden for many days he finally recovers his strength but the blow has given him an uncanny delight in humiliating his wife. Anita's step-mother visits the house to ask for her check Clay refuses to give it up. Meanwhile Florence learns though the butler that she is mentioned in the will. Sarah Harden (Lucille LaVerne), Anita's life-long nurse, seems unable to tolerate Clay's cruelty to her mistress. Then one morning after Anita has sat by Clay's bedside sleeping throughout the night, he is found dead. Anita who has dreamed of murdering him, believes that she actually did. But the doctor pronounces death from natural causes. Anita goes to Spain to forget and here renews her romance with Captain Hugh Shannon (Thomas Holding) of the British army, the man she has always loved. Then she learns from a newspaper that later investigations cast suspicion on her as the murderer. Hugh, however, elects to stand by her despite her own belief that she is guilty. But when Sarah sees the situation growing serious she confesses to having administered an over-dose of morphine to Clay to rid her mistress of him. Subsequently she kills herself. Anita is left in happiness with Hugh.

"The Love Brokers"

IN the Triangle production, "The Love Brokers," Photographer Jack Mackenzie did his work passably well. Indeed, if naught but commendation were to be bestowed upon his hit-or-miss vehicle for Alma Rubens and Texas Guinan, one must needs stop right there.

It's a sad fact, nevertheless a true one, that the combined efforts of author, scenarioist, director and cast afford one who witnesses "The Love Brokers" little in the way of enlightenment as to what it's all about. In fact, one is constrained to pick out the brightest line in the subtitles and offer the suggestion that it be used in rechristening the product, that brightest line being the largest in the persiflage of Broadway, "What's the idea?"

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Charlotte Carter (Alma Rubens), seeks fame in New York as a song writer. Her admirer, Peter Ladislaw (Joe Bennett), forges checks for $8 000 and confesses to Charlotte, who promises to help him somehow. Olga Grey (Texas Guinan), one of Charlotte's new-found friends, sees a chance for personal gain by engineering a marriage between Charlotte and Gerard Townshend (Lee Hill), wealthy patron of the arts. Convinced by Olga that she must do it to save Peter, Charlotte consents to what she believes is a deathbed marriage, Townshend having been badly hurt in a motor accident. But Townshend gets well and they grow to love each other as husbands and wives should.

THIS episode opens with a prolonged fight between Pearl, aided by Gresham, and The Hooded Terror. Further suspicion is planted on both Ezra and Haynes Waldon as possible interpreters of this mysterious role. The climax of the episode arrives when the French officer and Gresham repair to a distant and secluded spot to test a new type of grenade gun turned out at the Waldon factory. Gresham views the test from a cabin to the left of the range. As the officer is firing the gun, the Hooded Terror appears and knocks him senseless. He then turns the gun on the cabin which rapidly falls apart before its fire. With Pearl dashing to the rescue and Gresham helpless in the crumbling structure the episode closes.

"The Splendid Sinner"

(Goldwyn—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

MARY GARDEN'S second Goldwyn picture offers her a modern role. She carries that most appealing of all feminine characters of the screen, the woman with a past. It is a glittering, gorgeous past as pictured in "The Splendid Sinner" and this very richness which is carried through the whole picture makes it of more than ordinary interest. The magnificent setting in the home of Dolores Fargis, for instance, starts the story off with a deep impression of its lavishness. Such a past hangs with unusual heaviness over the happiness which Dolores later discovers as the wife of Hugh Maxwell. When the inevitable crash comes it is with real force. Maxwell spurns her and she is left alone. Comes later her salvation and that of her husband on the battlefield in France.

Miss Garden is the embodiment of the title role. She conveys the spirit of it and dresses it and suggests it in her bearings. At the same time she breathes exuberance and life into it—something which operatic stars and others of Miss Garden's years of stage training often find hard to do. Much of their time is taken up in poses and stately parades before the camera. Miss Garden has evidently realized the folly of such bearing and as a result her performance rings with sincerity and is truly effective. Her support, headed by Hamilton Revelle as Maxwell and Anders Randolph as Von Zorn, the heavy, renders exceptional support.

It will be observed from the synopsis that "The Splendid Sinner" is conventional as to plot. It cannot be so observed that it is originally treated. The magnificent setting at the start has been referred to. It represents a dining room of immense proportions and a feast that would put ancient Rome to shame is in progress. This, though, is only one of the unusual things about "The Splendid Sinner." Edwin Carewe has included any number of novel effects in his direction. He does the usual in an unusual way. And the camera work by David Abel includes some extraordinary clever shots and lightings. Even a dog lends added interest to that episode of the story in which Dolores and Hugh meet. In fact the picture is admirably presented from first to last.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Dolores Fargis (Mary Garden) becomes disgusted with the mode of living provided her by Rudolph Von Zorn (Anders Randolph) and rebels. Leaving him she takes quarters in the suburbs and there meets Hugh Maxwell (Hamilton Revelle), a young doctor. It is their mutual love for music which brings the two together and shortly they are married. Dolores keeping silent regarding her past. They move to the city where Hugh finds it a hard struggle to succeed. Eventually Von Zorn locates her and shortly afterwards ruins her happiness by forcing his attentions upon her. Hugh learns all and departs. He joins the Canadian army and sails for France. Dolores enlisting in the Red Cross is placed in service back of the German lines. Hugh is brought in mortally wounded—a prisoner. Important dispatches secreted on his person he entrusts to her to deliver to Allied headquarters. She is caught and taken before the German commander who proves to be Von Zorn. He offers her life and liberty if she will come back to him. These conditions she refuses and goes before the firing squad.

"The Lie"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE strength and appeal of Sir Henry Arthur Jones' play "The Lie" have been dramatically presented in the screen version in which Elsie Ferguson is seen as star. It will probably leave a bigger record behind in the box-office than any of her former pictures, inasmuch as it contains the intense action which the British playwright is skilled at evolving together with a deeply sympathetic feminine character. It thus possesses the popular appeal which some exhibitors have claimed was lacking in Miss Ferguson's earlier pictures. And besides this it is presented with all the artistic finish which was apparent in each and every one of her former productions. Her directors know how to combine realism and artistry as do no others it seems. But Miss Ferguson is her own best artist. Aside from playing with incomparable skill she has an air of refinement that at once distinguishes her.

The adaptation of "The Lie" was made by Charles Maigne, who has worked in the same capacity on the star's four preceding pictures. His work in the present instance is of the same commendable quality. There is a smoothness, an accuracy, a completeness of detail and a steady progressiveness that makes his work stand apart from the cut and dried. The treatment he has accorded "The Lie" and the marvelous skill he displayed in handling "The Blue Bird" will, without doubt, bring to him recognition as one of the few writers for the screen who lend it prestige and credit. His sense of the dramatic seems uncanny when one comes to study his work and when one stops to consider that he has the same success with Maeterlinck as he has with Jones his ability as a continuity writer, or more than that, a motion picture playwright, can not easily be overrated even in superlatives.

Miss Ferguson's part in "The Lie" is that of a young woman whose selfish sister shifts the blame of her guilt to her. It is a role which demands a performance of deep feeling touched with restraint and Miss Ferguson interprets it excellently. Her support embraces big names and fine performances. Betty Howe plays the sister effectively. David Powell is a fine Gerald Foster and Percy Marmont's Dibkin is skilful and gentlemanly. John L. Shine as the bibulous old father is human. Maude Turner Gordon, Bertha Kent and Charles Sutton are in other parts.

J. Searle Dawley, veteran director at the Famous Players' studio, was in charge of the production. Mr. Dawley has done good work before but an excellent drama, a wonderful star, good support, expensive settings and a scenario of the calibre of Mr. Maigne's have combined to make the director surpass himself.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Sir Robert Shale's (John L. Shines) drinking has lost him his fortune. On his run-down estate in an English suburb he is cared for by Elinor (Elsie Ferguson), his daughter. Elinor is in love with Gerald Foster (David Powell), a rich English officer, and their romance is progressing happily when Lucy Shale (Betty Howe) Elinor's sister, returns from London with a tale of woe. She had loved well but unwisely, and the death of the man she believed she was to marry has left her in a sad predicament. Elinor takes her to a distant village where her child is born, and the two then journey to London, where Elinor pleads for an allowance from the uncle of the dead man. And there from another room, Nol Dibkin (Percy Marmont) sees and hears her, unaware of her sister's presence. He forms his own conclusions, and when, some time later, Gerald introduces her to him, and proudly tells him that she is to become his wife, he speaks his opinion and causes a breach between them. Lucy knowing well that Gerald is wealthy lies to him when he asks for the truth. She tells the story of the baby, reversing her position with Elinor's. So it comes to pass that later in India, Gerald and Lucy are married. And then Dibkin learns of his mistake from the uncle and overwhelmed confesses it to Elinor. They begin a trip to India, taking the baby with them, as they believe that Lucy has told her husband everything. But Elinor discovers that such is not the case. She learns of her sister's perfidy, but, unwilling to spoil the happiness of Gerald, remains silent and prevents Dibkin from telling the truth. They return home together, and it is understood that Elinor eventually finds happiness with Dibkin.

"Friend Husband"

CHARLES MURRAY, Mary Thurman and Wayland Trask are clever in this burlesque, particularly Mr. Murray. He is the bachelor who gets tangled up in the domestic troubles of Mary and Wayland. It is hardly necessary to state that Murray is an excellent comedian. He can put across gags, old or new, with a skill that must be the envy of a horde of other comedians. The plot concerns the usual uncle who would give ten thousand to the usual nephew provided he can produce a wife and child. Getting the baby results in all sorts of complications handled in the best of Sennett style.

"Friend Husband" is extremely funny at all times and benefits by Teddy, the big dog of the Sennett studio who has more intelligence than some of our best humans, and Pep, the cat. Some uproarious and astounding work is contributed by these two animals. They have important roles and have been handled with the greatest skill. Walter Wright directed.

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

NELL SHIPMAN and Alfred Whitman are co-starred in Vitagraph's latest, "The Home Trail," written by George H. Plympton and produced at the Vitagraph West Coast Studios, under the direction of William Wolbert. It is a story of the West with plenty of Western atmosphere, snappy action in the later reels, and strong, convincing action, especially by Alfred Whitman and Joe Rickson, both of whom give character portrayals that are commendable.

The story opens with the interest lagging for considerable footage, but after the first reel, things start moving and to the end of the five reels there is a strength of purpose in the action and plot that holds. "The Home Trail" is a good Westerner.

Alfred Whitman has a William Hart role and he portrays the ranger in a most convincing manner. He appears in an excellent "make-up," goes through with his part in true Western fashion. Nell Shipman fails to convince during the initial reels, but in the later reels she gives a performance that strikes home. In the final reel she does some clever work. Joe Rickson in the role of a Western bad-man does credit to the part. His is a fine type and the most villainous villain. Patricia Palmer presents a semi-important role effectively and wins the admiration of her audience. Miss Palmer should be given a chance to show her ability in a more substantial part. Hal Wilson and S. E. Jennings are good in support.

Director Wolbert, always strong on Western location, gives some ideal shots in this production. His cameraman, name not given on the program, registered with the camera. His work is commendable. Mr. Wolbert had a good script from which to work and he had taken advantage of the stronger situations, putting them over with a punch. This Vitagraph offering is a good one and will meet the demands of all those who like the Western stuff.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Tom Evans is a range boss on the Double X Ranch. He is as fearless as they come. Blackie (Joe Rickson), a pal of Tom's, is of a revengeful nature and resents the coming of the new sheriff (S. E. Jennings), to interrupt the wild doings of the Double X outfit. Clara (Nell Shipman), a school teacher in the East, arrives at the Double X. Tom and she become close friends. Blackie takes a liking to Clara and attempts to force his attentions but is rebuked by Tom. Blackie's reasons for wanting to win Clara are sinister. He fears that if Tom marries her, he will lose Tom's protection and friendship. Tom and Clara are married and Tom settles down to a quiet life. Clara grows tired of him and cultivates Blackie's company. She admires him for his desperate character. Tom is called to a nearby range to assist in the round-up and Blackie takes advantage of his absence by eloping with Clara. He takes her to a neighboring town and places her in charge of a man who conducts a roadhouse. She realizes then that Blackie has betrayed her. Tom returns and learns that Clara has gone away with Blackie, through information given him by Elsie (Patricia Palmer), the storekeeper's daughter. She secretly loved Tom. Months later, Blackie is found in the role of a stage robber. He returns to Clara pretending friendship. Clara leads him on and makes an appointment to meet him at the roadhouse. Tom and the sheriff are notified and Blackie is captured. In the struggle Clara is shot and dies from the wound. Tom and Elsie are united.

"IN AND OUT" features Bobby Vernon and Eleanor Field. Bobby has been expelled from college again and his father, giving him one more chance, sends him to a co-educational institution. Bobby's first friend in the town is the policeman on the college beat. His next is Eleanor, a fair co-ed. The principal warns him that five demerit marks will end his college career. Through his attentions to Eleanor he quickly acquired four of the black marks, but he has them all rubbed out when he fixes up an amusing compromising situation with the principal and one of the lady professors playing the leading roles.

In "Whose Wife?" Betty Compson and "Smiling" Billy Mason play the leading characters and are ably assisted by Harry Edwards and Dorothy Dane. Billy and Betty are married and Dorothy, Harry's wife, happens to be a former sweetheart of Billy. One day Billy's uncle, who doesn't know Billy is married and who is supposed to be a woman hater, blows in unexpectedly. The comedy, which is lively, revolves around the efforts of Billy to keep the fact of the marriage from the uncle, who also is Billy's employer.

"Never Surprise Your Wife," featuring Betty Compson and Harry Edwards, relates the laughable experience of a young husband who plans to surprise his wife on her birthday by making her a present of a new gown. Friend wife gets wise, hires out to the dressmaker as the model for the new gown and wears it home, to the amazement of hubby.

Bobby Vernon and Dorothy Dane are the featured players in "The House That Jack Built." Bobby has frittered away his bank account and the day of reckoning comes when his wife's mother comes to visit. Wife thinks they have enough to build a house with, but she and her mother find Bobby's bank book on the floor and see that there is only $200 left. Bobby comes back with the statement that he has built a new house for a surprise. Then he has to make good and he does so in a series of side-splitting incidents.

This series of one-reel comedies, done under Al. Christie's direction by a company of capable juvenile artists, is improving with every issue. Any one of the above four should prove acceptable on any program.

"A Camouflage Kiss"

(Fox—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"A CAMOUFLAGE KISS" is an amusing picture which starts off as a sprightly little farce and subsequently turns to less humorous burlesque played on the strenuous order. June Caprice is seen in the stellar role and the plot concerns the rivalry of her boobish fiance who kisses daintily and a second gentleman who practices caveman tactics in the art of osculation. June prefers the latter's style when the final scene arrives. Mixed in with this line of action there are the complications arising from the infatuation of a foolish wife for the skilful osculator. These come thick and fast in the last two reels. People are found in wrong bedrooms, innocently compromised before others. There is an opening and closing of doors that would make the author of a stage farce turn green with envy. And chases also. The last reel is one after another.

There is a distinct element of effective comedy in the first three reels. The author has displayed a good sense of humor and the director and his company have sensed it. The subtitles, too, are very funny. Barnard Thornton and George Bunny are the main exponents of the comedy. Mr. Thornton again acts the clown as he did in "The Heart of Romance" and with the same foolish stare registers well in the role of the boob fiance. As the footage passes, however, he tires somewhat by his sameness. Mr. Bunny as the distressed husband has a big part to which he brings a happy personality and a capable performance. Pell Trenton and Lola May complete the cast with a brace of good performances.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

When porkless days hit the city, John Chandler (George Bunny), pork dealer, unites with Rudolph King (Bernard Thornton), canner of beans. Rudolph is influenced in this deal by his admiration of Chandler's sister-in-law, Martha (June Caprice). Kingston (Pell Trenton), a Government buyer, negotiates with Chandler and King for part of their output, and the fact that he gives no immediate decision worries them. They invite him to a house party. Rudolph, just repulsed by Martha, because she believes kissing unsanitary, appeals to Kingston for assistance. This is freely given. Kingston kisses her in the dark, and Rudolph claims credit when he sees that Martha wants to thank some one. But he can't live up to the reputation set for him by the kiss. And finally Martha discovers the identity of the man who bestowed it. Then, even though engaged to Rudolph, she much prefers Kingston. But trouble arises when Irene Chandler (Lola May), John's wife, becomes infatuated with Kingston. However, both Rudolph and Chandler suppress their wrath because they want the contract. Eventually though they chase him out of the house when about every one in it has been more or less compromised. When Rudolph looks around for Martha he discovers that she has accompanied Kingston.

"The Woman in the Web"

(Vitagraph Serial—First Episode—Two Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

THE first episode of Vitagraph's new serial, "The Woman in the Web" promises much in the way of screen entertainment for the remaining fourteen chapters. "Caught in the Web" is the title of the first chapter. The serial was written by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon are featured. David Smith and Paul Hurst are responsible for the direction.

"The Woman in the Web" strikes a marked contrast to Vitagraph's two preceeding serial offerings, "The Fighting Trail" and "Vengeance and the Woman," in that the Western atmosphere is left behind—at least it has been ignored in producing the first episode. But this fact does not make it any the less, of equal interest as the two preceding serials. If the first chapter can be taken as a criterion then the other fourteen episodes are the essence of real, live, thrilling entertainment. Stunts before the camera bolstered by a cleverly constructed story, as revealed in the first episode, mark this serial, as one of the best created by Vitagraph. The story has substance, a firm foundation upon which to rest for its thrilling stunts and rapidly moving action. The theme is timely as it reveals the adventures of a young American and his sweetheart, in dodging the traps laid for them by treacherous German agents.

The first episode is distinctly branded as a stunt chapter, by the daring leap from a fifty-foot tower, executed by J. Frank Glendon. The photographer and the cutter has assisted Mr. Glendon in eliminating the perils incident upon such a jump, but the effect is there and neither trick photography nor the deft fingers of a cutter, can eliminate the thrill which one gets when Mr. Glendon jumps from the windows of the high tower.

The plot moves with the rapidity of a trip-hammer from the opening scene to the close. There is action every foot of reelage. The first episode is a good forerunner for what is to follow. Vitagraph's third serial is destined to have the same marked success of its first two.

The cast works with plenty of "pep" and the directors have spared no pains in making every scene as realistic as can be registered before a camera. Hedda Nova in the principal feminine role, is a fine type and acts with ability. The photography is clear and the shots are all well timed. "The Woman in the Web" promises much in the way of entertainment.

"Bill's Baby"

(Capitol Comedies—Goldwyn—Two Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

"BILL" PARSONS' first Capitol Comedy, released by Goldwyn, is of the sure-fire brand. "Bill's Baby" is the title and it contains comedy situations which will get a laugh from the most sedate. The comedy is clean with only a slight sprinkling of the slapstick variety. Bill has a sense of humor that requires no dramatic training to bring forth—it is at natural for Bill to get a laugh as it is for him to breathe the air of Los Angeles.

Goldwyn in contracting for the series of Capitol Comedies, made no blunder, providing the remaining numbers measure up to the quality of the first, "Bill's Baby," which ran at the Strand theatre last week. A matinee crowd at the Strand received Bill's first offering with smiles, laughs and a good measure of mild roars. There was not a moment when the audience was not on the verge of laughter and much of the time found them registering same.

Bill Parson's laugh, alone, is worth a good hearty laugh, and when he divides the honors with Billy Rhoades and Ray Belasco, as he does in "Bill's Baby," and takes it upon himself to foster a baby which he has found in a clothes basket in a hallway, and then caps the climax with taking the find to a baby contest and winning the first prize, he brings down the house. The first release of Capitol Comedies, by Goldwyn, looks like a good bet, and the ones to follow, if they maintain the same standard, should get over with any audience.

"Chase Me Charlie"

(Essanay-Perfection—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"CHASE ME CHARLIE" is some clever Britisher's idea of a Chaplin revue. It contains pieces of all his Essanay comedies: "His New Job," "The Tramp," "In the Park," "Shanghaied," "The Champion" and the rest and the editor has made a valiant and moderately successful attempt to link his cutouts together in some sort of intelligible sequence. At least "Chase Me Charlie" has continuity enough to please the Chaplin-mad fan who is willing and eager to see his idol cavort through ludicrous stunts and make love to Edna Purviance. There is riotous fun in every reel. The Chaplin walk, the Chaplin kick, the Chaplin nonchalance, the Chaplin uneasiness in the face of danger—are given airings free from the incident which surrounded them in their original form.

And here too is the weak spot in "Chase Me Charlie." As Chaplin takes one role after another, as Miss Purviance appears first as a banker's daughter and then as a banker's secretary, as Leo White alternates between a villainous Count and minor roles, and as Bud Jamieson fights and then does a turn in vaudeville, not even all the skill of the British editor can make the episodes any more than distantly related. The fact that Chaplin doing a stunt is not nearly as funny as Chaplin doing a stunt in a developed plot is evident. This may sound strange. It has been declared that his type of comedy needs no plot—no story. Herewith the falsity of that declaration is proven.

The subtitles are new and are in the form of jingles, with a distinctly British flavor, that serve to hitch together the various episodes so that they are not altogether apart from one another.

"The Red, Red Heart"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE magic of the Arizona desert, the bigness and the romance of it are successfully brought out in this production featuring Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford. This has been made possible by the excellence of the adaptation made by Bess Meredyth from the novel by Honore Willsie, the ideal locations secured, marvelous photography and the performance of Mr. Salisbury who plays the Indian. Any person might stand up and say, "Oh, my desert," and extend his arms toward the horizon and the setting sun but certainly not with the fine feeling that Mr. Salisbury puts into it. He can speak of his beloved wastes of sand and dry-brush in words that might sound foolish if mouthed by a real nature lover, but which, benefited by his deep eyes, his expression so serious that it is a mite sorrowful, becomes as natural as the desert itself.

The story traces the fortunes of a white maid and a red man. The former, ill in spirit with no desire to live longer, visits friends on the edge of the great desert and when the red man sees her in a perpetual state of melancholy he kidnaps her and forces her to live close to nature. And the desert does its work, brings on a wonderful cure, and in the end the white girls decides to remain with the man who brought back to her the joy of living. Miss Clifford is most effective as the girl, and Mr. Salisbury, besides acting with all the feeling at his command draws a realistic picture of the Indian.

To Wilfred Lucas credit must also be extended. The spirit of the vast desert fairly permeates his picture. There is never a false note struck. Gretchen Lederer, Val Paul, Al Sears, Monte Blue and Princess Neola complete the cast. The single interior setting is pleasing.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Kut-Le (Monroe Salisbury), an Indian with a college education is employed as engineer in a big irrigation project promoted by Newman (Val Paul). Newman's wife (Gretchen Lederer) receives her friend Dewitt (A. D. Sears) and his fiancee, Rhoda (Ruth Clifford) as guests. Rhoda has lost all interest in life since being in a railroad accident. Kut-Le divining her trouble bides his time and then kidnaps her, carrying her off to the mountain places and forcing her to live down to nature. Gradually her spirit returns and though she feigns hatred of KutLe at times actually enjoys herself. Dewitt with Newman and Porter (Monte Blue), a native who hates Kut-Le search day after day for the missing girl and only locate her when the cure has been affected. The white man with the exception of Newman who understands the Indian, would kill Kut-Le but he manages to overcome both of them. Dewitt shows himself a poor sport when he refuses to believe Rhoda and the Indian innocent of anything but clean living and so the girl remains with the man she really loves.

"Little Miss No-Account"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

HUMAN incidents written into the script of "Little Miss No-Account," by the author, Edward P. Smaney, and the faithful interpretation of same by Gladys Leslie, the star, and West Jenkins, in the role of a faithful negro servant, give to this Vitagraph offering an entertaining value that spells a little above the average photodrama. William P. S. Earle directed and has created the author's ideas for screen presentation, with a nice regard for the stronger and more subtle moments. "Little Miss No-Account" can be recommended as a good Spring tonic for the blues. The lighter veins of comedy are woven with the more hardened and pathetic in such a manner as to balance pretty evenly the two extreme emotions aroused by the two dramatic weapons.

Mr. Smaney, the author, appreciates the value of the human interest element. He has not created a strictly original story, but he has emphasized the human element with the comedy predominating. He has left openings for the sentimental to permit the more sympathetic mood to play upon their emotions with the result that he has prepared a script which reaches all classes with a good measure for the children. He has given Director Earle sufficient plot material for five reels of pictures and has created a good story, if not a world beater.

Gladys Leslie handles the role of Patty with fine appreciation. She is strong on the "kid stuff," and has the happy faculty of winning the sympathy of her audience with every expression of unhappiness or discontent. Frank O'Connor has the leading straight role and does commendable work. William Calhoun in

Patty Baring (Gladys Leslie) lives with her stepfather, who plans with his sister to force the little girl to convey to him certain property which she will inherit on reaching her eighteenth birthday. Paddy's only friend in the big house of her stepfather's is Stebbins (West Jenkins), a colored servant. Stebbins is her slave.

Her stepfather's harsh ways become unendurable and Paddy leaves on her eighteenth birthday. She meets her newsboy friend and he takes her to the shabby but comfortable home of his uncle, who runs a small store in the basement. She is adopted for the time. She meets the assistant district attorney (Frank O'Connor) and is taken for a ride in his car, accompanied by her benefactors. She also meets a young gambler, a friend of the storekeeper. Ann Wheeler (Eulalie Jensen), sister of her stepfather, has learned Paddy's whereabouts and, with the help of the young gambler, lures her to a gambling house near the place where she is living. While she is there the assistant district attorney orders a raid on the place. Paddy is found and taken to the station with the other offenders. The assistant district attorney finds her there and obtains her release. He then learns of her stepfather's plans to obtain her property. Paddy is taken to the attorney's mother and her property is placed in her safe keeping.

"Mrs. Slacker"

(Pathe—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE marriage license clerk at City Hall worked overtime last summer when it was announced that single men would be the first drafted. Perhaps Agnes Johnston was strolling through the park at the time and thereby received inspiration for "Mrs. Slacker," a photoplay in which a young man acts accordingly. He marries, miserable wretch, to escape service in the ranks of his country's army, but discovers that he has married the wrong woman for his complete peace of mind. By her scorn and pluck and courage she shames him into a realization of the disgrace he has brought upon himself and proves the means of turning him from a coward into a hero. All of which makes an entertaining and sustaining plot, with its melodramatic German spies, but all of it is told in the fifth reel of "Mrs. Slacker."

The rest of the picture is full of personal touches concerning the girl's trials and joys and her enthusiasm for her country. She drills the kiddies just like Baby Marie Osborne did in "The Little Patriot," and acts quite childish for a girl of her age. But the plot is never in evidence until the end. The body of the picture is fluff and possesses no vein of suspense around which to build the many touches that were evolved for the star. It is the old story of material inadequate for five reels.

Gladys Hulette is featured in the title role and plays the part for all it's worth when the scenario writer has allowed her to act and not just romp about. Hobart Henley directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Susie Simpkins (Gladys Hulette) lives with a drink-sodden old uncle, and takes in washing as a means of earning her livelihood. Her best customer is the rich Gibbs family. Robert Gibbs (Creighton Hale), a thorough coward, becomes acquainted with Susie through her many visits to the house, and admires her pluck and courage. He leaves for college. When vacation time comes the United States has declared war. The draft is announced, and Robert seeing a means of evading it marries Susie. Subsequently he claims exemption, despite his father's wealth. Gibbs, Senior (Paul Clerget), coundly upbraids his son and Susie, on discovering his great cowardice, determines to dress as a man and join the army herself. That night she stumbles on a German spy plot to blow up the reservoir. She is captured by the spies. They proceed with their plan—knock all the guards of the reservoir senseless, and start to plant the bomb. But Robert, musing on his position, happens along, and, seeing the danger of the situation, suddenly drops his cowardice, and becomes a fighting hero. The plot is frustrated, and later Susie is proud to see him enlist.

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912.

Motion Picture News, published at New York, N. Y., April 1, 1918.

State of New York }
County of New York } ss.

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and county aforesaid, personally appeared E. Kendall Gillett, 729 Seventh Avenue, N. Y. C., who, having been duly sworn acording to law, deposes and says that he is the Business Manager of the Motion Picture News, Inc., 729 Seventh Avenue, N. Y. C., and that the following is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management, etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in section 443, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form to wit:

2. That the owners are: Wm. A. Johnston, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City; Percy S. Alden, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City; E. Kendall Gillett, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City; Wentworth Tucker, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City; Henry F. Sewall, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City; Carl Tucker, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and security in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by him.

5. That the average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed, through the mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the six month preceding the date shown above is ——. (This information is required from daily publications only.)

E. KENDALL GILLETT,
Business Manager.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 22nd day of March, 1918.

F. G. SPENCER,
Notary Public.

OBTAIN MAXIMUM SCREEN DEFINITION

Illuminate Your Screen With Artificial Daylight

For alternating current projection use the perfect illuminant—the light that shows up the high lights and shadows in the background—the light given by

WHITE A. C. SPECIAL MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

It's the screen definition that makes the picture pleasing to the eye, it's the light given by the White A. C. Specials that gives perfect screen definition.

The use of the artificial daylight given by these carbons necessitates absolutely no change in equipment.

The White A. C. Special carbon burns with a noiseless arc and gives a penetrating, pure white light.

If you are getting poor results on alternating current, try these carbons and compare the results obtained with the old roaring A. C. arc.

FOR DIRECT CURRENT OPERATION USE THE Silvertip Negative Carbon

The National-Silvertip combination is well known to the majority of successful operators. It combines satisfactorily the features of steady arc and maximum brilliancy.

Write today for our folders describing these carbons.

Five Million More Patrons

To have the question of music for the motion picture agitated by one of New York's leading evening papers, particularly in its editorial columns, is proof of the importance of pictures and the telling effect of music in rounding them out and making them the most universally enjoyed form of entertainment.

Music, good music, is 40 per cent of the entertainment. As is pointed out below many patrons attend picture houses not for what they see but for the music they hear. The exhibitor's object is to bring the people into his house. If he can add a reasonable percentage by better music an investment in this line should be made and that quickly.

The editorial in question, which is printed below, appeared in the New York Evening Globe of February 5, 1918.

"MUSIC AND MOVIE"

"It is one of those paradoxes not infrequent in the world of the theater that one of the most important results of movie-going has been the development in the public of a taste for good music. We all remember the day when the best motion picture "palace" had at least one piano, or perhaps a piano and violin, to assist the creeps up and down the spine at the most villainous parts of the play, or to lull us to sweet dreams when she was about to fall into his arms.

"Sometimes there was at the piano some young student with real taste, whose knowledge of musical literature enabled him or her to improvise and to string together Chopin nocturnes, Faust, the Rakoczy March, Debussy and Tchaikowsky, as the scene or the inclinations of the improviser demanded. But now the managers of the chief motion picture theatres have got beyond the experimental stage. Whether their audiences know it or not, the managers know that what attracts many people to their theatres is not the play but the music.

"And so they have employed first rate conductors, and orchestras which are ranked by those who have heard them with the symphony orchestras whose performances receive the lavish praises of the pundits of musical criticism. Strangest of all, for those who despair of the musical taste of the American public the motion picture audiences seem to enjoy the very best.

"The conductors are enterprising, too. They are not held, by the terms of endowments, to any period of music. They can wander far afield, and they frequently perform the new as well as the established. In one evening it is not at all unusual to hear played by one of these orchestras pieces by Stravingsky, Scriabine, Liszt, Wagner and Verdi. It is, of course, often a hodge-podge. And yet there is perhaps less bowing and scraping to the ghosts of musical respectability by the orchestras of motion picture theatres than by our most lauded symphony conductors."

"But now the managers of the chief motion picture theatres have got beyond the experimental stage. Whether their audiences know it or not, the managers know that what attracts many people to their theatres is not the play but the music." This is worth repeating and considering. The old days when a picture was a novelty and when anything went, have gone—producers are improving their product every year—theaters are improving—music is improving but not at the pace which is necessary to the full realization of the power and popularity of the picture theatre. At present in over 90 per cent of the houses it is the picture alone which is producing the results. The potential possibilities of these theatres have not yet been realized.

Eight million people go to pictures regularly each day out of the sixty million who think they are "fans" and who attend say every two weeks or once a month. The large proportion of these regular attendants go to the small community houses throughout the country and go because they like the pictures or lack resources to entertain themselves at home—therefore these are the people who come in spite of the theatre manager. It is therefore the building up of the fifty-two million and converting them into regulars which is the task of the theatre managers and owners. How is it to be done?

If the picture itself is 60 per cent of the show and has an eight million following and music is 40 per cent of the show then by putting real music into the houses at least five million and a half other "regulars" should be added. If these people become boosters the movement toward pictures will rapidly grow of its own momentum.

Some say this is theory—perhaps it is—some people said that pictures would never go in New York's theatrical district, yet we have five houses right in the heart of that very district today which are coining money and all because of the theory held by one man, S. L. Rothapfel—who believed in the picture and above all in the PICTURE and MUSIC.

Orchestras with the necessary organ are fine—for a big house in a big city. However, for the smaller community house and those in small towns they are not and cannot be handled profitably with the limited admissions price and small seating capacities. Here something must be found which will take their place and yet will give the same general effect and have the same pleasing qualities. This can be done by the ORGAN and ONE-MAN INSTRUMENTS alone or may have small orchestras in addition depending upon the receipts. The one thing, however, which must be remembered is that if this equipment is going to do the trick—THE PLAYER MUST KNOW HIS BUSINESS. Too many good instruments are being discarded and held in ill repute because the man playing them is worthless and has no right to inflict his playing on any one, much less those who have to pay to hear him.

When buying either an organ or one-man instrument the exhibitor should have a clause in his contract to the effect that the manufacturers should see that for a certain time at least the purchaser is supplied with a competent man who knows how to play the instrument for pictures. It is the human touch applied intelligently by an artist which counts and which will attract the patrons and hold them.

"Managers have got beyond the experimental stage—they know what attracts many people to their theatres is not the play but the music."

E. K. Gillett.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Chapters on Intermittent Movements—I

The Geneva-Stop, or Star-Wheel and Cam

An investigation through the historical works on cinematography, and through the patents literature of the subject, will show that in the course of the past twenty yearse many forms of mechanical movements have been devised or utilized in connection with motion picture cameras and projector mechanisms, to impart an intermittent movement to the cinematographic film strip for the purpose of bringing successive portions of film, or film pictures, before the exposure or projection-apertures of the respective classes of machines.

Of the scores of types of movements which have been employed in cinematography to convert continuous motion into periodically recurring intermittent motion, only a very few have been found serviceable or satisfactory in practical use, this being especially the case in motion picture projection, where precision of adjustment must be maintained at a high speed of operation. When the requirements of projecting machine design and construction are borne in mind, the number of types of intermittent movement that are in any way suitable for this purpose is seen to be very small, and this series of articles will be descriptive of the basic types of intermittents which still find employment in cinematographic work.

Every operator, or motion picture mechanician, is well aware that the Geneva-stop, or so-called "star and cam" movement, has superseded most every other type of intermittent for use in projecting machines, and, as the Geneva-stop movement is so universally known, it seems appropriate to make it the subject of the first article.

In Fig. 1 are shown two views of the customary four-slot star-wheel and one-pin cam, which all readers are doubtless acquainted with. The combined action of the two members in converting continuous motion into intermittent motion is well understood and can be investigated with little trouble by anyone who possesses, or has access to, a projecting machine of conventional type. As the present article will, however, embrace the consideration of the various forms which the Geneva-stop movement can assume, it is necessary to go a step further than the customary elementary description and to outline the theory of this type of movement, for in this way we arrive at the capabilities of each of the various forms of the Geneva-stop and the principles which underlie the design of such movements.

As is well known, the period of rest, during which a film picture is stationary before the aperture of a projecting machine, should be as large a fraction as possible of the interval before the succeeding picture takes its place, which latter interval will be known as the succession interval. In the case of the Geneva-stop (or star-and-cam) movement, the relative durations of the period of rest and the period of motion depend upon the relative sizes of the cam (or pin-wheel) and the star-wheel, and also upon the number of pins on the cam and the number of slots in the star-wheel. The effect of varying these quantities may be readily demonstrated.

Referring, therefore, to Fig. 2, S represents the star-wheel and C represents the cam, or pin-wheel. The cam-pin, P, is seen to be just entering one of the slots of the star, and the pin will emerge from the star-slot at P′, leaving the next slot in position ready for the entrance of the same, or another, cam-pin P. We may now proceed to determine the characteristics of any given star-and-cam movement as follows:

Let n = number of pins on pin-wheel C.
Let R = radius of circle described by pins.
Let r = radius of star-wheel, S.
Let s = number of slots in star-wheel.
Let $2\theta'$ = angle between consecutive star-slots.
Let $2\phi'$ = angle through which pin P passes during one shift of the star.
Let v = number of revolutions per second of the pin-wheel, or cam.

Then

The number of shifts per second of the star wheel $= n \times v$

The succession interval $= \dfrac{1}{n \times v}$

The angular velocity of the pin-wheel, or cam $= 360° \times v$

The number of slots in the star-wheel (denoted by s)

$$= \frac{360°}{2\theta'} \text{ or } \frac{180°}{\theta'}$$

The relative period of rest of the movement

$$= \frac{\text{period of rest}}{\text{period of movement}}$$

or

$$\frac{\dfrac{1}{n \times v} - \dfrac{2\phi'}{360° \times v}}{\dfrac{1}{n \times v}} = 1 - \frac{n \times \phi'}{180°}$$

It is therefore seen that the period of rest is larger or smaller in proportion to the period of motion as n (the number of pins on the cam) and ϕ' (the angle traversed by the pin during one shift) are smaller or larger. Thus the effect of increasing the number of pins on the cam is to lessen the relative period of rest, while, on the other hand, the effect of increasing the size (or diameter) of the cam (or pin-wheel) is to increase the relative period of rest. As the cams, or pin-wheels, of all modern projectors equipped with Geneva movements have only one pin, the ratio of the period of rest to the period of movement, i. e., the "speed" of the intermittent, is adjusted by varying the sizes (or diameters) of the star-wheel and the cam.

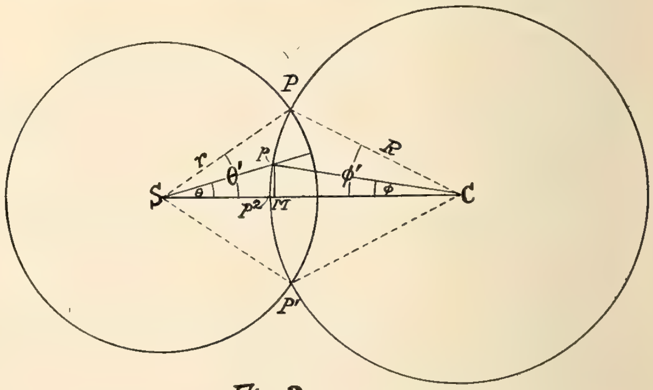

Fig.2.

A most important point with respect to the design of the Geneva movement is the manner in which the cam-pin enters the slots of the star-wheel. As is apparent from Fig. 2, at the instant at which the pin P enters the slot, SP, of the star, its motion is perpendicular to the radius CP. If the direction of entrance of the cam-pin into the star-slot is radially along the slot S P, or in other words, if the star-slot is tangential with respect to the circular path through which the cam-pin revolves, then there will be no impact on the surface of the star-slot when the cam-pin enters.

If, however, the direction of entrance of the pin is not radially along the star-slot (as, for instance, in Fig. 2) then the pin will strike against the side of the slot and start the star-wheel with a sudden jerk. Robert W. Paul, an English pioneer in cinematography, seems to have first pointed out the mechanical advantages of the radial entry of the cam-pin into the slots of the star, which case may be represented analytically as follows, employing our previous notation:

$$\phi' = \frac{180^\circ}{2} - \theta' = \frac{180^\circ}{2} - \frac{180^\circ}{s}$$

The relative stationary period is given by

$$1 - \frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{s} \text{ or } \frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{s}$$

This ratio is apparently a maximum when s is as small as possible, and the smallest possible number of star-slots is three—i. e., a three-slot star-wheel. A three-slot star-wheel, therefore, gives a period of rest, which is five-sixths of the succession interval.

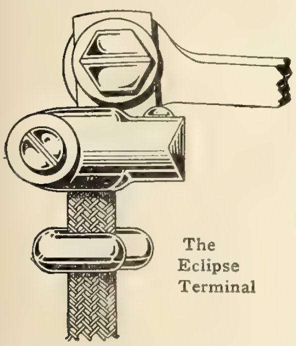
A New Wire-Terminal

WE are in receipt of samples of what appears to be a simple, durable and useful terminal for connecting the leads to a motion picture projector lamp, the same being submitted by A. P. Reed, of Syracuse, N. Y., who writes as follows:

"I am an operator, one of the pioneers in the business, and as a side-line I am trying to introduce one of the best, if not the best, terminals for motion picture machine lamps.

Am sending you a sample under separate cover, and I would appreciate it if you can speak well of the terminals after you have looked them over."



The Eclipse Terminal

Comment: Mr. Reed's terminal is known as the Eclipse, and we are advised that patents are pending on the device. In forwarding samples of the Eclipse terminal Mr. Reed was thoughtful enough to include a section of asbestos-covered wire, wherewith we could study the action of the terminal, and he has also forwarded the illustration which we produce herewith.

The principal feature of the Eclipse terminal is the hinged jaw, controlled by a set screw, which serves to grip the wire very firmly when the screw is tightened down after the insertion of the wire. The jaws of the Eclipse terminals which we have examined may be opened wide enough to receive a number 6 wire with ease.

For the convenience of users of the various types of projecting machines, Eclipse terminals are supplied in two styles: style A, which connects to the lamp arm from the side, and style B, which is attached from the end. Mr. Reed advises us that the price of Eclipse terminals is 50 cents each, or $2.00 per half dozen, and we can recommend his product as being good value for the money. Orders may be addressed to the Eclipse Terminal, P. O. box 617, Syracuse, N. Y.

League Member Has Misconception of Organization's Aims

IN our last issue we commented upon the mistaken attitude of an operator member of the National Anti-Misframe League, who complained that the Philadelphia Paramount exchange had supplied the Rivoli theatre, where he was employed, with a film subject in very bad condition, and had then refused to pay a bill of $1 rendered by the operator in question for his work in putting the picture into shape for exhibition.

As we pointed out on the previous occasion, this operator was in no way justified in demanding payment from the exchange for his work in putting the film in condition, for when he applied for membership in the National Anti-Misframe League, he specifically agreed to improve, to the best of his ability, the physical condition of all film used by him in the practice of his profession. Several hundred operator members of the N. A. M. L. throughout the United States and Canada are faithfully living up to the League's pledge which they voluntarily subscribed to, and their efforts have been highly appreciated by the exchanges which serve them, as is proven by letters on file at the office of the NEWS.

The operator referred to at present has committed an act which we hope will never be repeated, either by himself or any other member of the National Anti-Misframe League, but we believe that he now understands the objects of the League more clearly than formerly, and will in future approach exchange employes and officials in a manner calculated to win their respect and co-operation, which is being freely granted to conscientious followers of the League's policies.

These remarks lead up to the closing chapter in the Philadelphia incident, which is supplied in the form of a letter from the Philadelphia exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to the Assistant General Manager of the concern in New York, through whose courtesy we are enabled to reproduce the letter with the comment that in this instance the exchange was above any criticism.

J. D. Clark, manager of the Philadelphia exchange, gave the following particulars of the incident in this letter to the parent office:

"The operator of the Rivoli theatre [Philadelphia] came to this office and stated that he could not wait five minutes for his show, and we therefore, gave it to him and explained that it had not been inspected. He took it out to the theatre, and as I understand, later called on the telephone and advised that he had to spend considerable time in patching it. Some weeks later he came to the office and presented me with a bill for $1.00. This I refused to pay and explained to him that any operator taking a show out of here that he knew was not inspected, and working for the best interests of his own theatre, should inspect that show and put it in proper condition. He then said he would send a letter to MOTION PICTURE NEWS regarding it, and also a letter to Hiram Abrams, which, according to your letter of March 15, I presume he did.

"At that time I told him that inasmuch as we would not pay the $1.00 and he cared to write such letters, etc., that hereafter we did not care to put any film in the Rivoli theatre as long as he was the operator, and advising him to tell his manager. This operator has been around Philadelphia for a long time, and I know him very well as a fresh young disturber, which about covers the whole thing. It was not the fact that he asked for the $1.00, or for anything else, but just the way he went about it that was uncalled for and unnecessary, and I hardly think the MOTION PICTURE NEWS would pay any attention to such communications, although it was very nice of them to take it up with you."

Popularity of Simplex Manifested by Recent Installations

THE increasing popularity of Simplex Projectors is indicated by the installation of these machines in two one-million-dollar picture theatres recently opened to the public.

Three were purchased by Sid Graumann for his Million-Dollar Theatre located at Third street and Broadway, Los Angeles and another leading picture house, opened recently in the East, using Simplex Projectors is Harry Davis's Million-Dollar Grand Opera House, on Fifth avenue, between Wood and Smithfield, in the down-town section of Pittsburgh.

A Simplex Projector was also installed last week at the Jewish Center, 131 West Eighty-sixth street, New York City, for use in connection with its educational work, and the management of the Grand Military and Naval Meet held in Madison Square Garden, March 15-17, to raise funds for the benefit of the Women's Overseas Hospitals, U. S. A., selected the Simplex for the projection of pictures used as part of the entertainment in Madison Square Garden during that period.

Simplex projectors were likewise selected for screening "My Four Years In Germany," the film version of Ambassador James W. Gerard's book of that title, which has been playing to capacity at the Knickerbocker theatre, New York City, for the last two weeks.

The selection of the Simplex for the showing of the picture is considered significant by the management of the Precision Machine Company, Inc., inasmuch as the release is considered one of the best features to be shown on Broadway for some years, and from the nature of the print, required projection qualities of a high order.

Inter-Ocean Reports Good Export Business in American Carbons

DURING the past year the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, New York City, has built up quite an extensive export business in Speer projector carbons, an American product, and we note from a recent statement from the Inter-Ocean offices that they are still exporting the Speer carbons in increasing quantities. Recent shipments by the Inter-Ocean included 25,000 Speer carbons to Argentina, 50,000 to South Africa, 50,000 to England, 30,000 to France, 32,000 to India and 20,000 to Peru and Chile. Spain and Portugal will use a minimum of 250,000 American-made projector carbons a year, according to orders already closed. The Inter-Ocean officials are to be congratulated for having developed this hitherto neglected line of export business.

Swaab Honored by Local 307 of Philadelphia

AT a recent meeting of Local 307, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. of Philadelphia, Mr. Lewis M. Swaab, the well-known motion picture supply dealer of that city was presented with an honorary life membership in the organization.

Mr. Swaab's membership card is engraved on silver and is four inches in width. Needless to say he prizes very highly this token of the esteem in which he is held by the Philadelphia operators.

It so happens that Local 307 is a neighbor of Mr. Swaab, as the headquarters of the organization is located in the same building as are Mr. Swaab's up-to-date salesrooms at 1327 Vine street.

Operators' Inquiries

J. E. SHAY, MILAN, MO., "What is the effect if the shutter is taken off the machine?"

REPLY: As is well known, the shutter of a motion picture projector is intended to intercept the passage of the projecting light during the interval in which successive pictures on the film are being moved down into position before the exposing aperture.

Since it is necessary in the case of the conventional type of projecting machine, to mask the substitution of succeeding pictures by a shutter which periodically intercepts the projection light, it follows that if the shutter is removed from the machine, the substitution of pictures before the aperture will be visible on the projection screen, to the serious discomfiture of the spectator.

The effect of projecting with the shutter omitted is a streaming of all the high-lights of the pictures, which appear as white streaks, or bands, running entirely up and down the screen. The same result occurs in a partial degree when the projector shutter is not set in perfect time with the shift interval of the intermittent, the slight streaming of the high-lights which is then observed being generally known as a "travel ghost."

When the shutter is entirely removed from the projector, and a film subject is projected at normal speed (16 per second) or thereabouts, the pulsating effect due to the apparent substitution of consecutive pictures is so severe that the screen results cannot be viewed with comfort, and a very high projecting rate is required to reduce the pulsation to a tolerable degree. No matter how high the rate of projection, the screen results are not perfect, however, when the shutter is removed, because high-lights in the film pictures (such as the lettering of titles) will still be accompanied by streamers which extend from top to bottom of the screen, and, in fact, at any speed of projection, which is within the capabilities of the ordinary projector mechanism, the results of removing the shutter will always be apparent as might be inferred in advance.

J. I. KINES, PROTECTION, KAN., "Is the Mazda light a success on a long throw? I have 100 feet."

REPLY: The makers of the Mazda equipments claim that this form of illuminant, in conjunction with a special optical system, will equal a 35 ampere D. C. projector arc on pictures up to 12 feet wide. So long as the atmosphere is clear the length of the throw, up to 100 feet at least, is not a factor in screen brightness. We have personally seen Mazda projection at a distance of 90 feet which was of satisfactory brightness, but the demonstration was made on a glaringly bright aluminum screen and a half-size objective was required to transmit sufficient light to the screen. The necessity of using half-size objectives is one of the present shortcomings of the Mazda proposition, but incandescent projection has many features to recommend it, and will undoubtedly come to the fore after further development by the incandescent engineers.

R. GREENWOOD, WORCESTER, MASS., "Why is it that in order to become a licensed operator you have to work under a licensed man for six months. Have been operating seven years, and can run any machine on the market, but I am not licensed."

REPLY: The six months' apprenticeship under a licensed operator is not required in all cities where the operators are licensed, but it is a fundamentally important requirement in the case of new hands at the business of motion picture projection.

It would be manifestly unfair and absurd, however, to require operators of long experience and training to submit themselves to such an apprenticeship, and we do not think that such would be required by the licensing authorities of any city. An operator of bona fide experience can doubtless secure the privilege of examination without undergoing the apprenticeship by submitting to the examiners affidavits from his previous employers, which will serve to bear out his claims of previous experience.

National Anti-Misframe League Pledge

As a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Chapters on Photographic Optics—VI

If all the light which radiates from an object being photographed could pass direct to the photographic plate and form an image of the object, the process of making photographic exposures would be an infinitely rapid one, but in practice only the light which passes through the camera objective is instrumental in forming the latent photographic image.

The amount of light from the object which reaches the image through a photographic or a projection objective is limited in its transmission through the lens system by various definite physical boundaries, such as lens-mountings, diaphragms, etc., and a knowledge of the action of these boundaries on the light rays which traverse an optical system is of fundamental importance to the modern student of practical optics.

The action of the mountings and fittings of an objective upon the light rays traversing them is known as "the regulation of the rays," and the study of ray regulation in photographic and projection systems is essential to a correct understanding of the properties and action of such systems. The doctrine of the regulation of the rays originated with the noted theorist, Professor E. Abbe, who gave the theory in complete and connected form, but it has subsequently been extended in practical directions by Dr. M. von Rohr, to whom all photographers are indebted for his researches and writings on photographic optics. Although the subject of ray regulation has been fully developed by the Jena school, it has not been adequately treated in the English text-books on optics, and has been scarcely touched upon in our text-books of photographic optics, with the result that scarcely any photographer can properly define such an important item as the speed of his lens. This may not be a matter of cardinal importance, so long as the photographer knows how to use his lens to good advantage, but in the field of optical projection, and in particular motion picture projection, a very inefficient utilization of the projection illuminant prevails in most theatres, due to lack of knowledge on the part of operators and their mentors of the action of optical systems in regulating the rays which traverse such systems.

As the "aperture," or rapidity, of an objective is an important consideration with photographers, and is of capital importance to optical projectionists, it seems advisable to first describe the manner in which the rapidity of an objective is ascertained through the study of the action of its lenses and its fittings upon incident light rays. The inaccurate and antiquated rules of the average text-book on photography have been responsible for a severe misapprehension, on the part of photographers and others, as to how the rapidity of an objective is determined, and it is commonly stated that the quotient obtained by dividing the diameter of the largest stop into the equivalent focal length of an objective gives the "speed," or relative rapidity, at full aperture. This is far from being an accurate evaluation of the rapidity of a compound objective, however, and the rule above cited only holds good in the case of a single lens with the diaphragm in front.

To determine the actual rapidity, or speed, of a photographic or a projection objective it is necessary to investigate the subject from a rather different viewpoint than that of the usual text-book, and we will proceed to the investigation with the assistance of Fig. 1.

If we take a doublet, or other compound photographic objective, with the diaphragm between the front and rear components, and regard the diaphragm through the front component, we see a virtual image of the diaphragm which is situated somewhat beyond the actual diaphragm-plane. The image is virtual because the diaphragm is situated closer to the lens than its principal focal length, and this virtual image is also situated on the same side of the front component of the objective as is the actual diaphragm, i. e., the virtual image is situated further toward the back of the objective than the actual plane of the diaphragm. When, next, we reverse the process and view the diaphragm through the rear component of the double objective, we see a similar virtual image of the diaphragm, which, in this instance, is situated further toward the front of the objective than the actual diaphragm-plane. These virtual images of the diaphragm, seen through the front and the rear components of an objective, were termed by Abbe the entrance-pupil and the exit-pupil, and we will now consider their action more narrowly. Since the entrance and exit-pupils of a lens system are virtual images, they have no physical existence, and cannot be measured or manipulated like the customary diaphragm of an objective. As the pupils, however, are images of the actual diaphragm, they can replace in the fullest degree the action of the diaphragm upon the light rays traversing an objective.

In studying the action and functions of the entrance and exit-pupils it is convenient, however, to be able to imagine their location with respect to other parts of an objective, and the following graphical method of locating the positions of the pupils was proposed by Professor Abbe.

In Fig. 1, L_1 and L_2 are the two components of a double objective, while D is a diaphragm placed between the components. A chief ray from a point O′ of the object is refracted at the front component, L_1, passes next through the center of the diaphragm, D, and after further refraction at the rear component, L_2, forms an image I′ of the object point O′ If, now, we prolong the chief-ray from O′ as a straight line until it cuts the axis, the point of intersection of this straight line with the axis will be the position of the entrance-pupil, E.-P., or the virtual image of D regarded through L_1. Similarly, if we prolong backwards the chief-ray refracted by the component L_2 as a straight line until it cuts the axis, the point of intersection of this straight line with the axis will be the position of the exit-pupil, A.-P., or the virtual image of D as seen through L_2.

Note—In order to facilitate our explanation we have chosen a chief-ray of such great inclination to the axis that the entrance and exit-pupils appear as situated within the objective. The pupils may be, and frequently are, entirely outside of the objective, however, but this in no way prevents them from acting as diaphragms which regulate the volume of light which can traverse the objective.)

A little consideration will now show that in the case of a compound objective, with the diaphragm between the components, the diameter of the actual diaphragm opening is not a measure of the rapidity, or the total amount of light which the objective can transmit, for it will be readily apparent that a bundle of rays which falls upon the front surface of L_1 is refracted, or condensed, somewhat in passing through L_1, and could, after refraction by this component, pass through a diaphragm of somewhat smaller diameter than the full aperture of L_1 without any part being intercepted. As we have already noted that the entrance-pupil is the image of the diaphragm, as seen from outside of the component L_1, it is therefore clear that the entrance-pupil, E.-P., will regulate the cross-section of the bundle of rays which enters the objective, while the exit-pupil, A.-P., being the virtual image of the entrance-pupil as projected by the complete system, concurs in its action on the transmitted rays. We are therefore now able to define the relative aperture of a compound objective as the ratio of the diameter of the entrance-pupil to the focal length, while the "angular aperture" of the system is represented by the angle, θ, which the entrance-pupil subtends at an axial point of the object (shown by dots and dashes in Fig. 1.)

The true effective-aperture of a photographic objective may be determined in the following simple manner: Focus the objective for infinity, then remove the ground-glass, or focussing-screen, substituting in its place a piece of opaque black cardboard containing a pinhole situated in line with the axis of the objective. A bright source of light, preferably emitting parallel rays (the sun, for instance,), is allowed to fall upon the card containing the pinhole; then, upon placing a piece of ground-glass over the front combination of the objective a bright disc will be seen on the ground-glass. The diameter of this disc is the effective-aperture of the objective.

To further illustrate the influence of the pupils upon the relative rapidity of an objective, we supply Fig. 2, which shows the formation of an image under different conditions by three separate systems. The distance of the object from the entrance-pupil (supposed infinite) and its size, is the same in all three cases; hence, its radiating capacity is also the same in the three cases. In the cases (a) and (b) the size of the image is the same, but the diameters of the entrance-pupils are very different. It is therefore evident that in case (b) the image must appear brighter, since the quantity of light producing the image is much greater in the case of (b) than in the case of (a), while the light is spread out upon a surface of equal area in both instances.

Comparing, now, the cases of (b) and (c), we note that the diameters of the entrance-pupils are equal; hence, the quantity of light entering the respective systems is exactly the same. This quantity of light is, however, transferred to a larger image surface in the case of (c) than in the case of (b), and the two image surfaces are as the squares of their diameters, $V^2_c : V^2_b$. The intensity of the illumination of the two image surfaces must there-that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN." Insist on that name and save money.

fore be in the inverse ratio, $V^2_b : V^2_c$. The illumination of the two surfaces stands thus inversely as the squares of their sizes, other things being equal.

NOTE—In the case of an object situated at a finite distance in front of the lens, i. e., divergent incident rays, the intensity of the image would be governed by the rays corresponding to that portion of a sphere, with the object as center, which could pass through the entrance-pupil. This is illustrated diagrammatically by the dotted lines in (c) Fig. 2.

We now come to an immensely interesting property of the entrance-pupil, which is illustrated by Fig. 1. As will be inferred from a study of the diagram, the rays from O′ and O″ come from the most extreme parts of the object which the objective can embrace, and the prolongation of these rays as straight lines come together at C, which is the center of the entrance-pupil, E.-P. If, therefore, we were to close down the diaphragm, D, to a very small opening, all the points of the object-space would be reproduced in the image-space by chief-rays.

A chief-ray is a ray which passes through the center of the diaphragm, and, as the entrance-pupil is an image of the diaphragm opening, it follows that the operative chief-rays must also pass through, or intersect one another in the center of the entrance-pupil; hence, the center of the entrance-pupil is readily seen to be the center of perspective of the object space as viewed through the objective considered.

The investigation of the object space from the center of the entrance-pupil is an operation of great value to the optical projectionist, for in this way it can be readily ascertained if the light source of a stereopticon or motion picture projector is of sufficient dimensions, or at the proper distance, to fill the objective with light. This phase of the subject has been demonstrated in our previous article on "The Regulation of the Rays in Cinematographic Projection Systems" (NEWS of February 9, 1918), so we pass to some further considerations which will be of interest to photographers.

The majority of landscape or architectural photographs are said by even the casual critic to be incorrect in their rendition of perspective, and, upon superficial consideration, this really appears to be the case, but it was long ago put on record, and can be readily proved, that aside from distortion errors (due to faulty lens corrections) every photograph is seen in correct perspective when viewed in the proper manner, and it is easy to make it apparent that this must be so. Suppose we took a photograph of a landscape or other view and made a lantern-slide from the resulting negative. If, then, we leave the camera focussed on the same view, place our eye at the center of the entrance-pupil of the objective (which we know is the center of perspective of the object-space), and hold the lantern-slide in front of the objective, it is apparent that there must be some position at which the lantern slide can be held so that its image will exactly coincide with the view seen from the center of the entrance-pupil of the objective. Such a position can be readily located, and in the case of landscapes or other distant views it is found that the position at which the image on the slide (viewed from the center of the entrance-pupil) coincides with the original view is equal to the equivalent focal length of the objective, or, more exactly, it is equal to the focal extension at which the photograph was taken. The rule for seeing photographs in their correct perspective is therefore obvious; they must be viewed at a distance from the center of the rotation of the eye equal to the focal length of the objective with which they were photographed. This fact was pointed out in 1861 by that brilliant pioneer in photographic optics, Robert H. Bow, of Edinburgh[1], but his suggestion lay dormant until about fifteen years ago, when it was given considerable development by Dr. von Rohr, who was the first to draw well-merited attention to the optical writings of this early exponent of correct optical theory. A study of von Rohr's works shows that he was indebted to Bow's early papers for his inspiration along several important lines of optical theory, and in the example which has just been considered, von Rohr introduced an instrument (the Verant) for viewing photographs in their correct perspective. Such a device is a necessity in viewing pictures made with hand-cameras, or with short-focus lenses, so as to reveal the correct perspective of the original.

Music and the Picture

Lyon & Healy Sell Fotoplayer and Robert Morton Pipe Organ

ONE of the most notable agencies made for some time in the piano trade is that announced recently whereby the products of the American Photo Player Company, manufacturers of the famous Fotoplayer instruments and Robert-Morton pipe organs, will be handled by Lyon & Healy in the future for the central territory.

After having made a thorough investigation of the field, Lyon & Healy completed the arrangements with W. R. McArthur, sales manager in the central and southern territory, and A. L. Abrams, vice-president of the American Photo Player Company, and are making elaborate preparations for presenting the line.

Mr. McArthur, who has maintained headquarters for the past year or more at 14 East Jackson Boulevard, where salesrooms have been conducted, will in the future make his home in the new Fotoplayer department of Lyon & Healy, to be opened shortly, as will also A. L. Abrams, vice-president of the Photo Player Company, who has heretofore made his home in San Francisco. The lease on their present quarters at 14 East Jackson Boulevard expires May 1 and these rooms will be vacated at that time.

Large, fully equipped studios for displaying the various models of the Fotoplayer will be opened in the Lyon & Healy building. In addition to this a special De Luxe model will be installed in the Lyon & Healy Recital Hall, thus adding another feature to their popular auditorium. The Model 50, which is to be placed in the hall, operates on the ordinary 88-note player-piano roll, like all Fotoplayers.

In the accompanying illustrations are shown the large new plant of the American Photo Player Company at Van Nuys, Cal., "built in the mountains," where the Robert-Morton pipe organs are manufactured, and also the main plant of the company in Berkeley, Cal., whence the Fotoplayer instruments come. California mountain scenery near these factories and the spacious gardens, which are especially noticeable in the Van Nuys plant, are unique for musical instrument factories. The Van Nuys plant is one of the most modern manufacturing institutions in the country.

Lyon & Healy's slogan, "Everything Known in Music," is widely known, and it seems particularly fitting that this orchestral instrument be added to the Lyon & Healy line.

It Takes More Than a Large Orchestra to Solve "The Music Problem" Satisfactorily

THE following interesting letter has been received from Mr. Albert F. Wayne, conductor of the Stanley theatre orchestra, Philadelphia, Pa., with a view to suggesting how the very best and most suitable music could be obtained for high-class motion pictures. Mr. Wayne is showing us in this letter that the orchestra alone is not the solution of the music problem—it takes more than that—and we fully agree with him, especially after we have read his views on this particular point.

That music and the picture is here to stay is an accepted fact. We may rest assured, however, of one thing, if the pictures and the theatres are to have continued success, a broader and more musical conception than the so-called "Motion Picture Music," as now given to the public, will have to be striven for.

What then must be done to enhance its value to the performance?

To distort, as is being done in the larger theatres, all over the country, employing orchestras of symphonic size, its value beyond all proportions, does not seem to me to be the proper course to pursue.

Art calls for perfect balance, above all else, and one does not find this where the music predominates; not played with the picture, but over it and against it, most of the time. Would it not be better for all of us to aim for the perfect merging of music and picture into a complete unit of effect? Surely such an ideal is worth striving for. Music should establish the mood, provide the atmosphere, infuse the mute action of the screen into life. It can portray in tones, every emotion known. It can almost take the place of the spoken word. This being true, why can we not use our orchestras with appropriate tonal volume, to underline every detail of the scenes shown upon the screen? And right here comes the big question—tonal volume. It is a big one and as every conductor, organist or pianist providing the music for the picture has his own method of working out a musical accompaniment, they answer it each in his own way; in most cases a perfect bedlam of noise, without taking thought that no matter how fine the picture may be the audience cannot concentrate upon it alone, so that they forget all else, and lose themselves in the silent drama, and that is what they must do to thoroughly enjoy it, unless the music is soothing and melodious enough to lull them into the land of imagination.

Our performances must satisfy and please, and we best please when the music is "felt but never heard." Why destroy all this then with loud music? The orchestra can be used softly and it can blare and crash loudly when necessary, but in my opinion should always be subservient and never, in any case, predominate.

The desire of most conductors to crowd as many big musical moments into every performance, giving no thought to the fact that each photoplay has its climax or "punch" as it is called, instead of gradually, with the picture and music, leading the audience right up to the big scene, wherever it be, and then "putting it over" is one cause for inartistic results. The orchestra taking all the main scenes, or all they can find suitable music for is another.

I cannot see why the wealth of good music written by the masters, for organ alone, and not available for the orchestra, should be denied the public, because the "rules of the house," never considering the artistic at any time, call for the orchestra to play almost continually, and when the men need a few minutes rest, the organ is simply used to fill in. The filling in, is usually improvising, by the organist, until the orchestra resumes again.. This condition does not exist at the Stanley theatre, I am happy to say. We lay out our musical plots so that the work is almost evenly divided between orchestra and organ and "no improvising" by the organist is tolerated, and Managing Director J. E. Hennessy, who supervises every performance, holding the opinion with which I agree, that no matter how it may be done, it does not please the audience, as they never hear anything they know.

The film directors, in making and assembling their pictures never, in any case, take the music into consideration and as long as this condition exists, the highest artistic results cannot be attained.

The engaging of men to compile "music cue sheets" is a step forward in the right direction, though not solving the problem by any means. Let us hope that some day, men qualified to do this work, will be consulted or engaged by the producers, before the picture is made. Then and then only, will our work be made easier, artistic results secured and the public given that which is best.

Very sincerely yours,
ALBERT F. WAYNE,
Conductor, Stanley theatre Orchestra.

SPECIAL SUBSCRIPTION OFFER ON G. SCHIRMER'S FAMOUS GALAXY EDITION

G. Schirmer's Galaxy of Orchestra Music is a serial publication, two numbers being issued on the first of every month. It was started a few years ago in response to a demand for an orchestra edition on modern principles and in keeping with the improvement in the orchestras themselves.. The GALAXY has steadily increased in size since its beginning, until there are now 95 separate numbers. These are published for either small or full orchestra with a piano or organ accompaniment and are so arranged that a smaller combination of instruments may be used if the larger number is not available.

A yearly subscription includes twenty-four numbers (or their equivalent in double numbers), two on the first of every month. A half-yearly subscription includes twelve numbers (or their equivalent in double numbers), two on the first of every month. Subscriptions may begin at any time, and, if desired, may be dated back to include former numbers. Yearly subscriptions may be dated back not more than eleven months; half-yearly subscriptions not more than five months. A reasonable number of extra string parts is included with each number, if desired.

[G. Schirmer's Galaxy Edition consists of a series of the most excellent compositions—appropriate for the motion picture musician. We therefore suggest that you write at once to G. Schirmer, 3 East 43rd Street, New York City, asking for rates, etc.—THE EDITOR.]

It is of vital importance that all cues, "Violin Solos," "Silence Marks," etc., should be played as indicated on this cue sheet.

1—"Second Movement" (3/8 Allegretto), from the Egyptian Ballet by Luigini (4 minutes and 15 seconds), until—S: Dancers leave the table.

2—Silence (1 minute), until—S: Mary Garden Dolores playing violin.

3—Violin Solo, "The Song of the Soul," by Breil (50 seconds), until—T: "I have played a song for myself."

4—Silence (30 seconds), until—T: "And now a song for you."

5—Violin Solo (Vulgar 2/4 Rag) to action (45 seconds), until—T: "Riccardo Giotti, a young musician."

6—Continue to action (50 seconds), until—S: Dolores finishes the violin solo.

7—Silence (40 seconds), until—T: "My dear boy, any intrusion?"

8—Theme (4 minutes), until—T: "Tell this young man, etc."

9—Tragic Theme, ff, by Paul Vely (3 minutes and 30 seconds), until—T: "I despise you, and I am trying, etc."

10—Allegro Movement from "Elijah Fantasia," by Mendelssohn (2 minutes), until—T: "And so Dolores cast off, etc."

11—"Blue Violets" (Mazurka), by Eilenberg (1 minute), until—S: Dolores takes the violin.

Note—To be played ppp.

12—Watch action very carefully (25 seconds), until—T: "It's a wonderful song."

General Comments

FRED VANDERSLOOT says that one of the nicest phases of the music game is the letters from musicians and singers carrying compliments to the publisher for bringing out a good number. Fred has been prompted to make this remark as a result of the many missives he has received since he published his new instrumental hits, "Nona" and "Love's Melody."

In the weekly report slips coming from some of the manufacturers of mechanical instruments last week Gilbert & Friedland's ballad, "Are You From Heaven?" ran third, with "I'm a Brother of Lily of the Valley" sixth.

Sophie Tucker, the Mary Garden of ragtime, has collected more than $10,000 for smokes for the boys in France. This week she is the headliner at Keith's Boston house. Last week she starred at the Riverside, and during her spare moments she took up collections for the Knights of Columbus War Fund. Next week she will hold a monster cabaret in the Claridge Hotel and will give the proceeds to the smoke fund.

Adeline Francis, another favorite with managers and musicians all over the country, has started a campaign to collect contributions for phonographs for the soldiers in the trenches. Last week she topped the bill at the Orpheum, Brooklyn.

"The Military Waltz," the latest by Frederick K. Logan, composer of "Missouri Waltz," looks to become as big a hit as "Missouri."

EVERY day last week Leo Feist had two singers at the War Savings Stamps at the Flatiron Building. And when the men were not singing they went among the crowd selling stamps. They proved to be good stamp salesmen in the bargain.

Tell Taylor has finally reached New York and is working on his big number, "Oh, Min." He has his offices at 145 West 45th street. Pat Howley is keeping him company there.

"America, Make the World Safe for Democracy!" and "Love Cannot Say Good-by," both published by the Times Music Co., 145 West 45th street, are getting many calls from leaders throughout the country.

Fred Forster, who was in Seattle last week, has started a campaign to make "Blue Rose Waltz," by Frederick K. Logan, as big a seller as "Missouri Waltz," by Logan. Even at this time orders for 100,000 copies of "Missouri Waltz" from jobbers are not unusual.

A report from the New York local says that some of the demands made by the musicians here have been met.

Kalmar & Abrahams Music Co., have been reported to be ready to close shop, with Mr. Abrahams going over to the Waterson, Berlin & Snyder Co.

Theatres Changing Hands

ILLINOIS

Joseph A. Humphreys and Joseph McCarthy, who leased the Grand and Empress theatres at Taylorville about two months ago, have dissolved partnership. Mr. Humphreys will retain the leases and personally manage the theatres.

C. W. Joehrendt has sold the Princess theater at Monticello to Ed. Thorpe.

The Gayety theatre, Kankakee, which has been closed practically all winter, was reopened on the 17th of March under the management of Jack Pierce and Mark Shannon.

INDIANA

William Francis has bought the Lyric theatre at Greensburg from James Alcorn.

The Auditorium theatre building, situated in the heart of South Bend's business district, was recently sold by the Studebaker Vehicle Co. of South Bend to George A. Robertson for $215,000. The theatre has a seating capacity of 1,500 and has been regarded as one of the most profitable amusement enterprises in the city. The new owner announces that the building will be razed to make room for a more modern store and office building.

WISCONSIN

Otto Weber has again assumed the management of the Mermac theatre at West Bend.

The Kewaskum Amusement Co. have reopened their motion picture theatre at Kewaskum after several weeks of darkness.

The Toy theatre, Second street near Grand avenue, Milwaukee, has reverted to the management of Charles Toy, who will reopen same on Easter Sunday. It is now undergoing a thorough overhauling prior to its opening.

Liberty Added to Mercy Theatres

ANOTHER splendid new theatre was added to the Frederick Mercy Theatrical Enterprises with the opening of the Liberty, in Yakima, Wash. The Mercy enterprises have all been so well conducted that they have earned a wide popularity and the reception that has been given the new house since the opening date, March 12, has assured its success.

Liberty is located in the business section. The building is constructed of steel, brick and concrete, with ornamental effects around the doorways and windows. The entrance is at the junction of the streets and here there is an illuminated marquee, protecting awaiting crowds from inclement weather. As opened the theatre seats 900, but this is to be considerably increased when the Congregational Church next door is torn down and much space added to the auditorium.

Foyer, Liberty Theatre, Yakima, Wash.

Entering the theatre one is struck with the commodious foyer finished in white with attractive draperies and indirect lighting. The auditorium is similarly finished, the ceiling having the panelled effect. The main auditorium has gray tinted walls with black, gold and green Pompeiian patterns while the hangings are of the same colors and designs. In addition to the indirect lights in the ceiling there are also sidelights.

At the front of the house is the orchestra pit and there is also installed a splendid Fotoplayer. At the rear of the house are the loges which are shut off from the remainder of the theatre by green curtains. Wicker chairs of unusual size make the occupants unusually comfortable. In fact, all of the seats supply the limit in comfort with their wide green leather cushions and their comfortable backs.

Ladies' retiring rooms are located at the left side of the upper floor and the gentlemen's at the right. Telephone booths and drinking fountains are located in the foyer.

Recognition of the new house was given on the opening night when all the leading officials of the city attended. "Star Spangled Banner" was played as a dedicatory anthem and then followed the regular program, including the overture, "Mignon," an animated pictorial of the Liberty staff and other employes of the Mercy Amusement Company, then "Tamin Target Center" and finally "Bab's Diary." Artcraft, Paramount and Vitagraph pictures are being used at the new house, there being three changes a week, the Sunday bill running for but the single day. In addition to the feature on Sunday, "Vengeance—and the Woman," the serial is being shown.

Queen Theatre Delights Dallas

IN the remodelled and rebuilt Queen theatre, Dallas, Texas, has one of the most creditable theatres in the country. This house, which is owned by E. H. Hulsey, who operates a string of houses, was reopened on February 1 and has been making good with a rush ever since.

The Queen occupies a plot, 50 by 90 feet, at the corner of Elm and Akard streets, in the heart of the business section of Dallas. It is built of steel, brick and concrete, and has a seating capacity of 766. There are many improvements in the theatre that put it in the class with the most modern.

One of these innovations is a commodious library on the second floor which is at the use of the patrons. It is furnished with tables, lounges and easy chairs and the latest copies of motion picture magazines and newspapers are provided. The management invites the public to use this room as a meeting place and it has become one of the most popular places in Dallas.

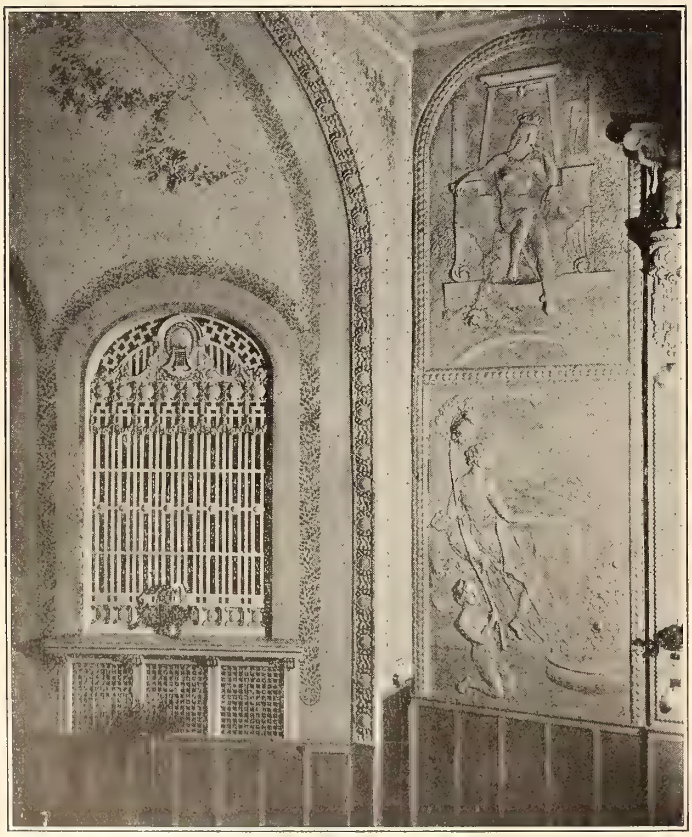
The mezzanine floor includes a smoking room for men from which they may witness the show. This has glass windows to prevent the smoke from reaching other parts of the house and is equipped with comfortable seats. A special rest room has also been equipped for women patrons. There is a nurse in attendance in case of emergency. On the third floor there is another rest room, with hot and cold baths for employes' use.



Detail Of Side Wall, Proscenium And One Of Organ Openings, Queen Theatre, Dallas

The projection booth is constructed of steel and asbestos and is therefore absolutely fireproof. The projection room is equipped with Powers machines which have a throw of 47 feet to a Mirror screen. The projection equipment includes all the most modern apparatus.

The color scheme of the theatre proper is lavender and purple with gray carpets. The rest rooms are also finished in lavender and dark purple and every department of the house is splendidly furnished.

The ventilating system is of local construction and is said to offer something new in the way of forcing in the fresh air and forcing out the stale. Hot draughts are circulated through the house in winter by the same system.

The lighting system is indirect and the house has been so equipped that the various color effects can be obtained in any shade or volume desired. There is also a perfume plant in the basement from which various odors can be sprayed through the auditorium.

The lobby of the theatre is 20 by 15 feet, and is equipped with the National box-office equipment.

Program is changed twice weekly, Artcraft, Paramount, Goldwyn and Metro pictures being used. Eight shows of about seven reels each are given every day, ten and twenty cents, plus the war tax being charged in the afternoon, and ten, fifteen and twenty-five in the evening.

E. H. Hulsey is president of the Queen Theatre Company, Herschel Stuart, general manager, and John D. DeStefano, manager of the house.

Typhoon Equips More Houses

NEW ORLEANS branch of the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating Company announces the installation of a number of plants in that section. Mr. Ernest Glantsberg, president and chief engineer of the company, is now in New Orleans taking charge of this work. The new contracts include the Plaza and Crescent theatres, New Orleans; Loberty, Donaldsville, La.; Liberty Plaquemine, La.; Lomo, Hattiesburg, Miss.; Isis, Best and Liberty, Houston, Texas.

New Orleans is rapidly becoming the "Typhoon city" since there are over seventy establishments there equipped with this system.

ARIZONA

Plans have been completed whereby the Airdome theatre of Douglas will be the finest place of its kind in the entire Southwest. Construction arrangements have been under consideration for several weeks, and the management has been contemplating making the improvement for more than a year. The bids are all in, and it is expected that the work will be commenced by April 1. J. M. Sparks has received the contract. The building will be situated on the southwest corner of F avenue and Tenth street, will cover the whole lot, and the dimensions will be 74 x 100 feet. It will be two stories in height, and the seating capacity will be 1,100. It is the announced intention to make this theater the finest between Dallas and the Pacific Coast.

CALIFORNIA

J. F. Shepherd, of Stockton, was the successful bidder on the Lodi theatre, at Lodi, and he has been awarded the contract to erect the playhouse at a cost of $25,811. Work has already been started, and the building is to be completed and ready for occupancy within four months.

The theatre will be a beautiful structure, made of buff tapestry brick with terra cotta trimming. It will be 50 x 150 in size, and the front will be three stories high, with two storerooms on the ground.:

The Lodi theatre will seat 1,000 people. It will be operated by A. A. Richards, of the Tokay theatre, who will take a 10-year lease on the premises.

Plans have been completed for the opening of a "Little Art Theatre," in the old studio of Douglas Tilden, at Twenty-first and Franklin streets, Oakland, to be operated under the direction of Jane Edgerton and her sister, Irene Wheeler. "Little Theatre" will present plays every other week on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings and Saturday matinees. One-act plays will be offered. The opening week will see presented "The Miracle of St. Anthony," by Maeterlinck, "A Fan and Two Candlesticks," by Mary MacMillan, and "Eugenically Speaking," by Ed Goodman. Plans for French, Italian and Spanish drama in their native tongues are also under way. The old barn, which later became the sculptor's studio, has been remodeled into a theatre seating 225 people.

The contract for the new Victoria theatre, to be erected at San Diego, has been let to the Lily-Fletcher Company, and work will be commenced at once.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Preliminary work on the construction of Moore's new Arcadia theatre, Eleventh and F streets, Washington, is moving apace, a large gang of workmen being busy razing the buildings now covering the site.

ILLINOIS

The new Midway theatre being erected in Rockford will not be ready for opening until June 1, due to the delay in steel delivery, Max and Aaron Asher, lessees of the house, so announce. The new theatre will have a seating capacity of 2,000 on one floor. There will be a wide foyer back of the seats, with five aisles entering therefrom. Asher Bros. intend to use a large orchestra in connection with the Bartola now being installed.

R. C. Cluster, of Christopher, is contemplating the opening of a new motion picture theatre at Carlinville.

A CALL TO ARMS!

To the Exhibitors of the State of New York:—

What Are You in the Picture Business for?

Do you want to protect your investment and make some real money, or stay in the same old rut and just " get by," or possibly be put out of business?

The Motion Picture Option Bill has been passed by the Assembly at Albany. It will come before the Senate for final vote within a day or two.

Prompt and persistent effort upon your part is immediately required to pass this bill through the Senate. Get word to your Senator at Albany at once urging him to vote for the Thompson-Welsh Motion Picture Option Bill.

Don't let the good work already accomplished be wasted!!

"The Girl From Beyond"

If your audiences like a love story that is different—that gives entirely new sides and angles to the eternal triangle—this powerful heart-drama should hold an irresistible appeal for them.

Cynthia Stewart had been given wealth and jewels and social position and good clothes. She decided that she could do without love. And the swift events that followed her decision make up a most entrancing story—even more entertaining on the screen than in the well-known book, "A Texan Romance," from which it has been skillfully adapted.

"WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT "OVER THE TOP"

"Zit" in the Evening Journal—
"Wonderful Picture! A triumph in every sense! I thought the roof was going to cave in from applause!"

Evening Telegram—
"The best war picture yet shown. Never has a picture been so enthusiastically received."

Evening Mail—
"Even the most enthusiastic readers of 'Over the Top,' did not anticipate the possibilities unfolded on the screen."

New York American—
"Stirring, startling, sensational—an illustration extraordinary of Empey's Book."

Evening Sun—
"Exciting and impressive! One of the best fictional war pictures—an inspiration to all who are fortunate enough to see it."

The Sun—
"Empey lives again the episodes which brought him close to death in the fight for his country."

Evening World—
"Will become talked of as the most artistic representations of war conditions yet made."

Tribune—
"It is, as nearly as may be, a story of Empey's experience in the trenches."

The World—
"Exciting realism stirred crowded audience to enthusiastic applause."

The Herald—
"Fairly lifted spectators out of their chairs with enthusiasm. Differs from any picture hitherto seen in its impression of being phenomenally close to realities."

The Kind Of Picture Mr. Lourie Wants In His Boston Theatres

MR. Jacob Lourie, owner of the Modern, Beacon and other Boston theatres, is wealthy and successful. Hundreds of exhibitors watch his policies and decisions and follow them—for Jacob Lourie knows the dollar values of pictures.

"I want stars"—says Mr. Lourie—"whose names are on the tongues of the public—stars who inspire popular affection—stars who interest all classes and offend none.

"I want stories"—says Mr. Lourie—"with backbone in them—stories that can stand up alone—stories that appeal to the mind through the eyes. I want stories that pull the public into my front doors as an electric magnet attracts scrap-iron."

It is indeed fine to be able instantly to give Mr. Lourie exactly the kind of production he desires—

Gentlemen:-

I wish to congratulate you on the first few releases of your "Screen Telegram".

We have been using a news reel at the Victoria theatre for the past three years and at no time could we very well consider that there was any news reel in the market that could compare with it until the entrance into the field of "Screen Telegram".

I can foresee big things for your reel and I will say to you frankly that I consider the "Screen Telegram" at the head of the procession of news releases.

Deserves Your Confidence and Support

-- because untried schemes have no place in it. Evolution -- rather than Revolution -- is the road it is traveling.

Read these chief points of difference. They are your and our guaranty of success: —

Absolute Administrative Freedom: It is free from Producer and Exhibitor control — assuring you the best productions at equitable prices.

Stabilizing Factor Introduced: We are more than film distributors — we are co-ordinators, acting as a balancing factor between Producer and Exhibitor; and working in the interest of both.

Costly Exchanges Eliminated: We are free from costly investments in exchange offices, enabling us to save and serve the exhibitor and sell him product at a fair price.

A Fully Financed, Profitable Business: You are offered copartnership in a going concern — fully financed and making money — which, on its present output, has already signed up over a million dollars worth of business! Your interest grows as we grow.

Maximum Profit Sharing: The Hodkinson Copartnership Plan—and no other—offers YOU, the Exhibitor, approximately 70% of the heretofore misplaced distributing profit.

Capable, Courageous Leader: It is headed, guided, and directed by W. W. Hodkinson, who, by his record as an Exhibitor and Distributor, has earned the right to your confidence.

If you believe that a healthy industry will further your personal profit, let us send you all the details at once in confidential letter.

"NOJUNK!"

IT is not the name of some strange ape just discovered by an African exploring party, but it is the single word that can best describe Inter-Ocean's policy as related to the grade of pictures it sells. Under no circumstances, will we handle what is known as " junk " film. We say emphatically, "Nojunk!" We have had films of the " junk " sort offered us at our own figure, but in every instance have declined to do business with the folks making the offers. We will not recommend junk film to the foreign buyer because we know that the use of such film tends to lose him money in the long run—and that means dissatisfaction with us, whom he expects to know his field. The foreign buyer's representative in New York should guard his client against " bad buys " in pictures, and earn his livelihood on that basis. Therefore, the representative cannot conscientiously recommend second-hand films, but will pass up the profits and retain the confidence and the patronage of the foreign customers he is engaged in supplying.

O. HENRY Stories Relieve that Hunger for Intimate and Genial Heart Interest Which Every Audience Brings Expectantly to Your THEATRE!

William Dunn and Miriam Miles in "Nemesis and the Candy Man," by O. Henry.

Here is an O. Henry story that grasps the huge drama of life and distills from it an exhilarating cosmic essence.

In "Nemesis and the Candy Man," four strands of romance are twined by the master hand into a complex cord of romance—which he snaps in a surprise climax that is both bitter and sweet.

One of the delightful things about O. Henry stories on the screen is that every child and woman and man understands them and appreciates their clever twists.

AN army at the front constitutes the militant force of a nation. It is the physical expression of a nation's morale.

Back of that army is always a cause. There is something for which it bleeds. It is either a prince or a principle. The difference is wide.

Thank God the army of the United States has never fought for a prince. There is no monarch's pride sending it across seas. The knighthood of the nation bears, as ever, a free lance and no gonfalon save that of Liberty. It fights for a principle.

What is the morale of a nation with such an army? What of the American people? Who is going to be mute?

TRIANGLE

The Business End

OVER IN EUROPE the men in the front are bearing the burden of the fighting—and getting the glory.

The columns of the newspapers ring with their exploits.

That's the spectacular end of war.

At home, far from the battle line, millions of men and women go quietly about the task of supplying the food, the ammunition and the necessities of the men that are winning the glory.

That is the business end of the war.

The motion picture business presents a striking analogy to this war situation.

While producers are boasting of their stars and their wonderful tales; while they are raising their voices in a great din over the spectacular features of their product, the vast army of important details that really determine the consistent success of the exhibitor are neglected.

But not in Triangle service are they overlooked.

This is one of the remarkable features of Triangle.

When a Triangle exhibitor receives his film he finds that it is in perfect shape. It has been thoroughly inspected and is in proper condition before it leaves the exchange.

TRIANGLE

A Traffic Department, in constant touch with each exchange, supervises all shipments, and routing. This is unique and was inaugurated in the film business by Triangle. Films are shipped far enough in advance to reach their destinations in time, and by the most economical route.

Or when the reel boy calls for his pictures in the morning, he finds them ready. No delay and no worry about this important element in the business.

Every employee in the service of Triangle is courteous. They believe the exhibitor is a gentleman and is deserving of every consideration.

Advertising requirements are handled with a precision and care that leaves nothing to be desired. Publicity material is sent out sufficiently in advance of release to be of 100% value to the exhibitor.

Triangle could not serve the exhibitor better if it were owned and operated cooperatively by Triangle exhibitors according to their own ideas and ideals. Film rentals are the most attractive in the business and exhibitors who know how to promote pictures can always make money with Triangle. Triangle's policy of the fair and square deal, frankness and helpfulness is making history in a business which has known many woes and tribulations for the exhibitor.

Are you progressing, prospering and profiting?

If not . . . TRIANGLE.

The Play and the Picture

IT is to be hoped that Mr. Metcalfe, Life's dramatic critic, has seen " The Bluebird."

Mr. Metcalfe, as our readers know, complains that motion pictures do not uphold art, nor are they up to the taste of the patrons of the stage.

Possibly our experience last week will be of interest to him.

On one evening we saw a stage play—" The Copperhead "—and on another a picture—" The Bluebird."

The contrast was impressive.

We have great admiration for Mr. Augustus Thomas's ability to write stage successes and a large measure of pride in his standing as an American playwright. " The Copperhead " ranks well among this season's plays. But its audience, it was our impression, sat through nearly two hours of downright entertainment lethargy to witness finally a stirring climax, which will have to be credited largely to Mr. Lionel Barrymore's ability to act.

At the Rivoli Theatre a crowded house sat spell-bound, pleasure-wrapt, absorbed every minute and hungry for more—over a photoplay.

* * * *

"THE Copperhead " as an entertainment would not be tolerated, we are sure, by the Rivoli audience —nor by the Strand or Rialto audiences, nor by the audiences of any first class picture theatre. " The Copperhead " in pictures could not have been rescued by an actor's fine work; and so, as a stage play, it gives striking tribute to the stage's exclusive possession of the actors' voice and living presence.

" The Bluebird " has been splendidly presented on the stage, but—surely anyone will admit it—not with the artistry nor nearly with the effect achieved in its motion picture presentation.

In fact, here, just as clearly, is the evidence of the motion picture's exclusive possibilities and achievements.

And will Mr. Metcalfe say that these are not the achievements of art?

We believe not.

" The Bluebird " has been fully reviewed in this magazine.

We prefer to speak of it here as a splendid, complete and finished proof of the art of the motion picture.

One might term it the motion painting of the printed word.

The printed word is great but the motion painting is greater—greater as art, and greater still because, irrespective of class, creed, taste, education or indeed any such equivalent whatever, Maeterlincks' great story of happiness will now delight the eyes and elevate the hearts of the whole world's millions.

* * * *

WE hope, too, that Mr. Metcalfe has seen " Hearts of the World."

Here again a review is unessential.

Here again, so plain that all may see, is the realization of the picture's art and province.

The heart of the world war should be told so that all the world now and all the world to come may know it.

This story has been told in " Hearts of the World " as only the motion picture can tell it.

It is artistic; it is literary; it is very broad in scope; it is finally creative; it is finished in detail; it is dramatic.

You could not cramp it to the stage, nor confine it to the canvas; nor give it such brilliance through the printed word.

And all the world may see it; be taught by it; and be caught by it.

Here is the art potentiality and the effect potentiality of the motion picture.

It is very great and very wonderful.

* * * *

TO fit these pictures to the commerce of the picture of today we would like to point out a few lessons as we see them.

Widely different as the two pictures are they are both great in themes. Each has a universal appeal because each has a human heart appeal.

However splendidly a picture may be produced the theme is of the utmost consequence. More and more the fact stands out that the very genius of picture production today lies in the selection of the story. This fact can not be made too emphatic.

Again, it is deeply regrettable that the machinery of the industry today is so geared that such productions are doomed to the picture houses' short runs.

But there is this compensation: Such pictures will do much to hasten the day of longer runs.

And this day, the anticipation of which fills us with great optimism, will so broaden the field from every angle of art and commerce that the present era gives but promise of the one to come.

Speaking Editorially:

The Collection Plate vs. the Box Office

FOR the benefit of other states in which the question of Sunday opening of picture theatres may arise, we give the salient features of the Albany contention.

The opposition—to the local option bill—was weak. Much weaker than last year. There was less talk against unfit pictures. Even so, it was pitifully evident that the prelates present don't go to picture theatres, and don't know anything at all about the motion picture of today. They are still thinking of Indian and cowboy dramas and custard-pie comedies.

These representatives of the clergy, Sabbath societies and Sunday Schools are—consciously or unconsciously—fighting vindictively and humanly for the business of the church against a rival attraction. Positively it is nothing more nor less than the collection plate versus the box-office.

The clergy, evidencing on the face of things their incompetence to gain and hold audiences, are asking the law to step in and monopolize for them a day ordained as one of rest.

The picture theatre today is a community centre, a reading room, if you please, and not a dance hall or race-track. The motion picture today is an illustrated magazine, compassing human thought, emotions and activity, preaching many truths and sermons, as fit to be read on any day of the week as any other kind of magazine.

Business After Necessity

AS we go to press the distribution plans of "Hearts of the World" are announced.

Exhibitors, of course, will be eagerly awaiting this news.

Aside from all commercial questions there is one consideration involved that cannot well be subsidized to any other, and that is: the gravity of this war and this country's part in it—especially with the present tremendous crisis on—demand that so great a war lesson as this be given as speedily as possible to the largest possible number of people in the United States.

Cohan to Griffith

AFTER the premiere of "Hearts of the World" George M. Cohan met D. W. Griffith and said:

"Mr. Griffith, your play's there. It gets hold of the heart. That's all I can say. Why should a buck and wing dancer like me speak about art?"

All of which we proffer to all showmen as a rather good type of a box-office review.

Politicians About Face

THE time is fast approaching when this industry will not have to plead with the politicians for simple recognition and justice.

The proceeding will be reversed and politicians will come to the owners of the screen and to the makers of pictures as they now come to the public press—or at least watch and highly respect its voice.

Exhibitors are learning this fact.

The Motion Picture's Duty

AS our reviews indicate, there are grewsome details in the big war pictures of the day—necessarily so, if the pictures purport to tell the truth.

Mothers will not like these harrowing scenes; and herein is involved a matter of much moment to the producer and exhibitor, for women of course comprise the major part of motion picture audiences.

But the motion picture is destined and is in duty bound to play a very big part in a war which will make or unmake this world—all of its men, women and children and their homes and hearts.

There is a consideration here higher than dramatic values and box-office receipts.

These pictures should and will have wide circulation. And their foundation of fact is a high essential to the knowledge their entertainment values will drive home.

From a Sunday School Teacher

A SUNDAY SCHOOL teacher gave an address at an informal motion picture luncheon in New York last week.

The Sunday School teacher declared that not only did he like motion pictures himself, not only did he attend them, but—

He even occasionally went to them on Sunday, despite the fact that he also taught Sunday School on that day.

What a terrible thought! How can the near-reformers believe that a person exists who could like motion pictures, even see them on Sunday, and still be respectable—not to speak of teaching Sunday School?

Perhaps they will sneer and say, "Who is this Sunday School teacher?"

Is he some unknown, some fictitious character, or some one whom the gigantic Motion Picture Trust has purchased to espouse their vicious cause?

Is he some youth, unversed in the ways of the world, some stripling blinded by the lure of the screen?

Well—

He is Governor Goodrich, of Indiana, prominently mentioned for the next Republican presidential nomination.

The Week's Laugh

AN exhibitor gave us the week's best laugh. We had been talking film odds and ends—this bit of news, that bit of gossip. Suddenly he snorted:

"Say, it all makes me sick. With every Tom, Dick and Harry telling what he's doing to help us poor exhibitors I'm going to suggest a slogan for theatre owners. I think I'll have it printed on my own cards. Here it is:

"'Don't Be Too Good to Us.'"

How's that for an exhibitor slogan? Repeat it:

"Don't Be Too Good to Us."

The Majority's Wishes

AN examination of 180 of our exhibitors' box-office report cards this week shows 123 cities with Sunday motion pictures and 57 with theatres closed. A pretty good argument for laws that will permit local option at least in the matter of the public's recreation.

Serving It with Speed and Ginger

WE'D like to talk about nothing but patriotism all through this page this week. Not of yours, or our own—but of the patriotism of film companies, stars and exhibitors as shown all through the pages of this issue.

Gosh, with every Tom, Dick and Harry in the business pushing with all his might and main the way they are, where is the room for editorials waving the Star-Spangled and urging everyone to rum—tum—tum—teeay.

Take the news story on page 2347 telling of the hearty manner in which the various film companies and stars are backing the Third Liberty Loan.

Guess they won't make the old bell ring some again—and again.

The Big Four in a whirlwind drive, personal appearances of many other big ones, trailers supplied gratuitously by the companies—say, ain't it a grand and glorious feeling?

And just watch the exhibitors line up to a man and grab and push all the booster material they can get.

Just watch them, boys!

* * * *

EVEN the advertising pages give the eagle a chance to scream. Last week there was that pretty insert of sixteen pages, a combination effort of printer, trade papers and the sixteen companies.

And this week there is a page that speaks volumes of patriotism—that one contributed by the staff of the New York headquarters of General Film Company. There's also that page of the Jaxon Film Company.

Right up in front, also, there's a page that all exhibitors should read. It tells about the Red Cross picture being distributed under the direction of Jesse Lasky. Read the details, so that you will know of the opportunity to show a dandy film free and lend a hand to the Red Cross.

* * * *

THAT Motion Picture Option Bill, which gives the residents of each section of New York State a chance to say their own say about Sunday pictures, has taken the hurdle of the Assembly nicely and seems in a fair way to do the same in the Senate.

Which should be some recompense to the large delegation of exhibitors and other film men who sacrificed their business time to journey to Albany last Tuesday.

It was some turn-out, and some battle array of speakers that faced the legislative committee. "Brady opened and Brady closed"—Peter J. and William A.—with the production staged by J. Robert Rubin.

Altogether, it struck all with whom we have spoken as being the most effective offensive the picture has yet made in a legislative hall. Page 2349

* * * *

WE are glad to hear that "My Own United States" is ready for exhibitors, with Metro aiming the gun. The Sherrill production is easily one of the best of the war propaganda pictures, and exhibitors never ask a second question when they learn that they can get a good picture in addition to a patriotic one.

On the whole, the pictures of propaganda such as "The Kaiser," "The Eagle's Eye," "My Four Years in Germany," "The Spy," and "Over the Top," have been attractions that no exhibitor need worry about on the score of entertainment.

But if you want to hear an exhibitor howl, meet him after he has booked a supposed patriotic picture that is just a jumble of tinsel and bosh. Yeow!

* * * *

IT seems certain that out of all the talk, and all the space that each of the movements towards co-operative exhibitor booking is getting, something real will develop. Maybe the Hotel Astor meeting opening yesterday afternoon will do something beside burn up oxygen.

Meanwhile, the baffling part of it all to us is that we can't get any producer to give even a passable imitation of taking any of the movements seriously. You get no more conversation out of the subject of co-operative movements from a producer than you get from a clam on the subject of "Transmigration, or Will the Kaiser in His Next Incarnation Ascend to Snakehood?"

Ask a producer what he thinks of the co-operative tendency and he looks at you blandly, then replies:

"Yes, yes. Fine day, isn't it? But isn't it peculiar, right after a spell of good weather we invariably get bad weather, and immediately following bad weather the weather always improves?"

Of course this bars the independent producers interested in the evoluting Manufacturer to Exhibitor plan and W. W. Hodkinson, who is a producer-distributor-exhibitor plan all by himself.

But, anyway, you'll find all the latest news of co-operative plans on Page 2346

* * * *

WE had another one of those snappy "Letters From a Self-Made Exhibitor" all set up in type for you this week, but the pressure of news at the last minute forced it into the "Next Week" list. We are mentioning it here so that you can get all the fun of waiting for it—because there's pep and powder in next week's instalment.

You see Son Cuthbert is now well on his exhibiting career. He has listened to forty-seven film salesmen, read a couple of trade papers, and he has a little "Secrets of Success" notebook half-filled.

Another good thing coming—a letter from "Anarchist." If the chuckles of the exhibitors present at Albany last Tuesday are any indication our Friend Anarchist hit the bell again last week with his article on "'Salvationizing' the Exhibitor."

Well, we have one ready for week after next that is a regular humdinger for jazz, ginger and joy.

"Co-op" Boosters Active

Rembusch Meeting Opens at Hotel Astor—United Theatres Issues Booklet and Reports Great Progress

WITH a sprinkling of producers and a good-sized attendance of exhibitors, the meeting called by Frank Rembusch to discuss the various proposed methods of co-operative booking by exhibitors opened Monday at the Hotel Astor.

The general scheme outlined was for a representative of each of the proposed plans to state his organization's intentions, and for exhibitors to express their views and ask questions. There was no certainty, however, that all the co-operative plans would consider it essential to be present at the meeting, which was a voluntary, invitation affair.

From the outlook around the Hotel Astor lobby in the early morning hours, the general opinion of the exhibitors seemed to be that there was to be a "smoking out" party. "Now, they'll all have to get up and talk turkey," was the way one up-State showman expressed it.

It seemed probable that after each man had secured his opportunity to speak, Charles Pettijohn, who has been promoting the Manufacturer to Exhibitor scheme, would announce a new scheme sponsored by the independent producers allied with him.

A detailed story of the meeting will appear in next week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Ochs in Atlanta

LEE A. OCHS stopped off in Atlanta last week to explain the United Theatres plan. The report received from MOTION PICTURE NEWS' correspondent at that city follows:

"It looked as though Mr. Ochs was going to have a very successful meeting, as no less than twenty exhibitors were in attendance. Among those present were Mr. R. B. Wilby of Montgomery, Mr. R. H. DeBruler of Macon, Mr. Sol Samuels of Atlanta, Mr. Willard Patterson of Atlanta, Mr. L. G. Schofield of Charlotte, N. C., Mr. R. H. DeFarley of Montgomery, Mr. George Warner of Columbia, S. C., Mr. Tony Sudekum of Nashville, Mr. A. Guckenheimer of Savannah, and numerous others. However, all that starts well does not end well, for when the meeting broke the attendance was only four, the majority of them walking out before the meeting was finished.

"Mr. Ochs stated that he wanted $500,000 from the exhibitors; that he would go out and buy the stars and producers, and each exhibitor would receive pictures at cost price and profits would be derived from the foreign sale.

"It is reported that the plan was also given a cold shoulder in Dallas and New Orleans. If all the favorable reports of meetings held in other sections are true, Mr. Ochs must certainly have used a different argument than the one used with Southern showmen, as all the boys in this section looked on it as a huge joke.

"The only thing that makes exhibitors here doubt the success of his meetings in other sections is that several false reports have been printed. One that concerns Southerners most is the one printed in the Moving Picture World of April 6, the article stating that Mr. Jake Wells of Virginia had signed up by wire for his entire string of theatres throughout the South. This report has been branded as absolutely false by Mr. Wells, he stating that he hadn't given the subject even a thought or did he intend to."

United Theatres Explains

IN the form of a fourteen-page booklet of convenient pocket size, United Picture Theatres of America has published the details of its plan for the information of exhibitors.

Since the organization will make its own positive prints, it will go into the picture market for negatives only. Negative cost is figured on "the certified detailed studio cost of each picture with the addition of a reasonable percentage for producer's profit." To the above must be added the expense of making the necessary prints and the comparatively small distributing expense of the co-operative organization. The illustration takes up a five-reel feature which costs the society $50,000 altogether, and then calculates what each class of members is to pay.

These classes range from the first-run or Class A house, which is charged one one-thousandth of the total cost, down through the later-run theatres to the Class E establishment which shows the picture last and pays but one ten-thousandth of the cost. The table of charges for the $50,000 picture is as follows: Class A, $50; Class B, $25; Class C, $16.66; Class D, $10; Class E, $5. On a similar plan the cost of a $6,500 single-reel comic is prorated from a top price of $6.50 for the Class A house down to $1.30 for Class D and sixty-five cents for Class E.

The new prospectus also aims to show that the society is not producer-controlled or financier-controlled. Another claim emphasized is the absence of any stock-jobbing element. The funds being raised by subscriptions, to the extent of 90 per cent of the total, are "deposited in bank in a Special Fund, and the company agrees not to touch any of it except in accordance with the terms of the contract. As soon as 2,000 booking days are secured—that is, $500,000 altogether—the plan of co-operative film buying will be put into operation." In the event of failure to secure 2,000 booking days, the 90 per cent of the subscriptions trusted in bank will be returned to the subscribers, who will then be out only the small amount spent in attempted organization—"even this little 10 per cent," the statement says, "should be regarded in the light of a film insurance, much like any other insurance.

The officers of United Picture Theatres express the fullest confidence that the organization will be a complete success, and they predict a substantil reduction of film rentals as well as other savings and benefits

Schulberg and Tandy Entertain Exhibitors

The leading exhibitors of the Southern territory were the guests of Mr. C. E. Tandy, District Manager for the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, distributors of Paramount-Artcraft productions for eleven Southern states.

The luncheon was given in honor of B. P. Schulberg, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., New York. The leading exhibitors of the Southern territory were present, including Mr. R. B. Wilby and Mr. R. H. DeFarley of Montgomery, Mr. L. G. Schofield of Charlotte, Mr. George Warner of Columbia, Mr. Tony Sudekum of Nashville, Mr. R. H. DeBruler of Macon, Mr. A. Guckenheimer of Savannah, Mr. T. S. Abernathy of Birmingham, and Mr. Sol Samuels of Griffin, Mr. F. V. Chamberlin, Branch Manager of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, and Mr. Jas. B. Wilbanks, Manager Short Subjects Department.

When the luncheon was over, Mr. Cardoza, General Manager of the Jake Wells Interests in Atlanta, invited the guests to a box-party at the Lyric.

Kansas City Strike Closes Theatres

The general strike in Kansas City, Mo., which has spread to the proportions of a gigantic sympathetic walk-out, including union workers in all trades, last week closed the motion picture and legitimate theatres.

To April 2, when a meeting of theatre managers was scheduled, with T. H. Cochrane as chairman, the theatres had been closed four days, and no early settlement between the warring factions seemed probable. Politics is said to have had a hand in the continuation of the strike.

Abel in Charge of Select St. Louis Office

Sydney E. Abel, executive office representative of Select Pictures Corporation, has taken charge of Select's St. Louis branch, succeeding E. W. Dustin, who resigned in order to join the General Film Company.

Mr. Abel left the Select headquarters Monday for St. Louis, and is now actively in charge of the Select Exchange in that city. He will devote his attention exclusively to the St. Louis branch and the territory which it supplies for some time to come.

International Formed in Oklahoma

It was announced last week that the International Film Association has been formed in Oklahoma City, Okla., to cultivate more intensively the Southwest with bigger film productions on both percentage and rental basis. It is said a number of exhibitors in that territory, and other film men, are interested in the new organization.

D. Cobb is secretary of the company.

Nation Roused as Stars Sell Bonds

Third Liberty Loan Drive Gets Support of Entire Industry—Campaign Opens with Resounding Vigor Made More Effective Through Players' Efforts

WITH a more vigorous start than has yet been noted at the beginning of a nation-wide campaign in behalf of the Government, America's Third Liberty Loan Drive opened April 6 and boosted the sale of bonds way up into the millions before the hands of the clock were half way around on their daylight saving schedule.

That this new bond-campaign started with such prospects of overwhelming success is in a measure traceable, officials say, to the strenuous and faithful efforts of the picture industry. Stars, producers, exhibitors and other branches have plunged into the work of boosting the sale of bonds wholeheartedly. Among the stars, Fairbanks, Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Jane Lee, Madge Evans, Marie Dressler, William Farnum, Doris Kenyon, Arnold Daly, Marguerite Clark and Emmy Wehlen are doing their bit.

Others are not found wanting.

Several Stars Tour

Following the official opening of the drive, which took place in Washington April 6, and at which several stars were present, the various players who are giving their time and efforts to help the good work along started for the sections of the country assigned them. In their allotted territory they will make speeches and otherwise stir the patriotism of the people, besides adding to their own possession more Liberty Loan Bonds, paid for out of their earnings.

Arnold Daly opened his part in the Rivoli theatre, New York, on Sunday evening, April 7, when Metro's historical drama, "My Own United States," starring him, was the featured attraction. By special appointment from Joseph B. Thomas, of the Committee on Public Information at Washington, Mr. Daly appeared as a four-minute-man to "fire a broadside," announcing the campaign for the new Government Loan.

As announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, Douglas Fairbanks is to "cover" the Middle West, while Charlie Chaplin will visit the South. Miss Pickford is doing her share in the East.

Although greatly inconvenienced by a stubborn case of mumps, Marguerite Clark could not be persuaded to sit idly by and see the campaign progress without her. So she bundled her physician into the party and started for Chicago, after losing out on Philadelphia, Columbus and Detroit because of her illness.

She confidently plans to appear in the Windy City, St. Louis and Kansas City, later stops of her tour. Chairmen of the local Liberty Loan committees in the cities where Miss Clark will appear are preparing programs to make her work most effective.

No Slackers Here

Doris Kenyon, De Luxe star, is dividing her time outside the studio between working for the Red Cross and the Liberty Loan. Miss Kenyon will make speeches in a number of theatres in the interest of the loan.

Hugh Thompson, her leading man, is also devoting every evening to the Liberty Loan. He is speaking in theatres, churches, clubs, and any other place that the committee deems it advisable to send him.

Metro stars inaugurated the drive in New York, and Metro Pictures Corporation will pay the expenses of a two-weeks' trip to Emmy Wehlen, who will make a tour of the largest Eastern cities in behalf of the Loan. Miss Wehlen appeared at the Rivoli theatre on Monday. She is scheduled not only to speak for the Liberty Loan, but to sing for it also. On Tuesday she went on tour. E. M. Saunders, of the New York Metro Exchange, accompanying her, will take charge of the details of business and transportation. Miss Wehlen's tour is as follows: April 8, New York; Tuesday, Philadelphia; Wednesday, Baltimore; Thursday, Washington; Friday, Pittsburgh; Saturday, Cincinnati; Sunday, April 14, Cleveland; Monday, Buffalo, where there will be a great civic demonstration; Tuesday, Rochester; Wednesday, Albany; Thursday, April 18, the anniversary of Paul Revere's Ride, Boston.

Trailers in Theatres

Aiding and abetting the stars in their Liberty work, exhibitors are throwing on their screens trailers furnished by the producers, whose purpose it is to fan the spark of patriotism into the flame that will eventually win the war.

Mutual's Philadelphia branch last week made the following announcement:

"Beginning April 6, the motion picture interests comprising the exchange managers, salesmen, and exhibitors will make a drive in connection with the Government, for the sale of bonds in the third issue of the Liberty Loan. Part of our plan consists of the attaching of trailers furnished by the Government on the end of every five-reel feature. By bringing to the attention of the exhibitors the fact that these trailers must not be removed from the reels and shown religiously it will assist us in this great movement."

Exhibitors also are showing a trailer in which Jane Lee, the William Fox "starlet" does effective work. The trailer, which runs about 200 feet, was prepared at the Fox studios in Fort Lee at the suggestion of the Publicity Division of the Loan.

Keanan Buel, who has directed all of the pictures starring Jane and Katherine Lee, made the film. In it, Jane is seen seated on the floor with a number of blocks. After building the sentence, block by block, "Buy a Liberty Bond," she holds up the letter U and points her finger from the screen in such a manner that no one in the audience will be able to escape it.

Universal Stamps Paper

"Kill Kaiserism—Buy a Liberty Bond," is the slogan to appear upon every piece of lithographic paper to be issued by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company from April 6 to April 27 during the big drive. President Laemmle of Universal, received a request from the Liberty Loan headquarters requesting that this slogan be etched on all lithographs prepared for the company productions. The request was not received until April 3 and, as all Universal paper is issued weeks in advance and it was too late to have the slogan made a part of the lithographs, President Laemmle issued orders that red and white stickers be printed immediately to be attached to the lithographs. The stickers were finished within twenty-four hours and several will be attached to each piece of lithographic paper issued by Universal for the next month.

With a record of $30,000 worth of the second Liberty Loan purchased by the employees of the World Film Corporation, exclusive of the subscriptions made by executives and film stars, the employees are formulating plans to exceed this record in the new Liberty Loan compaign, and have recently held a number of meetings in the furtherance of this plan.

And as the employees are planning to exceed their previous record so, too, are the executives and stars of the company planning to do even better.

In connection with the Liberty Loan, little Madge Evans has kept up a continuous campaign since the opening of the sale of War Savings Stamps, for the sale of these stamps.

William Farnum has already started "doing his bit," and will continue to make speeches and take subscriptions until the amount wanted is an assured fact. Out in the West they did not wait for any formal opening of a campaign, but went ahead on the theory that the Government will need money to prosecute the war and that it is "up to" all good citizens to see that it is raised. Mr. Farnum has opened headquarters at the William Fox Studios at Los Angeles, and is subscribing himself for a bond to match every subscription he receives.

Noted Producers Meet at U. City

Vaudeville, musical comedy and motion pictures met on common ground last week when Martin Beck, president of the Orpheum Circuit, and H. Mort Singer, the well-known musical comedy producer, were the guests of Henry McRae, director of production at Universal City. They latter were joined by Louis Sonnenberg, general counsel for the Orpheum interests, and Al Kuppenheimer, president of the nationally known clothing house of Chicago.

In and Out of Town

Carlyle Robinson, personal representative for Charlie Chaplin, spent three days in New York, last week, in connection with the arrangement of the details of Chaplin's personal appearance in the city under the auspices of the Liberty Loan Committee. Mr. Robinson, after a trip to Chicago, returned to New York and is expected to remain here for several days.

F. L. Greenwald, Exclusive Features, Columbia Building, Cleveland, was in New York last week in the interest of his company. Mr. Greenwald returned to Cleveland Saturday.

Don Meaney, associated with the Cinema Exchange, Los Angeles, is in New York in the interest of that company. He is making arrangements for the distributing of the Snakeville Comedies, which he is now producing on the Coast. He is stopping at Hotel Claridge.

William Steiner, Jester Comedy Company, has returned to New York from his second tour of the independent exchanges throughout the country.

T. W. Ridley, London, Eng., left New York for London last week, after several weeks spent in this country in the interest of the Surbrite Crystal Projection Screen.

Harry Hull, Detroit, independent buyer, is in New York, and making his headquarters at the Elks Club.

Sam E. Morris, Select Pictures' East Central general manager, is in New York and will spend several days here. Mr. Morris has supervision of the Cincinnati and Detroit Select exchanges.

David Wark Griffith is in New York attending to the opening of "Hearts of the World," his late production, at the 44th Street theatre.

Benny Zeidman, Douglas Fairbanks' personal representative, arrived in New York last week, from Los Angeles. He is stopping at Hotel Wallack.

Richard Willis, Willis and Inglis, Los Angeles, was in New York last week for a few days. Mr. Willis returned to Los Angeles, Friday.

T. L. Tally, one of the most prominent exhibitors on the Coast, is in New York for several days.

Charles Schwerin, Pittsburgh, prominent exchange man is in New York.

Riverside Opera House Changes Hands

C. A. Howe and G. Gurden Merrill, who operate the Regent and Orpheum theatres in Riverside, Cal., have taken over the Loring Opera House in that city and will rebuild it at a cost of $22,000, installing a large pipe organ and providing accommodations for 1,100 people.

Rapf Films for New Syndicate

Exhibitors' Booking Syndicate Gets "Struggle Everlasting" and "Accidental Honeymoon" for New York Territory

HARRY RAPF closed an important deal with the Exhibitors' Booking Syndicate of Greater New York, whereby the latter will handle the exclusive release of his two attractions in this territory, the first being "The Struggle Everlasting," with Florence Reed as star, to be immediately followed by Robert Warwick's last film production, "The Accidental Honeymoon."

The Exhibitors' Booking Syndicate is a newly formed organization of Greater New York exhibitors, with such well known film men at its head as Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Exhibitors' League of New York State; John Mannheimer, president of the Manhattan local; Charles J. O'Reilly, first vice-president of the state body; John J. Wittman, president of the Bronx league and treasurer of the New York State League, Rudolph Sanders, Isador Edelstein and many other prominent exhibitors.

The booking of these two features, each to play at least 225 days in the houses booked under this syndicate plan, marks the first step taken by the newly formed organization since its inception. Both these pictures have a tremendous appeal in themselves and should prove paying box office attractions.

Mr. Rapf is naturally elated over the choice of his pictures to open this promising organization's campaign, and is backing up his pictures with a publicity and advertising service which he is carrying right up to the exhibitor. For the exploitation of "The Struggle Everlasting," he has issued a 12-page service book intended to give the exhibitor every conceivable angle from which this production may be profitably advertised.

"The Accidental Honeymoon" offers still greater opportunities, so a 16-page book is being prepared. Robert Warwick, its star, is now in the United States service in France, commissioned a captain, stationed in the Intelligence bureau under Col. Nolan, on General Pershing's staff. Captain Warwick cabled a stirring appeal in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan, which is not only added to the last reel of "The Accidental Honeymoon," but its presence there is heralded in advance with a special slide.

Catherine Stuart Makes Food Films

Miss Catherine Stuart has just finished the production of a number of new films especially staged under her supervision for the United States Food Administration, for the purpose of conserving food throughout the country, it was announced last week by Arthur S. Friend, Chairman of the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Public Information for the Food Administration.

These films present such stars as Marguerite Clark, Elsie Ferguson and Mabel Normand showing how to save the various commodities most needed by the Government at this time. The pictures were produced free of cost to the Government and will be released following the present series of cartoons on the conservation of food, from the Paramount-Bray studios. These cartoons have gained countrywide popularity and were produced at cost for the Government.

Miss Stuart will shortly leave New York for the West Coast, where she will cooperate with Cecil B. De Mille in preparing films showing stars of the West Coast in subjects that will carry the message of the Food Administration to the public via the exhibitor. Among the stars who are expected to appear in these pictures are Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart and Charlie Chaplin.

Pathe Cuts Country Into Five Sales Sections

To increase the efficiency of its sales organization Pathe will divide the country into five sales districts, each of which will be presided over by a district manager, all working under the direction of F. C. Quimby, sales manager of Pathe.

At a convention of representatives of the Omaha, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Milwaukee, Chicago, Indianapolis and Detroit branches, held recently at Chicago and attended by Paul Brunet, Pathe's vice-president and general manager, and Mr. Quimby, Ralph O. Proctor, formerly manager of the Chicago office, was appointed District Manager of the Middle Western Division.

Otis Turner Buried on Coast

Otis Turner, who died March 28 at his home in Hollywood, was buried March 30, the funeral being conducted by the Masons. J. Warren Kerrigan and Phillips Smalley were among the pall bearers.

Mr. Turner was fifty-five years old. He was the first president of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, serving two years.

Tobacco Fund Mounts High

The total amount of contributions to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" received to date is $192,562.75.

Assembly Passes the Option Bill

Two Roll Calls Necessary to Bring Final Result in Lower Branch—Members Make Rousing Speeches in Behalf of the Sunday Measure

THE Motion Picture Option Bill, for which the exhibitors of New York State have plugged early and late for the past several weeks, passed the Assembly of the New York State Legislature late on the afternoon of April 3. Despite the fact that it required two roll calls to reach the final result, and that the count stood 76 to 63, the exhibitors felt that victory was theirs, and that the measure will ultimately be decided in their favor.

Many of the members, realizing the fight the bill was having, made rousing speeches when the measure was called for final action. Assemblyman Amos of New York was among the speakers, and delivered an address considered wonderful in support of the Option Bill.

Pictures Help Win War

Assemblyman Amos said, in part: "It does seem to me, however, that the gentlemen to my right who, in the earlier discussion of the subject we are now considering, declared that moving pictures on Sunday was not for the best interest to win the war. I have with great patriotism argued on the other side; I have pointed out to this Honorable Body that the moving picture houses of this country are at this very moment as they have been continuously since the beginning of the war, the greatest centre of support to the Government, that the Government has had or now enjoys. Indeed, fellow countrymen, the moving picture houses of the United States are sacred school houses wherein are taught in the most effective manner the duties of citizens and morality to the country inspired. They are recruiting stations for American patriotism.

"On every screen in every theatre in the United States there is thrown every night the American flag, the picture of our great President, and the words of the Star Spangled Banner, and soon, I understand there is to be flashed from every screen in the land this thrilling question: 'What have you done for the U. S. A. that has done so much for you?' The moving picture houses are doing much, I tell you, gentlemen, to awaken and keep afire and afresh the spirit of patriotism in this country, inasmuch, if not more, than any other force in the land, are welding together diversified interest of races composing our citizenship into one invincible, unconquerable and loyal homogeneous liberty loving people. The moving picture industry is doing good and more. It is raising money to help in protecting our boys 'Over There.' It affords a nation-wide restrum for the Four Minute Men, who preach morality and patriotism."

Assemblyman Amos, of New York

Buffalo Does Its Bit

Buffalo exhibitors had a strong force in Albany to help pass the Sunday opening measure and of course the news of its passing was received in Buffalo with joy. There are 500,000 people in the city, and putting it conservatively, at least 75,000 attend motion picture theatres Sunday afternoons and evenings. They have these privileges and desire to have them continue. The theatres are well conducted. Disturbances are an unknown quantity. The fate of the Thompson-Welsh home rule bill was anxiously awaited. Today Buffalo feels better. One of the things that has helped to take the public mind off the war has not been taken away by the efforts of a small minority who did their utmost to defeat the measure.

As an illustration of public opinion in Buffalo local exhibitors had a card made of editorials from all the local newspapers and forwarded one to each Erie county representative in Albany. The effect of these cards must have helped the good cause. Every Buffalo paper favors motion pictures Sunday.

This state of feeling indicates that exhibitors expect the bill to pass the Senate.

One of the most effective speeches of the April 3 hearing was made by William A. Brady, who spoke along the same lines as did Assemblyman Amos. In closing Mr. Brady said: "The motion picture is doing the finest service of any single agency in the war, and if it's good enough for the soldiers in the trenches, it is certainly good enough for the factory and laboring people of this state who want it on Sunday."

Industry Well Represented

Among those present from the industry at Albany on Tuesday, April 2nd, at the hearing before the Code Committee of the Senate on the Motion Picture Option Bill, were President William A. Brady and Secretary F. H. Elliott of the National Association, J. Robert Rubin, H. B. Franklin and I. M. Moser of Buffalo; W. H. Linton of Utica and a large number of exhibitors from Troy, Albany and Schenectady. From New York City, Sidney F. Cohen, John Mannheimer, Sam Berman, Louis L. Levine, Henry Cole, John J. Wittman, L. F. Blumenthal, Rudolph Sanders, Charles Steiner, P. A. Parsons of Pathe Exchange, Sam Speedon, P. O. Eltenhead and William A. Johnston.

J. Robert Rubin presided. Speeches before the committee were made by Peter J. Brady, Helen Duey of the Woman's Home Companion, Reverend W. H. Jackson, William P. Capes, Secretary of the Mayor's Conference of New York State, and Judge Kenefick of Buffalo, formerly Supreme Court Justice of western New York.

Those speaking in opposition to the bill were the Rev. T. R. Good of the Schenectady Ministerial Association; Thomas Gilman, of the New York Sabbath Committee; Rev. W. W. Duncan, of the Kings County Sunday Observance Association; John Schwank, of the German Catholic Federation; Canon Chase, of the New York Civic League; Mrs. Ella Boole, of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and Mrs. J. G. Earl, of the Woman's Committee of Albany.

Pettijohn Gives Luncheon to Goodrich

A luncheon was tendered to Governor James R. Goodrich, at the Hotel Astor, Thursday, April 4th, by Charles C. Pettyjohn. The following invited guests were present:

D. W. Griffith, H. W. Brink, of Grand Rapids, Michigan; William L. Sherrill; J. Robert Rubin; Lester Parks; P. A. Powers; Joseph Golden; Raymond Cawley; Captain Merritt Crawford, Charles C. Pettyjohn, Walter W. Irwin, Samuel Speedon; Mary MacAllister, William Fait, Jr., of the Avon Theatre, Utica, N. Y.; William A. Johnston.

Addresses were made by Governor Goodrich, Mr. Griffith and Mr. Irwin. Governor Goodrich stated that he was a regular patron of motion pictures on Sunday, delivering an address that should prove a strong weapon in future fights for Sunday pictures.

Marc MacDermott Recovers

Marc MacDermott, the well known motion picture player, has returned to his home from St. Vincent's Hospital, New York, where he underwent a minor but painful operation. He was in the hospital two weeks.

N. A. M. P. I. Directors Meet

Discuss Pending Legislation at Albany and Oppose Contributions by Exchanges—First National and Paralta Are Admitted

THE quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held at the headquarters in the Times Building on Friday, March 30, with President William A. Brady presiding.

Among the others in attendance or represented were the following: P. A. Powers, Arthur S. Friend, who also represented Adolph Zukor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., William L. Sherrill, president Frohman Amusement Corporation; Donald J. Bell, of Bell and Howell of Chicago; Jules E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; R. A. Rowland, president Metro Pictures Corporation, represented by W. E. Atkinson; William Fox and W. R. Sheehan, represented by Loyd Willis; Fred J. Beecroft and Thomas G. Wiley, of the General Division, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary.

The First National Exhibitors Circuit was elected to membership in the Distributors Division of the organization which now numbers 12 of the largest distributing companies in the industry and Paralta Plays, Inc., was elected as a member of the Producer Division, making the fifty-eighth company now affiliated with that branch of the national body.

Considerable time was given to a discussion of the legislative situation at Albany following a report by Secretary Elliott indicating success for the Motion Picture Option Bill, introduced by Senator George P. Thompson and Assemblyman Clarence F. Welsh. Many of the directors indicated that they would attend the hearing before the Senate Codes Committee at Albany on Tuesday, April 2. It was the consensus of opinion that if this measure becomes a law in New York State, similar laws would be enacted by many other states.

After receiving reports from several companies, the directors adopted a resolution recommending the producing and distributing companies that they notify their exchanges or branch offices not to contribute to any funds for campaign or legislative purposes without first securing the approval of the home office. It was further recommended that each home office in turn should refer all such requests to the National Association headquarters for investigation and report. This action also applies to the numerous calls for the loan of film from all sections of the country.

Reports were received regarding the labor situation in Chicago and the matter was referred to a meeting of the heads of all producing and distributing companies which was called for April 3.

It was decided to inform the National Motion Picture Exhibitors League that if the exhibitors desire to proceed with the introduction of a bill in Congress, providing for the coinage of a 15-cent piece, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will immediately take steps to co-operate with the exhibitors in an effective manner.

Standard Quits Chicago Field

Sells Stock and Equipment to Unity Photoplays — Ryan Announces Other Offices Will Continue as Formerly

THE Standard Film Corporation, whose headquarters are in Kansas City, have closed their Chicago office. The entire stock of film subjects, paper and all equipment on hand, together with the good-will of the branch offices in this territory, was purchased by Frank Zambreno, head of Unity Photoplays Company, for a cash consideration of $75,000. Both the Unity Photoplays Company and the Standard Film Corporation offices occupy the sixth floor of the College Building, 207 South Wabash avenue. Included in the film subjects bought by the Unity Photoplays Company are King-Bee's W. H. Productions, Keystone comedies, thirty Art Drama subjects, and three big Wm. Hart pictures—"The Bandit and the Preacher," "The Hell-Hound of Alaska," and "The Bargain." "The Bargain," considered by many to be one of the best Hart pictures to be put out, coincidentally with the sale was just granted a permit for showing in Chicago ten days ago by the courts. Major Funkhouser had banned the film upon the first attempt to show it more than a year and a half ago in Chicago, and the case had been up for litigation in the courts ever since.

Phil H. Ryan, president of the Standard Film Corporation, came on from Kansas City and negotiated the sale with Mr. Zambreno. All of the film stock, paper, etc., will be moved to the Unity Photoplay rooms this week. Mr. Zambreno announced that he will make good on all contracts and deposits placed by the exhibitors with the Standard Film Corporation. The acquisition of the Hart picture, "The Bargain," with the sale was considered a fortune for them, and it is Mr. Zambreno's intention to pay particular attention to the exploitation of it in Chicago now that the courts have permitted its showing.

The sale means the relinquishing of all interests in Chicago by the Standard Film Corporation. Mr. Ryan announced that the other offices throughout the Central West states will continue business as before.

Express Conditions in South Improved

Exhibitors will be glad to learn the majority of the exchanges in the Southern States report that express conditions are becoming better every day and it will be only a short time before they will become normal again and exhibitors and exchanges alike will enjoy smooth sailing again.

Ground Broken for Largest Picture Theatre

On Monday morning, April 1, ground was broken at the corner of Fulton street and Rockwell Place, Brooklyn, for what undoubtedly will be the largest motion picture theatre in the United States. It is claimed, also, that it will be the finest. The Mitchell H. Mark Realty Corporation, which operates the Strand theatre in New York, is the power behind the project, and through its secretary, Max Spiegel, has completed arrangements through the Freel Investing Company for the erection of the big building.

The new theatre will have a seating capacity of 4,000, with orchestra and balcony, and will have the largest lobby of any amusement enterprise in the world. This lobby alone will cover an irregular plot 75 x 100 feet, with a dome ceiling 40 feet high. The structure will be unique in that no portion of the entire plot will be used for other than theatre purposes.

The construction work will be in charge of the Central Building Company of Brooklyn, and it is hoped that the building will be ready by next October. The policy will be identical with that of the New York Strand.

Cleveland Exchanges Now Get Shipments Through

The Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of Cleveland has been influential in securing the co-operation of the heads of the transportation companies in Cleveland, so that exhibitors all through the State now say they are getting their shipments through without any difficulty whatsoever. From all sides come reports of the prosperous condition of the film industry, and it is doubtful whether the exhibitors realize how much of their prosperity they owe to these efforts of the Board of Exchange managers. Last Tuesday, President Sam Morris called a special meeting of the Board to talk over the matter of city deliveries. The delays here are frightful, said Mr. Morris, and they are not at all necessary. The trouble is that under the present system we can't keep tab on a film.

General Reports Two Changes

Because of rapidly expanding business, the General Film exchange at Seattle has removed to larger and more convenient quarters at 2023 Third Avenue, which have been provided with modern facilities for the transaction of business.

Another General Film move reported during the week was that of the Philadelphia exchange, which is now settled in its attractive new home at 1223 Vine Street.

Brooks Joins Pathe

Edgar O. Brooks, formerly general sales manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, has joined the Pathe Sales Department at the home office, presided over by F. C. Quimby, sales manager, and Frank Duffy, assistant sales manager.

incidental to co-operative buying. The officers are Lee A. Ochs and Louis F. Blumenthal, prominent exhibitors; C. R. Seelye, former sales director of World, Vitagraph and Pathe; and Messrs. C. M. Rosenthal and M. M. Goldsmith, the latter being counsel of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

Vice-President Seelye's work as field organizer of branch offices has gone on apace. Some of the exchange men of the old-line organizations have given up their posts to join the new co-operative enterprise, and already the need of division managers to handle the large forces is evidenced by the promotion of C. S. Edwards from the Kansas City office to the new position of Southwestern manager. The names of the new exchanges and their managers are as follows: Philadelphia, Stanley W. Hand (transferred from Boston); Pittsburgh, E. E. Erickson; Cincinnati, C. C. Hite; Detroit, A. J. Gillingham; St. Louis, Floyd Lewis; New Orleans, Karl Bugbee; Dallas, W. G. Underwood; Denver, C. R. Gilmour; Salt Lake City, I. P. Arnold. Ernest H. Horstmann, the well-known treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, has accepted the Boston managership, owing to Stanley Hand's being called to organize the Philadelphia office, and C. S. Edwards, Jr., has taken the Kansas City managerial post. As the result of the week's activity there are now seventeen branches of United Theatres, covering most of the country with the exception of the Pacific Coast, which will be organized within the next six weeks.

Louis F. Blumenthal, treasurer of United Theatres, addressed a meeting of the executive committee of the Tri-City Exhibitors' League in Albany on April 2. Mr. Blumenthal found the exhibitors' committee, headed by President Lewis H. Beuttner, keenly interested in the new plan, which is being brought to the attention of all the picture theatre managers in the Albany, Troy and Schenectady district. In New York City Arthur S. Abeles, eastern representative, and Aaron Corn, city sales manager, report a larger number of accessions to the new organization than have been received in any previous one week. Several important districts of the Greater City are already covered by picture theatre memberships.

Lieut. Rothapfel Takes Up His Military Duties

Lieut. S. L. Rothapfel, who received his commission Wednesday, April 3, at the hands of Col. A. S. McLemore, has been placed in charge of the Motion Picture Division of the Marine Corps Publicity Bureau. He made his first appearance in uniform at his office in the Rivoli on Thursday and immediately began making plans for a trip to the Marine Corps camp at Quantico, Va., where he will superintend the making of a motion picture which is to be used throughout the country. Lieut. Rothapfel has arranged his duties as managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres so that they will not interfere with the task outlined for him by the Government.

Red Cross Film Given Gratis

Jesse L. Lasky Announces Plan of Distribution of "The Spirit of the Red Cross"—Was Produced by Jack Eaton

JESSE L. LASKY, chairman of the Committee from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, appointed to co-operate with the American Red Cross, last week announced at his office in the New York headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation the plan of distribution of the official Red Cross film, "The Spirit of the Red Cross."

"This truly excellent film, produced by Jack Eaton, is in itself a fine show for any exhibitor to present," said Mr. Lasky. "In fact, it has been termed 'A Birth of a Nation in two reels,' disclosing a complete story with many thrilling battle scenes of modern warfare, a charming romance running throughout the picture. It will be booked absolutely gratis and should prove an important factor in considerably helping to strengthen any motion picture bill.

"Each distributing organization which is a member of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be allotted a number of prints which will be divided among its exchanges for free bookings. It is our desire to keep these prints working so that not a single day will be lost during a given period, but that the film will be shown in certain theatres of every territory throughout the country. Posters and other material are now being planned and an announcement on this phase of the exploitation will be forthcoming shortly."

Mr. Lasky has just sent a letter to the heads of the various distributing organizations who are members of the National Association, further explaining the handling of the Red Cross film. Accompanying each letter he has sent a schedule showing the number of prints allotted to each territory covered by the company addressed.

Indiana Board in Annual Session

The annual meeting of the Board of Motion Picture Endorsers for Indiana was held at the Chamber of Commerce in Indianapolis, April 2. The morning was taken up with the reading of reports, followed by a luncheon at which short talks were given by Mayor Charles W. Jewett, of Indianapolis; E. U. Graff, superintendent of the Indianapolis city schools; Robert Lieber, Mrs. Harry E. Barnard, wife of the Federal food administrator for Indiana; Mrs. E. C. Rumpler and Miss Eliza Browning. The election of State officers was held in the afternoon.

Sherrill Explains Frohman Name

The attention of William L. Sherrill, president of The Frohman Amusement Corporation has been called to an article appearing in the various trade papers emanating from Daniel Frohman, in which emphasis is made on the fact that neither he nor Charles Frohman had any connection with The Frohman Amusement Corporation, motion picture producers.

Mr. Sherrill announces that neither of them ever had any connection in any manner with his company.

Two More Americans for Uncle Sam

The American Film Company has contributed two more of its studio staff to the service of Uncle Sam in the persons of Sheridan Hall and Frederick Smith. Mr. Hall was recently made assistant to Director Edward Sloman; while Mr. Smith has been rapidly coming to the front as a juvenile heavy. Mr. Hall has been assigned to the Aviation Division at Kelly Field, San Antonio, Texas, while Mr. Smith joins the 309th Engineers at Camp Fremont, California.

Triangle Exchange Now on Eleventh Floor

The New York Exchange of the Triangle Distributing Corporation has recently been moved from the eighth and ninth floors of the Brokaw Building, 1457 Broadway, to the eleventh floor. The sales, contract, cashier and booking departments and the poster room are now in adjoining offices on the same floor.

Under C. B. Price, general manager of the exchange, R. D. Burdge will have charge of the New York City and Brooklyn sales; E. N. Wells the New York territory outside of New York City and Brooklyn, and S. R. Schussel the foreign department, which covers service furnished to the Army and Navy, the territorial possessions of the United States and Bermuda, Hayti, Newfoundland, etc.

Kroulik Engages Players in New York

F. J. Kroulik, general director of the Camel Film Company of Chicago, which has recently taken over the Advance Motion Picture Studios of that city, is in New York for the purpose of securing players for the Mode 'Art brand of comedies that they will shortly place on the market through a regular releasing company. Mr. Kroulik has already signed up several well known players gifted in comedy and will shortly leave for Chicago to commence operations as the plans for the Mode 'Art Comedies calls for the first release in May.

Exhibitor Hyman Takes Bride

Word was received in Buffalo last week of the marriage of Edward L. Hyman, manager of the Victoria theatre and a member of the Motion Picture News Advisory Board, to Grace L. Redanz. The wedding was held in South Walpole, Mass., March 26.

Metro Gets Big Patriotic Film

"My Own United States," Starring Arnold Daly, Acquired for Distribution — Opens Liberty Loan Drive at Rivoli

ACCORDING to an agreement entered into between Screen Classics, Inc., and William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, the patriotic preduction, "My Own United States," starring Arnold Daly, is presented by Mr. Sherrill as a Screen Classics super-feature and will be distributed throughout the country by the Metro Pictures Corporation. The picture was produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

"My Own United States," which is described as a stirring, accurate and authoritative representation of the early days in which America conceived her democratic institutions and of the latter days in which she championed world democracy, opened at the Rivoli theatre, New York, on Sunday, April 7, Mr. Rothapfel having selected it as a fitting picture with which to inaugurate his theatre's drive for the Liberty Loan. Mr. Daly himself was the principal speaker in behalf of the loan, making his first appearance at the Sunday afternoon performance.

"My Own United States" is not a war picture but is said to be woven around the most exciting episodes of American history and the most heroic figures participating in these events. Exact locations of historic happenings, such as the ground upon which Burr and Hamilton fought their famous duel, and the famous old frigate, "Constitution," upon which Philip Nolan was supposed to have been imprisoned, were used to give a faithful presentation of striking facts from chapters of American history and episodes from Edward Everett Hale's "The Man Without a Country."

Such powerful personalities as Alexander Hamilton, Aaron Burr, Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, Stephen Decatur, General Wilkinson, General Grant, and Abraham Lincoln, and President Wilson appear in the picture, all the players impersonating these great men giving sincere and convincing performances.

A love story runs throughout the picture, and Mr. Daly, as the faltering, hesitating weakling, Philip Nolan, who, in a moment of youthful anger, denounces his country and is banished on the "Constitution" never to see or hear of it again, is said to present the most artistic performance of his career.

John W. Noble directed "My Own United States," which was written by Anthony P. Kelly.

Moore Building Another House

The Arcadia, at Eleventh and F Streets, N. W., Washington, Will Represent the Last Word in Theatre Elegance

THE expansion of the motion picture industry is going forward rapidly in Washington, D. C., largely through the activity of Moore's Theatres Corporation, of which Tom Moooe, one of the foremost exhibitors in the United States, is president and director general. Moore's Strand, Garden and Plaza theatres are doing a landoffice business with a strong array of feature pictures, and the new Rialto theatre, which will be one of the picture palaces of the East, is rapidly nearing completion. The Rialto will have a seating capacity of 2,000 on the main floor alone, and will be finished entirely in marble and silk, with facilities for presenting the finest in music as well as pictures.

Not content with these progressive steps Mr. Moore last week began the construction of still another downtown house in the heart of Washington's fashionable shopping district, at Eleventh and F streets, Northwest, to be known as Moore's Arcadia. The new house will have a seating capacity of something less than 1,000 and will have an entrance frontage of 45 feet on F street, with a lobby leading directly into the main auditorium. Special provision has been made for elaborate lighting effects and the stage setting will be one of the most beautiful ever seen in Washington, combining with the most exquisite color treatment a novel system of art lamp illumination. In addition to a large orchestra of solo artists the theatre will be equipped with a giant organ and a grand piano, thus insuring an ensemble strength adequate to the most exacting score that any feature photoplay may require. There will be spacious rest rooms for both ladies and gentlemen, decorated and furnished in the same general color and period scheme as the body of the house.

"Washington has never had a motion picture theatre in the conduct of which the primary consideration has been the creation and maintenance of an atmosphere of artistic beauty and elegance such as one might expect in a handsome private drawing room," said Mr. Moore in discussing his new project. "It is precisely that lack that we are going to supply in the Arcadia. It is to be the gem of the Capital's picture playhouses, not so large as our Rialto, for example, but equal to that house in all essentials except capacity and stage dimensions. The location I deem the best in Washington, and the builders have signed an ironclad guarantee to have the house ready for occupancy within three months. Abnormal conditions in this city rendered it impossible to house the tenants who necessarily were compelled to vacate the premises to enable us to proceed, and difficulty in securing desired materials owing to stress of war orders was, at first, encountered, and the breaking of ground at Eleventh and F streets has therefore been deferred from time to time since the first of the year, but such hindrances now have all been cleared away and the Arcadia will be rushed to completion."

Leo E. Dwyer a Business Visitor in Metropolis

Leo E. Dwyer, of Dwyer Bros. & Company, of Columbus, Ohio, with a branch at 631 Walnut Street, Cincinnati, which controls Southern Ohio and Kentucky in the distribution of Simplex Projectors, was a visitor in New York City last week, having come East for a consultation with E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, Inc.

Mr. Dwyer, whose energetic methods have made his company one of the most important concerns distributing Simplex Projectors, stated that a new department inaugurated by them six months ago for the manufacture and sale of slip covers for theatre chairs has now become a very large part of the business of Dwyer & Company. The popularity of the Dwyer make has developed in the last few months to a large extent and the demand from exhibitors in his territory has become great.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Brulatour?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

LADEEZ—and—gentulmen!

Step up this way. Right up close. A little nearer, please—that's it! Fine!

Now—we beg to introduce—Filmland's Man of Mystery!

None other than—J. E. Brulatour.

It's a magic name—Ladeez and Gentulmen. Every producer within German-gun range of Times Square is going to shudder at the mention. Mr. Producer can almost feel the draught as his office door opens—he can almost hear the cashier's hoarse voice——

"There isn't a foot of raw stock in the plant, and Mr. Brulatour says he'll have to have a certified check before he'll fill our new order. What about it?"

There's only one thing about it. If Mr. Producer hasn't the certified check—or the cash—he may as well shut up shop and throw the key in the river.

For three studios, eighteen directors, and two hundred players—"All the king's horses and all the king's men"—couldn't produce a motion picture without film. And on this slice of the globe's surface film comes from J. E. Brulatour, Most High Sales Agent Extraordinary and Ambassador Plenipotentiary to the Motion Picture Business for the Eastman Kodak Company.

And J. E. Brulatour, Poo Bah and Grand Panjandrum, won't deliver the film unless you deliver the coin—or so we have been told by men who should know.

Which may be one of the reasons—there are others—why we chose to embark in the publishing end of this business rather than the producing.

Several producers have asked us why we didn't run Mr. Brulatour earlier in the series. They wanted the opportunity to flatter him, to tell him that the artist didn't do him justice, that we didn't say enough nice things about him.

They wanted—we fear—to stretch their credit.

Not that we wouldn't have liked to publish Mr. Brulatour's picture earlier. So also—to forestall argument—let us say that we would have liked to have publish many weeks ago some of the other big men who are still to come in this series.

But we are getting away from our introduction. We called Mr. Brulatour "Filmland's Man of Mystery." Here's why——

If the motion picture—as we have heard somewhere or other—is still in its infancy, then J. E. Brulatour stumbled upon it about the time it was filling out its birth certificate.

Through the long years of its infancy—how old is an "infant," any way?—J. E. Brulatour has been with the motion picture.

And in all those years we have yet to find in our mail a typewritten sheet telling—via a press agent—what kind of a fellow J. E. Brulatour is, or his opinions on the future of the screen, or—any or the usual flubdub.

Why we haven't even been told whether "J. E." stands for "J. Eastman Brulatour" or "Just Energy Brulatour." It could well be either.

So we'll have to let a man who has come in business contact with Mr. Brulatour over many years tell you the secret of the mystery.

"J. E. Brulatour," he said to us, "is the gentleman of the picture business. In apearance a combination Beau Brummel and Captain of Industry, in manner, suave, diplomatic, and—and—polished—that's the word. He's the most polished man in the business.

"But he doesn't pose. He's all business and all man at the same time. He may have only met you once or twice but you'll never find him failing to greet you with a cheery 'Hullo' as you pass on the street.

"He won't talk much about himself—but I've

EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

[These reviews, by P. S. Harrison, are based solely on the entertaining qualities of the picture. All other factors are considered of secondary importance.]

"The House of Silence"

Wallace Reid in a Strong Drama—A Bit Too Strong

(Paramount—April 8)

DRAMATICALLY "The House of Silence" is a very well produced picture with beautiful settings and fine photography. In fact you can't find fault with anything but themes. Change the title to "The House of Ill Repute" and you have a full idea of the plot.

The story is based on the novel "Marcel Levignet," by Elwin Barron, and deals with the murder of a well respected jurist, committed by the daughter of a prominent doctor in defense of her virtue when tricked into "The House of Silence."

It is a great mistake to put such stories into pictures. It is about time the producers realize that the public doesn't want them. Exhibitors have been crying against them for years—why insist on making them?

(For Synopsis and Cast see page 2416)

"Mr. Fix It"

A Real Cure for the Blues—Go the Limit With It

(Artcraft—April 22)

THIS is a knock-out picture. The action moves at break-neck speed from the very beginning in the typical Fairbanks style. The story is entirely different from any of his previous ones and contains several new and original stunts that will bring roars of laughter from an audience. Mr. Fairbanks assumes the role of a person who is trying to make everybody happy and he certainly succeeds. There are a number of heart appealing situations that will bring a few lumps in your throat.

(For Synopsis and Cast see page 2417)

SUGGESTIONS—The surest way of eliminating unworthy pictures is to play the good ones longer. This one will stand it, and you will profit by it. In advertising this picture play, be strong on the fact that it is a sure cure for the blues and that it is going to make your patrons forget all their troubles, for an evening at least.

"Twenty-One"

A Dual Role Play Without a Sting—Worth Extra Day's Showing

(Pathe—April 7)

AS a rule, picturegoers do not care for the dual role type of picture, because the novelty has now worn off, but this picture is going to be an exception!

Barring "The Prince and the Pauper" I have never seen another such subject handled more carefully or consistently. In one instance, money is passed from one character to the other through the dividing line without any noticeable change. Director William Worthington should be congratulated for this. As for Bryant Washburn, exhibitors will have no kick coming if his future pictures are as good as this.

The picture is based on the book by George Randolph Chester, presenting us with two characters exactly alike in appearance but of entirely different temperaments. One is mollycoddled against his own will and the other a pugilist. Here is where Mr. Washburn shines—in his ability to assume the two different roles convincingly. When the two characters meet and their identities are exchanged (simply by changing clothes) the servants of the former and the folks of the latter do not discover it, except that they notice a change in disposition and conduct. Of course such a thing is impossible, but one will not stop to examine that since the picture entertains.

The kind act of Jimmy Mufferton in buying dolls and a carriage for the little sister and presents for the mother of the other character will certainly touch the heartstrings of the spectator, while the role of the pugilist will bring many a hearty laugh.

The scenario writer deserves his share of the credit. This clean picture will please any audience. It sets a new standard for Patheplays.

NOTE—I am for long runs of the worthy pictures, it being the surest way of doing away with the bad ones. If you have a contract for this program and make arrangements with your exchange to cut out one that you might think is not strong enough for your house and play this one longer. I think you can do it without any extra cost.

Jimmy Mufferton and "Battling" Dave Carey	Bryant Washburn
Dixie Charlton	Gertrude Selby
Director	Wm. Worthington

THE STORY

Jimmy Mufferton upon reaching the age of twenty-one comes into his father's fortune. Having been mollycoddled in the past, he now rebels and cashes a check for $1,000, starting forth to seek adventure. He drifts into a sporting club, where boxing bouts are in progress. To his amazement one of the boxers is his double. Jimmy offers him $100 to swap clothes and homes with him for twenty-four hours. Dave accepts, and funny things happen.

Jimmy goes to the sporting club next evening to re-exchange clothes with Dave, who is to meet a near-champion named Sullivan, but he is attacked by thugs and prevented from coming. Jimmy takes his place in the ring and knocks out Sullivan. Dave arrives on the scene at the moment of Jimmy's triumph. They now exchange clothes and Jimmie marries Dixie, the girl he loves, and who now thinks he is a real man.

"The Risky Road"

"The Risky Road" Will Entertain, But It's a Trifle Risky

(Universal Special—April 8—Five Reels)

THIS picture is another example of "originality" with several surprises in store. The scenario by Ida May Parks is based on the story by Katherine Leiser Robin, that appeared in "Live Stories," and its character is a very peculiar one. The idea of the plot is that of an innocent working girl with pure ideals who meets a wealthy man of loose morals, who laughs at the idea of marriage, but who has not sunk so low as to force her against her will to change her mode of living. He leaves her to decide for herself. She refuses to deviate from her moral code and eventually wins out, causing him to accept her way of thinking and marry her. As you can see, nothing takes place in this picture that in any way is obviously offensive. At the same time there is an attempt on the part of the man to create such a situation and therein lies the peculiarity of the story mentioned above. As to the surprises, there are two or three instances where you think, or rather, feel sure that the girl is just about to give in only to find that you have guessed wrongly.

Personally, I wouldn't hesitate a minute to play this picture, for several reasons. It is not unclean, literally speaking, the story is original, very interesting and certain to entertain. I am sure it will please 95 per cent of those who see it. But for the overcareful exhibitor it is up to him to decide whether he wants to play this picture or not. It is a puzzling question.

Marjory Helmer	Dorothy Phillips
Melville Kingston	Wm. Stowell
Miles Kingston	Edw. Cecil
Mrs. Miles Kingston	Claire Du Brey

THE STORY

Marjory Helmer, a stenographer, stumbles and falls in front of a machine that is backing into the curb. Melville Kingston, the owner of the car, takes her home, and thus they become friends.

On one of their outings Kingston learns that she has to work and tells her that his apartments are hers for the asking. Horrified, Marjory runs away, but he overtakes her and explains that he doesn't intend to force anybody into his way of thinking; that she can think it over and let him know. She exclaims "Never!" Later she loses her position and while walking in the street, penniless and cold, sees Kingston and calls to him. He buys her an elaborate wardrobe and takes her to his apartment, but, realizing the price she must pay, she bursts into tears. He tries to comfort her and makes fun of the marriage ring and ceremony. This arouses her pride, and, after telling him that she wouldn't marry him if he asked her, she starts to go. He asks her where—and she then realizes her helplessness. He tells her she must either come to his way of thinking or he to hers, and leaves her alone in the apartment.

She stays until she can find work, but eventually brings him to her way of thinking and they marry happily.

"An Alien Enemy"

Louise Glaum Returns to the Screen in a German Spy Tale

(Paralta—April 1)

LOUISE GLAUM makes her reappearance on the screen in a picture full of action that holds one's interest and entertains. Story is not of the vampire type, but timely—dealing with the German spy system in a convincing way and very well suited for propaganda.

This picture fully measures up to the standard of former Paralta productions, released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"Rich Man, Poor Man"

(Paramount—April 15)

CAPTIVATING as ever, Marguerite Clark in "Rich Man, Poor Man" adds another ruby to her gem collection. Produced very artistically, this photoplay possesses in abundance the heart appeal element which will endear it to the public, particularly womenfolk and children.

The picture is based on the story by Maximilian Foster, which was published in the Saturday Evening Post, also put in book form, and later produced on the stage very successfully by George Broadhurst.

It is a clean picture of the regular Clark type.

"The Boss of the Lazy Y"

A Sure Fire Western with Popular Roy Stewart in the Lead

(Triangle—April 7)

THINK I am not exaggerating when I claim this to be as good a Western picture as I have ever seen on the screen. It is based on the book by Charles Alden Seltzer and the scenario writer must be congratulated for furnishing the director with such a consistent scenario—fine continuity—and the director, Cliff Smith, for the way he handled it. This picture is full of pep from beginning to end with not an idle moment.

There is a short fight pulled off that is a real one, and not interpolated just to show a fight, but placed because the action demanded it. The picture calls for riding a wild buck and Roy Stewart certainly performs the feat. There is no fake to it, but real riding that will make you sit on edges, expecting to see him fall any minute.

The subtitle, "You killed your father," might just as well have been left out. It is superfluous because the action indicates it.

This picture ought to be appropriate for showing even in the best theatres as it offers diversity of entertainment.

Calumet Marston	Roy Stewart
Jim Marston	Graham Pette
Tom Taggart	Frank McQuarrie
Neal Taggart	Aaron Edwards
Betty Clayton	Josie Sedgwick
Malcolm Clayton	Walt Whitman
Bob Clayton	Frankie Lee
Dane Toban	Wm. Ellingford
Dade	Bill Patton
Director	Cliff Smith

THE STORY

When Jim Marston is killed by his enemy, Tom Taggart, his boy, Cal, returns to his ranch, "The Lazy Y." Carl Marston finds that the ranch has been left to Betty Clayton and suspects her of having employed trickery, only to cast aside his suspicion when he obtains an insight into her noble character. A deep affection develops in his heart for Betty.

Cal forces Taggart to apologize to Betty for slandering her and makes a deadly enemy of him. Returning from a visit to his mother's grave, Cal overhears Betty in conversation with Taggart. Suspecting her of treachery, he threatens to leave the ranch forever, but yields to the mysterious influence of her personality over him.

Journeying to the town of Lizette, Cal has a clash with Taggart and drives him out of the town. Taggart and a confederate ambush Cal on the way home. All through the night he fights a duel with the two. Cal's team wanders home. Betty sees a bullet hole in the wagon bed. Seizing a rifle she dashes to the scene of the ambuscade and joins in the fray. Cal imagines she is joining in the attack on him. He is down to his last bullet, when the sheriff's posse comes to the rescue. Taggart is killed and Cal and Betty are reunited in the bonds of love.

"The Honor of His House"

Sessue Hayakawa in a Story Falling on the Border Line

(Paramount—April 8)

AS a dramatic offering this production stands very high indeed. Direction, photography, action, continuity of story and artistic effects are as good as you would desire. The story, however, contains some points that will displease some people. For instance, the administering of slow deadly poison to a woman, who later is about to become a mother will be considered horrible by some. The admirable sacrifice of her husband after discovering his fatal error, due to misjudgment, is not able to overcome the first bad effect. Another point. Two men—one of the yellow race and the other white—are coveting the hand of a beautiful half-caste girl. This will be absolutely distasteful, particularly to Californians.

I have noticed lately a tendency on the part of writers to bring the subject of approaching motherhood into their stories. This is unfortunate. It will do great harm—leave it alone!

This picture is not suggestive.

"My Four Years in Germany"

A Picture That Is a Payment on the Screen's Duty to the Nation

(First National Exhibitors Circuit)

TO my way of thinking, after seeing this picture you can not help but strengthen your determination to devote yourself to the cause of universal freedom.

No writing, however strong, could convey a clear idea to you of what this picture really is. To me it is the most powerful argument ever written or put into picture form, as to why Democracy should fight Autocracy.

The chief impression one gets from "My Four Years in Germany," as a book and as a picture, is that Mr. Gerard is the first man who has torn down the walls of age-long secret European diplomacy, and exposed the intrigues of a nation that has cultivated espionage to a point of scientific perfection to attain its selfish ends.

From the reviewer's point of view some scenes are a little too grewsome. However, I consider it advisable to show it without alteration, since it is the only way to drive home into every American's mind the kind of adversary we are fighting

"His Majesty Bunker Bean"

Good Story, Well Acted, Suffers from Lack of Clarity

(Paramount—April 8)

IMPROPER subtitling has, to my mind, spoiled this picture, as it does not give the story a proper continuity. The impression you get is that the different scenes have no connection whatever with each other and unless you know the story it is difficult to understand the picture. It reminded me of old days when we had about twenty different subjects on a single reel.

The scenario is taken from a story by Harry Leon Wilson. It appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and deals with the adventures of a young stenographer who believes in re-incarnation, plunges in Wall street and clears a fortune, eventually marrying his boss's daughter.

The star's acting is good, Louise Huff, as usual, very good. Director William B. Taylor did his best and with proper subtitling this picture could be classed as one of Paramount's best. It may please as it is, but you are bound to receive kicks.

Picture is clean.

"Hearts of the World"

Reviewed by Peter Milne

I THANKED my stars at the end of the showing of "Hearts of the World" that it was a love story of the Great War; not a melodrama. The trade has been glutted with so many pictures since the beginning of the world fray that deal with superficialities, with German spies that are gross fools, with heroes that perform miracles which if combined would have brought an end to the struggle soon after it started, with heroines whose only act was to physically resist an enemy in which the blood lust ran rampant, and with such foolishly obvious plots that Carter in his most violent days would have hung his head in shame, that Griffith's "Hearts of the World" comes as a relief as well as an emotional inspiration. To stir patriotism, to faithfully depict it on the screen is indeed a task. The real patriotism is so fine a thing, so sacred in its inspiration and effect that to deal with it in a drama is a precarious undertaking. A producer of artistic plays in New York recently spoke of it as too sacred to transfer to the stage. He did not mention the screen. Perhaps now he will agree with me and all the people who have now seen "Hearts of the World" that there is only one Griffith, and as a consequence only one man who can free his picture patriotism of the shadow of revolting commercialism which clouds the usual war picture. Griffith has accomplished such a task by his most effective method; by accentuating the commonplace, glorifying it in fact, and bringing the bigness of his theme into the very intimacy of the theatre. Take for example the first half of "Hearts of the World." Here for probably four reels runs a love story; a love story which is simplicity itself. Every one loves a lover; to see one on the screen is to experience a kindly feeling round the heart. But to glorify a love story so that a tender passage between hero and heroine brings tears of gladness to the eyes is an accomplishment that few may lay claim to. Here when the Girl and the Boy meet in the moonlit garden and realize under each other's magic spell that love has come to them is one of the most beautiful passages in the entire production. It makes one sniffle with happiness which is considerably more than making one smile from the same state of mind. Call it sentimentality if you will, but what pair of lovers ever whispered the usual sweet nothings without becoming sentimental? The first half of the picture deals wholly with this love affair to which is subordinated that of Monsieur Cuckoo and the Little Disturber, a strolling musician. Here, I think, is the inkling of the greatness of "Hearts of the World." The spirit of love, the spirit of spring time and of peace monopolize his picture at the start, while the prospect of the great war is just faintly suggested, sufficiently though to create the desired suspense. The latter half deals wlth actualities of the battlefield, with the suffering of those left behind in war-stricken France including the characters of the play. Such a contrast is terrific and powerful in its effect. The Boy, the Girl, Cuckoo and the Little Disturber have found their way to the innermost recesses of the spectator's heart, and when each individual comes within the shadow of the German menace, the effect produced is tremendous in its appeal. And by starting with this simple love story, by bringing the spectator into intimate contact with his principals, by making each and every one of them stand out as human atoms in the greatest tragedy of the world, Griffith has injected the true patriotism into his picture and has done more to move and sway the emotions than any number of blundering enemy spies and violently heroic heroes have done or ever will do.

The latter half of Griffith's picture gives a terrible picture of the war as he saw it and running through it is the working out of the destinies of the two principal characters, the Boy and the Girl, with the events in the lives of Cuckoo and the Disturber running them a close second. It is futile to attempt to describe the battle scenes. Griffith is as faithful a "director-general" of an European battle as he showed himself in portraying the warfare of our civil strife of two generations gone by. The scenes which he procured during his stay on the European battle front are interesting, but these scenes of war as it is actually fought today, melt into insignificance before the vast knowledge he accumulated there, the results of which show in the battle stuff put on in the peaceful valley of southern California. A picture audience is going to be completely fooled so complete is Griffith's illusion. An army officer who sat in front of me was. But if this statement seems too broad, if they can discern the actual from the acted, they will then the more compliment Griffith. Every modern implement of war, the barrage, the grenade, shrapnel, star shells, the curtain of fire, the poison gas, the various cannon and artillery are shown employed in their respective capacities. Darling, cartoonist in the New York Tribune, only last week sketched his impression of what the average man feels like after reading the war news. His conception was a picture of a male dressed in old ladies' clothes foolishly playing tiddle-de-winks. The battle scenes of "Hearts of the World" give the witness of them that very feeling. They form a huge panorama of the greatest adventure, the greatest tragedy that the history of the world has recorded.

The threads of the personal plot which are from time to time gathered together in the latter half are intensely interesting. The Girl is left, fatherless, motherless and alone in the shell-torn village after the departure of the Boy and the German occupation. She undergoes terrible mistreatment at the hands of the German slave drivers, comes to the notice of Von Strohm, a German agent, and is only saved by the appearance of the Boy, spying in enemy uniform. Here the suspense is built to a towering height. The lovers trapped in the attic of the inn are besieged on both sides by the Germans. The possibility of escape seems nil, one sits breathless at the thought of their death which seems so very near. But the tide of battle changes, the French and British retake the village and the lives of the Girl and the Boy are saved. Then comes the cheering, happy ending, when all four of the principals which one knows like brothers and sisters sit in a cafe by the window and see the American boys march by.

Personally I fail to see where the work of one player can be singled out above another in "Hearts of the World." The Gish sisters, Robert Harron and Robert Anderson, as the four lovers, with George Fawcett as the village carpenter, the comedy foil, and little Ben Alexander, youngest brother of the Boy, all give wonderful performances. Lillian Gish as the Girl gives a wonderful picture of a woman, torn and harassed by the horrors of war to the breaking point. Dorothy Gish as the brazen Little Disturber is to "Hearts of the World" what Constance Talmadge was to "Intolerance." She is the life; the all-important necessity of spirited refusal to quite countenance the tragedy of war, is hers to characterize. With a manner at times Chaplinesque, with a number of humorous scenes to pivot in, she creates a lasting impression. Lillian Gish is the suffering woman, Dorothy the devil-may-care before whom the war moves as something incomprehensible. Robert Harron is excellent as the Boy. He is pleasing and natural in manner and his performance here gives an idea of how the real Frenchman feels toward the war. Mr. Anderson is a veritable delight as Cuckoo, the son of France, enamoured of his country and the Little Disturber. Mr. Fawcett is an able comedian and Ben Alexander's performance completely captured the house. George Siegmann as Von Strohm is a remarkable type for the German villain and the hisses that greet him attest of his ability. There are Josephine Crowell, Kate Bruce, Adolphe Lestina, Jack Cosgrave, M. Emmons and F. Marion, L. Lowey, Mrs. Gish and other members of the Harron family who render support of the type that only Griffith could bring from them.

I could wander off on various tangents, could speak of the fact that the original story was by M. Gaston de Tolignac, that the translation was made by Captain Victor Marier, that the photographic effects achieved by Billy Bitzer are no less than marvelous, that some of the pastoral scenes of France in the first half are so beautiful that they in themselves bring applause, that Harron and the Gish sisters and the rest are perfect in their roles, but after all who is responsible for all this? It is D. W. Griffith. He who can glorify the commonplace, he who can include the reality of the titanic struggle of all the world in the four walls of a theatre.

Outing-Chester Scenics Shown to Trade

THE first six releases of the Outing-Chester Travel Scenics which are offered on the open market by Jesse J. Goldburg, were shown privately at Wurtlitzer Hall, last week, to prominent producers and exhibitors and representatives of Geographical Societies.

The subjects shown were "Kaieteur the Perfect Cataract," and "A Jungle Joy Ride" taken in British Guiana, "A Mountaineering Memory" taken in British Columbia, "A Coorial on the Orinoco" taken in Venezuela, "An Ex-Cannibal Carnival" taken in the Fiji Islands, and "Pines Up and Palms Down" taken in the Florida Everglades and Northwestern Quebec.

The Outing Publication Company, publishers of "Outing," outdoor and sporting life magazine of America are co-operating in the taking and editing of the series. The editorial board of the magazine, under the direction of Albert Brett, the editor in chief in association with C. L. Chester, the producer, have placed the entire series of releases for the year 1918, the first thirteen of which in addition to the six shown, are ready. These future releases embrace scenes never heretofore touched by a motion picture camera, and call for explorations far removed from the beaten paths of civilization. It is expected that these productions will be released by way of the independent market.

Mr. Goldburg states that bookings for first and second run will be accepted direct from theatres situated in territories that are not disposed of before April 15 to independent exchanges. Advertising matter will be issued befitting a feature production. This is unusual in connection with a one-reel subject, but it is the opinion of Mr. Goldburg that these releases are not to be played as "filler-ins" but as an added attraction to the feature play.

Managing Director Harold E. Edel of The Strand theatre, New York, has signed a contract booking the entire series of the "Outing-Chester" travel-scenics, commencing April 21, 1918.

In connection with these single reel travel-scenics, there will be distributed to the audience, picture post-card folders containing interesting views from each release. These post-card folders being made similar to those that are sold containing interesting views of cities in the United States and are adapted to mailing.

Freuler Relinquishes Lone Star Management

The affairs of the Lone Star Corporation now nearing a termination, John R. Freuler, who conceived and organized the project for the making and selling of Charles Chaplin comedies, has passed the management to other hands.

The new officers of the corporation are: Paul H. Davis, president and treasurer; John F. Cuneo, vice-president; Dr. George Hall, secretary.

The Lone Star's last Chaplin picture was released several months ago, and with manufacturing and distribution work all done, the winding up of the concern's affairs only remains to be handled.

Strand Benefit Nets Big Sum for French

Under the auspices of Miss Anne Morgan and the Committee for Devastated France a benefit performance was given at the Strand theatre, New York, on Thursday, March 28, and $20,000 in cash was turned over to the committee for the fund for rebuilding the ruined French villages. Every seat was occupied and standing room was sold to over 500, while a thousand or more were turned away disappointed. Miss Morgan was present and James M. Beck presided.

Richmond, of General, to Be an Aviator

H. E. Richmond, an employe in the department of W. M. Gulick, auditor of General Film Company, has resigned to enlist in the aviation service of the army at Fort Slocum. He expects to be transferred to a Texas aviation training station within a short time. Mr. Richmond is the fourth General Film headquarters employe to enter the service of the government. L. M. Cooper enlisted in the navy, and Cyrus R. Cooper and Allan Adams entered the army some months ago.

Big Productions to Release "Sunset Princess"

Big Productions Film Corporation, with executive office in the Candler building, New York, announce the early release of its special independent production, "The Sunset Princess," featuring Marjorie Daw, who will be remembered for her work opposite Douglas Fairbanks in one of his more recent pictures. In the supporting cast are seen C. M. Griffin, Wallace Coburn, Barbara Gordon, Pat Carson, Madge Carson, Perry Taylor, Frank Owens, Jim Fulton, A. Stuart and Mae Evelynne.

"The Sunset Princess" is an adaptation from Wallace Coburn's poem, "The Daughter of Yellowstone Pete," found in the author's book of poems, "Rhymes of a Round-Up Camp." The scenes of the play are laid in the heart of the Rockies on the Circle C ranch in Montana. More than five hundred head of cattle are seen in the round-up scene. Big Productions Film Corporation will offer territorial rights for the entire world. Announcement of release date will be made soon.

Distinct Novelties Promised in "His Daughter Pays"

What are said to be some wonderfully effective scenes of double exposure work are shown in the Piedmont production of "His Daughter Pays," a special production, to be released soon. A novelty which the producers promise is a scene showing the inner workings of a large secret vault used by a government agent in his work. This is a steel lined room fitted with trap doors and blind passageways that permits of the staging of thrillers it is said.

Another rather startling scene occurs in the fourth reel of "His Daughter Pays." This is where the younger sister of a notorious dancer, who had been kidnapped, meets her older sister face to face. The events leading up to this scene and the scene itself are said to be tensely dramatic. The roles of the two sisters are presented by Gertrude McCoy and Pauline Curley and the Piedmont people assert that these two actresses have carried their parts with telling effect.

"His Daughter Pays" is now being cut and assembled. The method of release together with dates and other details, will be announced within the next few days. Immediately after this has been determined Piedmont will begin work on another feature dealing with the world war, the scenes of which are laid in Italy. The story tells of the treatment of the Italians at the hands of their enemy neighbors.

W. H. Productions Starts Summer Campaign

W. H. Productions Company, having disposed of the entire world rights to the Wm. S. Hart features, and ninety per cent of the territory on the twenty-eight Mack Sennett Keystone two-reel comedies are now launching a campaign for the summer months, which is expected to put these productions "over the top" in first-class shape. Last week the folowing was announced.

"It is a well known fact," said one of W. H. Productions Company officials, "that there is a slump in the distribution of independent productions during the summer months. Nevertheless the exhibitors require good features, but cannot afford to pay big rental prices, because of the parallel dropping off of their patronage.

"Independent distributors usually hold over their special feature productions until the fall in order to secure better prices. The overhead expense of the independnt exchange man is just as great in the summer as it is during the rest of the year, and, therefore, it is just as essential that he secure good features during these months.

"We have foreseen this condition and are releasing a series of five Bessie Barriscale re-issues and the series of eighteen Shorty Hamilton two-reel comedies at this time at prices that insure a profit during the summer months for the independent exchanges handling this product, and good big special pictures at summer prices for the exhibitor."

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Thomas Turns in a Live Tip

Splendid Examples of Artistic Advertising which Will Draw New Patrons Created by Omaha Theatre

NEWSPAPER space costs money. Therefore, some exhibitors cannot see the use of buying in and "running the risk" of getting returns. More exhibitors halfway converted to the use of display do buy a certain amount of space and then are content to fill—and they generally fill generously—it up with any sort of old stuff and let it go at that.

That moment when you call their attention to something unusual they can do with this space, they meet this argument with the one that they repeated before they were first converted to the use of advertising—they "can't afford it." Unless the local facilities are such that you cannot get results within a specified time, or unless you are so far removed from the designers and engravers that you cannot convey your ideas to them, the theory that you should not make every inch of the space you use the most persuasive, even at the cost of a few additional dollars, is just as mistaken a theory as the excuse of the man who turns down exploitation of any sort.

Advertising pays; the better the advertising, the more it pays.

There are certain rules of good advertising, rules of type and border effects, of the use of cuts and of descriptive matter and a dozen and one other things that are referred to from time to time in these columns, but, after all, the sort of advertising that is worth more than any other to a theatre is the distinctive sort—the sort that impresses the reader at once that it is the advertising of your house, but at the same time attracts attention because of the merit of the displays themselves.

H. M. Thomas, manager of the Strand theatre, Omaha, and a member of the Advisory Board, has created one of the most distinctive styles of advertising that we have seen and on the opposite page we are reproducing some of the specimens of his recent work. In order to appreciate the worth of these displays it must be understood that the originals, as they appeared in the newspapers, are what is known by engravers as "combination work." There are two general classes of cuts, half-tones, which are made through a screen and which results in a gray background. The other class is line cuts, such as are shown under "Your Idea and Ours," which reproduce only the effect as they appear in the newspapers. "Combination" means the use of both effects. In order to meet requirements we have reproduced all of these displays in the half-tone effect, and readers should understand that the effect which is brown on the opposite page, stands out as white in the display as they are designed.

You have heard a great deal about "institutional" advertising, and most of the time the expression is used without the writer knowing what it means. Translated into free English, it means establishing your theatre as the thing in your city and playing on the attractions only to the extent of proving that your house is the ONLY house, and that you play the best attractions.

The display on Douglas Fairbanks in "Reaching for the Moon" is a splendid example of institutional advertising. It couples the star and the theatre as the two favorites, and the appeal is so immediate that the display needs nothing more than a picture of Fairbanks and a smaller one of the theatre and then a few lines about the production. The effect upon the reader is this: "Here is my theatre, the best, getting the best attractions." The appeal is immediate, intimate. It couples the spirit of your pride in the theatre and your sureness that the attraction offered will be a good one. This display is four columns wide by nine inches deep. The material required for its design was a half-tone picture of Fairbanks and a photo of the theatre. The line effect behind the star's picture sets it off and the double circle arrangement gives the whole display the "cog" effect.

Addition to the star's picture of her as she appears in three scenes in the production and the use of the drawing of the Christmas tree in the upper right corner, gives the same effect to the Mary Pickford display, made in the same manner and occupying the same space as the Fairbanks ad.

For Charles Ray, Mr. Thomas has used a background of Ben Day, an effect which any engraver can give, with a lighter Ben Day effect around the edge. The portion in the center referring to the Strand is in black with a white background, furnishing a contrast that is effective without being startling. This display is three columns wide and seven inches deep.

However, it remains for the Wallace Reid picture to carry the most striking use of the picture of a star. In this case the photograph is made the dominating part of the ad. Here is an actor who is a favorite with thousands. The first effect of the display is to get the attention of everyone of his admirers. The next is to attract the eye by the artistic character of the advertisement. It is the same size as the Ray display, but far more effective because of the larger use made of the star's picture.

Still different from any of the others is the silhouette effect used on Wm. S. Hart, in "The Cold Deck." This display runs four inches deep across seven columns, and merely includes pictures of Hart in action and a couple of pictures of the pony, with a larger center silhouette of the star. No one in the world could miss the page on which this appears without one's eye taking in each one of the figures and reading the few words that give the name of the star, of the theatre and of the picture.

But it is mainly with the half-tone effect that we have to deal here as being far out of the ordinary. There is not a city in the country over 75,000, where the leading theatre could not afford to follow this plan at least for a few weeks and see the result that it would give in bringing to the theatre people who have never been there before.

Displays that have the old seven and six style, advertising that never seeks for any new effects, need not expect to attract attention one week, if the same style has been followed for week after week previous. To get over its appeal to new patrons, the theatre must do something new.

It is to be regretted that there is still a small percentage of the people who still believe that the photoplay is something beneath their dignity. Advertising of the sort that has been used by Mr. Thomas will convince them to the contrary.

And what a contrast these displays are to those designed by the men who think that because they take a certain amount of space they have to talk to their patrons for ten minutes in type large and small to get the worth of their money.

Valuable display is, first, the sort that gets the public eye, and then, the sort that attracts attention.

Mr. Thomas has set a new mark for the higher class houses. It is an example easy to follow. And certainly it is a plan that will make new business.

Newspaper Studies

DELAY in the mails have been responsible for our failure to receive the copies of the newspapers intended to be covered in this week's article. Many lapses may be expected hereafter from the same cause. However, the series will be resumed next week and they will be continued until the principal points have been covered.

"Great" Pictures Must Not Be Morbid

WHEN we announced the formation of the Advisory Board we declared that it was going to do a great service for the industry. Its first symposium, now being published, has proved that. Every manufacturer of films is looking to the opinions as expressed by these foremost exhibitors.

This week George B. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre, Salt Lake City and Frank L. Newman, president and manager of the Regent and Royal theatres, Kansas City comment on two "great" pictures. They were magnificently produced and splendidly acted, yet they left the audience "in the dumps."

Mr. Newman declares that the picture he is talking about was one of the greatest pictures that he ever saw but it "tired" the patrons. Mr. Carpenter tells about the other and quotes a shop-girl as saying: "There's not a laugh in it." We happened to see the same two pictures the same day at two New York theatres. We can sympathize with the patrons and with the theatre managers who did only "ordinary" business and probably left the patrons without the desire to see another picture for weeks—probably because they feared that the same sort would be offered for their "amusement."

Sam W. B. Coon, manager of the Liberty, Spokane, Wash., is a little inclined to blame the exhibitors themselves for failing to keep a close hand on the public touch, but he, too, wants better pictures.

Do you want them? If you do read these opinions and let us know what is the matter with the pictures that YOU are getting.

GEORGE E. CARPENTER, manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre, Salt Lake City, would start at the very beginning of pictures in order to get better product. He believes that the habit of copying is one thing that is responsible, and blames the producers for ordering a certain class of pictures just because one of this sort, made by some other producer, has happened to score a hit.

If we knew just what the Public (Upper case P, Mr. Printer) wanted, we would all be millionaires—but we don't, that's the rub! However, the average exhibitor believes he has a sneaking conception that he has more of a glimmering idea in this connection that has the average program producer.

The Great American Novel has never been written, and the Great American Picture, carrying universal appeal in equal intensity throughout the country, yet remains to be screened.

A "good picture" is, in a measure, a matter of geography. Environment is a big factor in the success or partial failure of a production.

Pictures always will be entertainment for the masses. The exhibitor with high ideals who tries to "elevate the masses" finds it a costly experiment. The plaudits of the high-brows in his town may be sweet music to his ears, but they don't help out the payroll to any appreciable extent. Nevertheless every healthy exhibitor senses that it pays to be decent.

The writer may be wrong, but it seems to him that the proper place to start is at the beginning—the source of the output, the executive councils of the scenario department. With this end in view he would respectfully ask Mr. Average-Program Producer:

Is it not a fact that the star "high-brow" scenario man on a salary at your studio, owing to force of circumstances, is the proud possessor of a restricted and local viewpoint on life in general and never has seriously studied the delights and wants of the great public, the Masses?

If so, has he not a supercilious idea that genius is divinely called to show the hoi-polloi the error of their likes and dislikes?

Are not the average scenario writer and director somewhat of copyists? If not, do not you, Mr. Producer, instruct them that since a rival concern made such a hit with a certain type of screen offering that it is up to them to climb into the band wagon or get off the lot?

Does not the average producer bank too much on stage, book and magazine successes? Does he not think that the sun rises and sets on Broadway, New York, and anything bearing the brand of a New York success MUST go big all over the country?

Has he realized that a laugh is worth a hundred groans in any market, and that a sermon on the screen, a costume play, an allegorical production, a dramatization of a grand opera and kindred ambitious efforts do not appeal to the masses to any alarming extent?

When is he going to grasp the big fundamental truth that what the dear old public dotes on is a reflection on the screen of their own every-day lives, a simple story that rings true, well done by capable people ably directed amid appropriate settings?

And when, oh when, will the average producer arrive at the correct conclusion that the masses resent mawkish, obvious plots and stories with an orthodox "moral" ending calculated to instill into the minds of those of impressionable age that human society is rottenness and the truth is not in it?

Furthermore, when will Mr. Average Producer realize that 65 per cent. of the patronage of the average motion picture house is made up of women and their families?

To digress:

An exhibitor's personal likes and dislikes are no true criterion in the large—the box-office is the barometer.

Last week we ran what we deemed to be the best thing a popular emotional actress has done on the screen. It was a film version de luxe of a heavy drama popular thirty years ago when presented by a world-famous tragedienne. It subsequently was the theme for successful grand opera, and as such we advertised it heavily. On the opening day the receipts fell off one-third; on the subsequent three days patrons had opportunity to place hats and wraps on adjacent seats.

The verdict of the masses was summed up in the following conversation overheard in the lobby:

Girl entering theatre—How's the show, Milly?

Girl leaving theatre—Honest, Gert, there ain't a laugh in it!

The next evening one of our regular patrons took the trouble to step into our office to congratulate the management on the class of productions we were presenting—all of which brings us back to the opening statement that if we knew what the public wanted we would all be millionaires.

It is needless to remark that pictures go in cycles. We are now entering the epoch when the simple story, true to life and carrying optimism and sunshine not only in action but in breezy sub-titles, will be the money-maker.

It is time, Mr. Producer, to indulge in spring housecleaning and sweep into the discard big salaried egotists with warped imaginations and distorted love for the bizarre and the fantastic. Throw open the windows, let in a little fresh air and install some new blood with a sane viewpointt on what constitutes entertaining screen drama.

In the meantime, if Mr. Program Producer still feels that he has a mission to perform in "educating the masses to better things," let him hire a hall and not expect the exhibitor to do all the pioneer work, hampered by an Oregon boot in the form of inflated rentals to cover the cost of expensive experiments.

Let him at the same time recognize the fact that because a picture goes big in New York that it must of necessity be a "Stem-winder" all over the country.

By the same token, the name of a Broadway star means little or nothing to the motion picture patron of the masses 2,000 miles away. As the immortal William said: "The play's the thing."

SAM. W. B. COHN, manager of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, Wash., believes that the exhibitor himself is largely responsible for the production of inferior pictures, but still he declares that he has yet to deal with an audience that would not appreciate still better pictures than are being made. He wants the morbid and the vulgar themes entirely omitted.

I am an optimist—I believe manufacturers and producers are making better pictures. I also believe that they will have to continue turning out better productions tomorrow than they are doing today. People will demand a higher standard of stories and a more elaborate production of the exhibitor, who in turn will make his desires known to the distributor and manufacturer. This sentiment and action is bound to shoot the mark for "ordinary" and "just good enuf" pictures to pieces.

Compare the productions of today with those of a year ago. You will find a good many of the trite plots, empty situations and cheap thoughts missing. Of course there are exceptions to this rule. There are a few organizations which continue to capitalize morbid and vulgar themes, but as a whole producers are "seeing the light," and "the handwriting on the wall" spells r-u-i-n for those directors who will continue to make alleged productions of a questionable nature.

Personally I believe that the exhibitor is largely responsible for the production of inferior pictures. There are those who will buy mediocre releases because they are cheap. That is their only consideration. Then there are a few who demand stories and plots of a questionable nature because their vision is limited. They sincerely believe that they know what the public wants.

A producer must be encouraged to make better pictures. He is in business to make money, and the only way he can do this is to cater to the desires of the exhibitor and public.

However the producer is to be censored for his neglect in having failed to keep his fingers on the public's pulse—his lack of progressiveness in not having an established department which keeps in close touch with exhibitors and movie-going people everywhere—a bureau which can and will ascertain what the patrons of moving picture shows want in the way of amusement. This same department should and could educate the people to appreciate better pictures should their taste or desire for amusement be cheap and unintelligent.

I might add in closing this brief article, that the above deductions and conclusions have been gained by exhibiting experience. I have catered to the so-called "high-brow" and "low-brow" trade, and I have yet to find the audience which would not appreciate better pictures, and when I speak of "better pictures" I mean brighter, cleaner and more carefully studied productions, if educated to them.

F. L. NEWMAN, president and manager of the Royal and Regent theatres, Kansas City, Mo., has some strong views on what is the matter with pictures today, but he explains that his time has been taken up with the general strike in Kansas City, which is told of elsewhere. However, he points out that the people do not want morbid pictures and cites a recent instance:

I am going to write you a very brief letter on Better Pictures because my mind is not really clear on account of this strike.

I think the first thought to be given by the producer is what class of stories will appeal to the majority of people. I have found in my experience that in nearly every case where a picture is a success in my theatre—it is a success in nearly every theatre—in other words the biggest per cent of the people like a story that cannot be told in the first reel. In other words they start off the story and give you nearly all there is to it and then it seems to a patron, a waste of time to see just what he expected.

The producer must always have in mind that he must entertain the ladies as well as the men and when he has a story that it full of mush as you call it, the men folks are not very keen for that. He must have something in his story that has a thrill in it and have plays that move swiftly and at the same time keep in mind that beautiful gowns and beautiful children are always welcome.

Just recently we showed a wonderful picture, in fact I thought it the most unusual play that I have seen in years and the only one of that particular kind. The story in a way was very morbid, the scenes were different, and it was really wonderful, still it did not please the patrons because it tired them out and at these times I believe that pictures that will entertain them are of more value than those that make them have bad dreams when they go home after the show.

I appreciate that it is impossible for any producer to make pictures that will please every one. Photo-plays are to portray life. In a great many instances the producer may have a wonderful story and ofttimes kill it by having it miscast. For instance, our greatest number of patrons are women, in fact I believe that is the rule all over the country, and they are very critical about the leads in the picture. The producer must always keep in mind that when a woman falls in love with a man the audience must see just what this woman fell in love for, in other words it must look possible. We understand that ofttimes in real life some beautiful woman may fall in love with a homely man, but in pictures they do not seem to fit because pictures are supposed to be good to look at and naturally good looking women and good looking men play a big part in the pictures.

I believe that costume plays and wig stories are a thing of the past unless it is on very rare occasions where a wonderful production is made and that should be very rare. I find that the play of today—instead of 1918, if they can make it 1920 it is still better; and also plays that have no star, it seems that it is almost impossible to get business, how good the picture may be unless there is some one in the picture that is well known and that has a following. At the present time the star in the picture is the biggest asset we have for our box-office there is no doubt—still we must have stories for these stars that are not impossible, for too much of the same kind of story for the star is almost a detriment to the star and to the box-office.

I mentioned in this letter that I was only going to write a very few lines but when I get started on this subject I do not know when to stop so I had better quit right now.

ECKEL theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., has an effective Sunday announcement on "Blue Jeans," in which the spirit of the picture is carried throughout. Note that the picture of the star and the title of the picture are brought out as the main things and that the main part of the display is given the Ben Day effect, which comes as near as possible to any black and white effect of giving the "Blue Jeans" idea.

Here is a case where the name of the star is used in relatively small type, and some advertisers may think that it is too small. But it seems to us that with the large cut of Miss Dana used this objection is overcome. Certainly there is so little reading matter in the entire display that everyone will read every line of it, and that the main thing sought—to attract the reader's attention—has been gained in a first-class manner.

"Gee! That made me think!" Which proves that a jolt in time saves nine.

ONCE before we have called attention to the effective manner in which Fay's theatre, Providence, R. I., uses cuts in its displays. This theatre is primarily a combination house, but in its Sunday displays which regularly occupy a space 8½ inches deep across the top of the page the feature picture is always given the dominating position.

In the display on "Today," Fay's makes one of the most striking uses of a cut that we have ever seen. The photograph of Miss Reed is bound to get the eye of everyone who turns to this page, and on the other side of this is the display matter which will be read. The special border adds an Easter touch.

Get out of the idea that a cut is something merely incidental to a display. In this case it comes near being the whole thing, and the use of it in this attractive matter certainly makes the Fay announcement stand out beyond that of all the other Providence theatres for the week.

Don't worry about the patrons going to other theatres once in a while. Worry about making your theatre so much better that they will unconsciously compare the two and find yours the one worth while.

IT is interesting to see how the idea of big display advertising spreads in various sections of the country. We have time after time called your attention to the progressiveness of the newspapers of the Pacific Northwest. Here is an example from San Diego, Cal., a city whose population is given by the census as less than 50,000, yet two of the theatres with their regular attractions occupy almost a solid page of the Sunday newspaper.

While the Cabrillo was talking about the success of "The Song of Songs" in play form at the Eltinge theatre, it overlooked the big hit that it made as a motion picture at the Rivoli.

GORDON F. FULLERTON has done something new with using the flag effect in the lettering of the Liberty theatre, Seattle, Wash. This ought to be particularly effective in these war times and we expect to see a number of theatres adopt the idea, especially for use in connection with the showing of patriotic productions. We would not advise the use of this the entire time, but it does serve as a most interesting variation.

"Lest We Forget," the Metro special, is the first picture with which this design has been used, and for this Sunday display a space twenty inches deep across five columns was used.

A striking ad used during the week was that of the Statue of Liberty in white on a black background and bearing the title of the picture in black.

Strand theatre, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. In several of the displays that have been sent us this same cut has been used as the main part of the advertisement with the minimum of other matter. In this case the designer has attracted attention to the things that he wants to say by using the horizontal line effect. This brings out the local announcements without interfering with the other.

In some of the displays on this picture attention is called to the fact that the star is a brother of a Cedar Rapids man. This gives it a good local punch, and we hate to think about theatre managers all over the country who never take the opportunity that this or that star is a home product and thereby capitalize the localized interest.

One of the things that makes all of the advertising of the Strand attractive is the fact that the man who writes it seems to have the exact knack of saying just enough and then quitting.

Don't worry about the House That Jack Built; the one that you are building is the one that counts.

"DIFFERENT" advertising is generally good because it is different. Palace theatre, Wichita, Kan., is easily one of the leading theatres of the country so far as advertising goes, and though the last census gives the city a population of only 54,000, there are scores of cities many times as large that could do well to profit by the example set here.

Out of a number of specimens of good advertising of the Palace we select this because it is so different. The George Beban feature and the Arbuckle two reeler deserved to divide honors and this has been done effectively. Note that no cuts are used, but the white space is left where they might have been placed. No reader of the Wichita papers passed over the page without seeing this display, we feel sure.

BLACK and white effects are striking when they are well carried out, as we told you last week. Here is another splendid example, this one coming from the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee. Always be very careful when dealing with halftones to see that they are made to stand out and that they do not lose detail by being merged with the black effect. In this case the figure of Pauline Frederick is brought out by the fact that most of it is surrounded by white and so the portion within the black space carries the detail through. The lettering effects are especially good, and by making the name of the theatre, that of the star and the title of the picture the three things to be displayed the effect on the eye is instant. In using the black and white effects you must use large lettering to be attractive.

FOR those who are inclined to believe that money for advertising is money wasted, and that heavy advertising cannot bring business in a smaller city, there is a lesson in the experience of Mr. Phelps Sasseen, manager of the Anderson theatre, Anderson, S. C. Anderson is a city of 9,600.

This opportunity came with the booking of the big Wharton serial, "The Eagle's Eye." Mr. Sasseen recognized the opportunity of cleaning up by going strong on this advertising and so he ran a "teaser" campaign in advance of the showing of the first episode and then big advertising just before. The result was that 2,011, or 20 per cent of the population paid admission to see the first episode.

Reproduced here are two of the displays. These larger advertisements were mainly talks to the people about what the picture shows. Several of them were in editorial form and though the one reproduced cannot be read in its present reduced form, the displays had a punch in every sentence.

Mr. Sasseen was not satisfied with the record that he made on the first episode, but immediately advertised the fact of his big business and cautioned everyone not to miss the second, and then the business was even larger.

Making People "Talk" My Theatre

This is the fourteenth of our series of articles, "The Diary of a Successful Exhibitor," by an exhibitor who tells each week what he is doing to develop his house, the lessons that he learns and the errors that he discovers. It is a frank discussion of the pleasures and evils of exhibition in a town of 15,000, and the tips contained here will probably be of value to managers in all sections.

By a Successful Exhibitor

THIS story of my experiences has now come up to a period about a year from the date that I am writing this. By this time I had been in business a little more than two years. I had the cream of the business of my town, though the two other houses, under the same management, were still operating. The three houses, were located within two blocks of each other and we were all at least striving for the same class of business—or rather for all the available business.

At this time I was still changing my program three times a week, but now in addition to the feature I was running a comedy and a news reel or scenic. I had made gradual improvement in my theatre, including enlarging it so as to seat a couple of hundred more people and building a new front. I had actually taken out of the business only enough to pay the money that I had borrowed and to pay for the improvements and at the same time to live decently. All the rest of the earning went back into the business itself, as fast as I found use for it.

I knew months before this that my competitor was milking his houses dry in an attempt to keep up the pace. At any time that he was driven to improve the physical appearance of his house he had to borrow the money, for the simple reason that in his wild effort to put on a bigger show than mine he was often spending more money than he took in. An exhibitor can afford to do this for a few weeks for the sake of advertising, but he cannot keep up this pace long. I have told you some of the tricks that he tried, and now at the last resort he began to offer double feature bills.

A few weeks ago I noted that an exhibitor asked Mr. Rothapfel how he should meet the opposition of double features. Let me tell you how I did it—mainly by paying no attention to these "bargain offers." He had already had one disastrous experience with reducing prices, but his policy was now the same thing in effect—apparently giving twice as much for the same money as he did before. Now, I am familiar enough with the fact that there are some cities in the country, and some large ones, where double feature bills are the rule, but I can only say, in the light of experience, that the exhibitors in those cities are unfortunate and that they are doing a great deal to injure the popularity of pictures as a whole.

You, of course, remember, the days when a picture show consisted of two, three or four reels of one reel or split reel pictures, it used to be the custom of people in the larger cities to go "down town" and to visit probably two or three different shows in the course of the afternoon or evening. People don't do that nowadays, for the reason that they get enough in one show, and it seems to me that the very moment that you begin "doubling up" the shows on them, you are reaching the same result, but that instead of letting the public voluntarily go to see two shows you are making them see two involuntarily, even in the same theatre.

There is some psychology to this thing. There is a reluctance on the part of a great share of the public to leave "before it is all over." A great percentage of the people feel that they ought to see all that is coming to them. The result is that the great share of your patrons will sit through the double bill; and for that reason some managers think that the double bills are popular. But a big percentage of those who do stay for the whole performance are tired out. You are certainly killing a potential patron for the next day or the day following. It always reminds me of the Thanksgiving dinner when some of us have the habit of eating so much that we don't want anything for a couple of days more.

I did only two things to meet this sort of competition. In the first place I issued a slip program for each change of bill and listed each picture that I showed, even if they were one-reelers, and where possible I gave the casts or some descriptive matter. I included the titles of all these pictures in my daily advertisements. Of course, the feature picture was given the greater share of the displays, but I took care that something should be said about each of the others, and occasionally I featured a comedy or a scenic, or some important news event ahead of the feature—not because the feature was inferior, but because I wanted to direct the public attention to the variety of my offerings.

At first my competitor was paying $10 a day for each of two features at each of his houses. That was 400 people that he had to get into his house to pay the film rental alone.

But the cost of the feature is not the main thing so far as harm done the house is concerned. It is hard enough to insure that you will have one good feature all the time, and to have two the difficulty is doubled. And don't forget that the public will remember the poor one of the two features rather than the one good one where he has the double dose.

The next thing that attracted my attention was that my competitor fell into the habit of advertising his "great double bill" and that he lost sight of the advertising points of the features themselves. He fell into the habit of dealing with quantity rather than quality. He could have made the people talk about a double bill if he had put on one, say, once a month, but when it came to be a habit he could not continue this word of mouth advertising, and he lost his chance to make the people talk about his ONE FEATURE. Do you see the point?

It was inevitable that my competitor should take the next step and make one of the two features a cheaper picture. He had to do it to pay expenses. I simply kept improving my program all that I could, by adding better short subjects as they became available. And let me say right here without attempting to boost any particular company, that the short subjects have improved wonderfully in the past two years and that the exhibitor anywhere who is ignoring them is overlooking a bet. Especially in towns where you have stiff competition and the features that you and your competitors are showing are of about the same quality, the kind of short pictures that you use are going to put your theatre ahead.

I found that not only are these short subjects important because of the variety they give to the program, but because of the fact that they give "more to talk about." Especially in a smaller city, the word of mouth advertising is an important matter, and this I soon found and so I devoted a great part of my energies to making people talk about my house. If you can make them talk about the feature—fine. But if you can also make the ones that pass the feature by without comment tell their friends about the scenic, of the comic cartoon or some event shown in the news weekly, you have added that impetus to your FREE publicity.

Just as soon as I realized that the double feature program was making the patrons of the two houses operated by my competitor pick the weak one of the features for their comment, I determined that I would devote the more attention to seeing that every part of the bill at my house should be something to arouse comment. I never was guilty but one time of putting on one of the "sensational" pictures, but I found that it was very easy to make the little things stand out and arouse comment.

I used these to interest school children, to get special attention from women's clubs, or from various classes, though I never picked anything that would not also be of general interest. But by getting the class interest and gradually merging these patrons with the regulars I was soon able to get just about everyone in town that could be brought to a picture house without a rope.

Portland Theatre Starts a "War Garden"

Manager William Ely of the Hippodrome theatre, Portland, Ore., has started a new publicity stunt by starting a "war garden." Employees of the house have leased a two-acre tract and are going to devote their spare time this spring and summer to seeing that things worth while grow on it. Incidentally, the stunt got considerable space in the Portland papers.

Rothapfel's Answers to Exhibitors

Mr. Rothapfel Will Answer Here any Questions Regarding Problems in Exhibition. The Only Conditions Are That the Questions Must Not Bear on the Merits of Particular Pictures or Services and That They Must Come Through the NEWS. Address Your Inquiries "ROTHAPFEL ADVICE, EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU, MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

LXIV—Several weeks ago I noticed one of the inquiries that you answered and which came from a manager where he was up against the "bargain bills." I have a situation that is just a little bit worse than this. I am giving the best show in town, and there is no doubt about that. Were you willing to pass on the merits of film services, you would see that as soon as I told you the pictures that I am using and those that are going to the two opposition houses. But the thing that I am up against is the souvenir game and the contests. Every week at one of these other houses there is a voting contest, with a prize awarded to some one. At the other house there is a constant stream of souvenirs being offered. I am sure that the contest plan is hurting the picture business, but you can understand that in a town of 5,000 the girls are able to sell the tickets to people on their own popularity. In the last analysis, that is so much money invested, and the people who have bought the tickets do not care to go to other shows. The souvenirs get a large share of the children, and lots of them bring their parents with them. I know that I am up against a hard proposition. I am getting the cream of the real support of the town, but I must have more to make my theatre pay. I am now running a feature and a comedy, and changing three times a week, there being no Sunday show. Can you suggest anything for me to do to offset this sort of competition?—AMBITIOUS.

I CAN readily sympathize with you in your plight against the "bargain bills" and souvenir program. Of course there is only one thing to do. If you find that your bill does not combat these things then it is up to you to go into it yourself, but do it in a dignified way. Sometimes it is better to get the other fellow's game and use the other fellow's methods, but of course improve upon it, and you will soon see the error of his ways.

In all my career I have never given a souvenir nor a bargain in my entertainments and I would do it only as a last resort and if I felt sure that it would be to the interest of my theatres.

LXV—This is not so much a question of architecture as of atmosphere. I am about to build a house in a state where the foliage grows the year round. It has been the custom here to build theatres with stores in the front portion and then the lobby in the center leading to the theatre. I have planned to use the front for a confectionary store and an ice cream parlor, but my daughter has the idea of setting the theatre back from the street some twenty feet, using palm trees and other effects there and serving drinks and selling candies there in the evenings. It will unquestionably make the theatre distinctive, and the receipts from the store would not be large at the best. Do you believe this worth while to make the theatre distinctive and what further suggestion would you make?—FLORIDA.

I AM very glad to answer this question for you and my advice is, give up the store front idea and build a little garden effect that you have in mind.

You will find that it will pay you greater than any rent that you could get out of the store. It will make your house institutional. The city will be proud of you and furthermore it will be the biggest publicity and advertising stunt that you could possibly have, and in that alone it will more than repay you the amount of rent that you could receive from any store uses.

You are to be congratulated on having a daughter who has the brilliancy to give you such an idea. I might further add that the front of the Rivoli theatre, which of course you have seen pictures of, I estimate as being worth $50,000 a year to our institution merely because it is architecturally beautiful and is not spoiled by any store front. Hereafter if I ever have another theatre, that proposition will be of serious consideration.

LXVI—This is a town of about 5,000 inhabitants, which has one picture show, located on the main street, seating 400; also an opera house, which is located on a different street and not so good a location, and is an upstairs house, seating about 750. Another fellow is erecting a picture theatre on the same street and in the same block as the opera house It will be about the same size as the picture theatre which we own. What would you advise us about leasing this opera house and running it with the theatre that we now own? And how would you combat the opposition with which we are threatened? We have the opera house leased at present, but our lease expires in June, so would you advise us to renew the lease at $50 a month?—TENNESSEE.

I CANNOT tell you what to do in a case like this. It depends entirely upon your own judgment. You know the conditions and what you are up against and you ought to know what to do much better than I can sitting here at my desk in New York. It appears to me that $50 per month is small enough an amount for a house with a seating capacity of 750. I don't know what else to advise you except that you know best what your conditions are.

LXVII—I have been trying to study as well as I can your system of booking pictures. I understand that you take only those that you want and that you see them before they are shown. I also hope that you will pardon the comment that I have noted some pictures that have been shown at your houses that have not brought the money to me. Now, you understand, that in order to get certain pictures I have to agree to take all of the pictures in which certain stars appear. Most of these pictures are good; some are bad. If you feel reasonably sure in advance that you are going to get an inferior picture, but one that you have to take, how would you arrange the remainder of the program so as to leave the audiences fairly well pleased? I understand that this is a most unusual question, and I would not ask it if I did not feel sure that your showmanship is not so developed as to enable you to show mediocre features on occasion and still have a well rounded show.—R. P. P.

MY dear young man, booking pictures for two houses such as we have on Broadway is a much harder task than booking pictures for a small theatre in a small town. Our responsibility here is much greater. Our audience is a discriminating one. We spend about $14,000 a week on expenses alone so you see the responsibility therefore is much greater in proportion. If you are reasonably sure in advance that the picture is not as strong as you would like to have it then build up a good program around it.

Don't you think it might be your own fault and not the fault of the pictures? That you have not given it enough publicity and that it was not handled in the proper manner.

Remember it is a very difficult proposition to get good pictures all the time. This brings me back again to my old cry, make YOUR THEATRE THE THING and not the picture. I agree with you that it is a matter of showmanship and it depends entirely upon the construction of your program.

There are so many features that can be had to enhance your program and if the picture is not as strong as it should be then the entire bill around it should stand the test.

LXVIII—I have a five-piece orchestra, available in the evening, but not in the afternoon. Naturally, I have to show the same pictures at both afternoon and evening shows, if I give a matinee show at all, and this I have not been doing lately. However, with the exception of a couple of dollars more a month for electricity, it will cost me no more to give the afternoon show, and I believe that there is a large element of the women and children of this populous neighborhood of a big city that I could get if I could get some special appeal to them. With only the music of a piano, what inexpensive features should I add?—OHIO.

I WOULD suggest that you develop your show in the afternoons just as strong as in the evening. If, as you say, there is a populous neighborhood it will take the showmanship in you to develop in this neighborhood a following and clientele for your afternoon business. I am not in a position to tell you what to do because I do not know what the neighborhood is like.

However, I would advise you to develop your show in the afternoon just as good as at night and let the people know it. If at first it doesn't bring you any tangible results you might be surprised in a few weeks at the developments that will occur.

I have a very fine method of increasing afternoon business by giving Societies and Women's Clubs a certain amount of tickets to be sold by them for charity. The patron who comes to your theatre must pay the full price and you, of course, would be giving the tickets to charity, but under no condition give the patrons any free tickets. The Societies will give the money to charity and the influence will be to your advantage. The idea is to get them coming. Get some prominent woman in your neighborhood who is well liked to give a little talk, or have knitting bees, etc. so that they will congregate.

There are a great many ways by which you can improve the attendance. I don't think that the music will be an incentive to draw the crowds because three pieces added to what you have is not sufficient to draw business.

Seeing the Rialto and the Rivoli with Rothapfel

LIEUT. S. L. ROTHAPFEL, United State Marine Corps, is doing another big service to the nation this week at the Rivoli theatre, with the manner in which he is presenting "My Own United States," the big patriotic production. Sunday it drew the biggest crowds that we have ever seen at a motion picture house—we say drew them, for hundreds of them could not get within hailing distance of the theatre. We have a card that admits us to any part of Rothapfel's theatres at any time, but so dense were the masses in front of the house at nine o'clock Sunday evening that we had to hunt for ourselves a secret entrance in order to get into the theatre at all.

And after putting on this show and one of the best that we have ever known in the history of the Rialto, and conducting himself at the Rivoli during the whole of Sunday, Lieut. Rothapfel was off for Philadelphia Monday morning bright and early at the summons of the Marine Corps, of which he was a member before his first days as an exhibitor.

Certainly the presentation at the Rivoli is a wonderful one, and there is at least one brand new idea in the happy bill at the Rialto. But ideas are never done with him, for Sunday afternoon as we sat in his office he called attention to the peculiar manner in which the sublight was streaming into the room. "That gives me a new idea," he said, "I'll show it to you next week."

Things like this show why one may always expect something different at these two houses.

Patriotism rules from the flag decorated front of the house to the last peal of the organ at the end of the show, and it was near midnight when the last of the audience had left on Sunday. True, the war pictures are the fourth installment of the Italian official films, but certainly the element of patriotism is in them and all of the rest of the bill is thoroughly American.

"American Festival March," one of the most stirring of recent compositions, which was written by Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld for the Rialto's first anniversary is the overture, and Sunday it was led by Mr. Rothapfel with all the verve and expression of our greatest conductors. During the overture the whole house is in red with the center dome pink and gold lights on the orchestra. After a portion of the overture has been played, the Rialto Quartette, seated with the orchestra, sings, and barely is this over than the curtain part revealing the entire Rivoli male and female choruses before a background showing the Statue of Liberty with the red and white beams behind it on the blue sky. Then the chorus sings "America Our Cry," another original composition with wonderful effect. It was one of the most stirring numbers that we have ever heard. The big audiences go wild with applause several times during this number.

Then follows the second part of the impressive Educational Films picture, "Silent Wonderlands of the West," a series of splendid shots. This is introduced with Grieg's "Mourning," and then the organ takes it up and plays it with wonderful echo and "string" effects.

With the lights in the house all blue, the curtains part again, revealing the Rialto Quartette on the stage, seated, the drop showing a Southern plantation scene. "Kentucky Babe" is the effective number which brings tears to the eye.

Then follow the fourth instalment of the Italian war pictures. These are shown with succession of martial music, bugle calls and the crash of cannons. Possibly not so thrilling as the other three sections, these pictures present some very vivid actual battle scenes. Here again the audience was called to cheering time after time.

And now the big effect to which all of this first part of the program has been leading. The lighting giving the patriotic effect, and as the drums roll and bugles call the Rivoli quartette, in the orchestra sings "My Own United States," beginning with the familiar words "Breathes There a Man with Soul So Dead." Another call from the bugles follows and the curtains part showing an outline map of the United States with a red and white shield effect behind this and the entire background in blue. We wish that it were possible to tell fully of the musical score and effects during the picture. The audience is aroused from the very start of the picture and then there are scenes showing President Wilson and the boys marching away to war and the actual picture then starts. Suffice it to say that the entire gamut of patriotic music is run, and there are so many touches during the picture that the music and the film itself leave not a dry eye in the house. Some presentations that Rothapfel makes can be described in a manner that will give real hints to other exhibitors. This one cannot be, at least by the writer, who has rarely been so impressed by a presentation and who has never seen an audience more moved. It is enough to say that every one who saw the presentation went away a better American and more determined than ever to make every sacrifice that the Thing shall be destroyed.

At the evening performance Arnold Daly, the star of the picture, appeared in a Liberty Loan speech. He was applauded for a couple of minutes before he could be heard. Mr. Daly is a splendid actor, but we wouldn't call him a wonderful orator.

Now with this most impressive presentation and remembering the number of effects used, the choruses and the many things that enter into making the Rivoli a mighty big job for any one man, let us go to the Rialto where, as we said before, there is one of the most satisfying bills that we have ever seen there.

"Romeo and Juliet," a number that contains the most varied of music, from the theme of strife to that of love, with the tragic note in the end, is the overture, and it is played as only that orchestra with Dr. Reisenfeld with the baton can play it.

"The Cruise of the Quickern'ell," another one of the Educational-Robert Bruce scenics, follows, and this is shown with "The Rounders." It is filled with pretty scenes, but what stands out more than anything else is the humor of the titles and the musical selection here is ideal. Now this picture was the start of the laughs, for the Rialto bill this week is distinctly a comedy bill and the audience is kept laughing every moment that it was not applauding. That's just about the ideal effect to have upon an audience, we think. This sort of a bill is in contrast with those in which some morbid or strenuous picture brings to the eye and the mind phases of life that we want to forget these days.

Annie Rosner, who has a pleasing soprano voice, then sings "In Dreamland" from Victor Herbert's "Wizard of the Nile." The curtains part revealing the girl on the stage and at either side the display panels show Egyptian scenes.

Then comes the Animated, a prize among them all. It opens with Hearst-Pathe pictures of 10,000 Jackies being reviewed at Chicago, shown to "Before the Mast," and then follow pictures of ships that the men will man. The second march of the same series is played through Universal pictures of the capture of a German raider on the Pacific. Gaumont shows some highly interesting pictures of the American troops arriving at the French front, and one may imagine the applause that this gets, especially as the orchestra is crashing out "Hands Across the Sea." From the same source and to the same music there are shown pictures of the Governor of Massachusetts receiving the first shell fired by Americans. "March Lorraine" is stirring music for Premier Clemenceau's visit to Alsace, and then come Universal pictures of King George opening Parliament. Would any one, a few months ago, have believed that pictures of the English ruler would have brought storms of applause from American audiences. They do, and as these pictures are shown the music, is "Loyal Hearts" counterpointed with "God Save the King." Gaumont contributes another interesting feature with "Happenings in Washington," showing a luncheon party given by C. D. Gibson, and then President Wilson receiving a delegation of farmers. Here the music is "Diplomat's March." But it remains for the big smash to come with Roosevelt declaring that any one who sympathizes with the Germans should be hanged, and as the orchestra plays "There'll Be a Hot Time" we thought that the audience would take the roof off the theatre and then go out and start a young lynching all of its own.

This has all been done with an effect, to lead up to the big Liberty Loan punch that

This Week at the Strand

MANAGING DIRECTOR HAROLD Edel is getting a smashing effect with his arrangement of the Topical Review at the Strand theatre this week. This comes at the very end after the greater part of the Topical has been devoted to war picturs.

It opens with Screen Telegram pictures of San Francisco art pupils in a Liberty Loan poster contest and then presents pictures of Secretary McAdoo with his appeal and then comes the H-P pictures of marines at Chicago, the same as were shown at the Rialto, with "Semper Fidelis" being played. Screen Telegram presents Easter at Atlantic City and Pathe offers timber transportation in Sweden, the orchestra reproducing the rushing water effects. Paramount-Bray gives some amazing pictures of the heart in action, even showing that of an embryonic chick in an egg. Screen Telegram shows views of the Cubs at training and then the Giants, with the music, "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here." Hearst-Pathe shows arrival of Japanese sailors at San Francisco, but the audiences are uncertain as to how to take them and it does not get a hand. They were originally on the weekly at the Rialto, but it was too long, and as something had to go this went along with some others. Screen Telegram shows floods in Maryland and gets a laugh with "Fording the streets." Hearst-Pathe shows the departure of Chilean U-boats and Screen Telegram the capture of the German raider. Hearst-Pathe offers some quiet scenes along the French battle line and there is a burst of applause with a British tank bringin a captured Hun gun.

Now comes the smash. First Hearst-Pathe has a cartoon showing the effect of united command of the Allies and then there are pictures of General Foch. These are not motion pictures, but made from a photograph, it being noteworthy to observe that there has not been an action motion picture of Gen. Foch shown since he took supreme command. But the real big effect comes with the showing of the troops under him, first the marching columns of the British, then the French heroes and finally "Our Boys" with the orchestra playing "Over There" and the audience drowning out the notes with its applause. Then Roosevelt is shown with his appeal for "America first, last and all the time," and the theatre rings with cheers. The Topical comes to an end with a beautiful girl representing Liberty, draped in the American flag and making a silent appeal for the Liberty Loan.

There is a beautiful new setting used with the overture, "Cavalleria Rusticana," this week. It shows a sylvan scene with sheep grazing in the foreground and in the back a river and hills. Excellent effects are secured during the night scenes, with the cloud effects and the moon rising over the hills, the stars coming out and the light upon the water.

The chief vocal number this week is a comedy effect with the Halevy octette and Joseph Mann singing "The Italian Salad," a musical satire, that even in the strange tongue got plenty of laughs. The other musical number is Miss Mary Zentay, violinist, playing "Ziqeunerweusen," which isn't so bad as it sounds, for it only means "gypsy airs."

There is mainly good humor, with a touch of pathos through the feature, Marguerite Clark in "Rich Man, Poor Man." There is further comedy offering with Billie Rhodes in a new comedy and Bobby Bumps in "On the Road."

One of the most interesting of pictures is offered by Educational Films in "Strange Fishermen of Russia." This is so different from any other pictures that we have seen that it will cause a word of comment from any audiences. It is strange to watch the interest with which such pictures are followed and surely the audiences at the Strand are pleased with it.

Stop planning "what I would do if I had so and so." Think about what you have and develop it and then you're more likely to find your dreams coming true without merely dreaming.

comes now. Again, Gaumont contributes pictures of the British tank starting the drive and this is shown with "Merrymakers' Dance" from the "Nell Gwynne" suite and effects of the running motor. Universal shows marine starting the loan drive with Browning guns and the big orchestra takes up "Semper Fidelis," which continues through the Gaumont pictures of marines forming the words, "First to Fight." Certainly a wonderful appeal is made there.

Now the patriotic punch has been put over, and as comedy is the dominant feature of the bill the Animated is made to end with a series of roars induced by the first of the new International-Educational Films animated cartoons, the Katzenjammer Kids in "Vanity and Vengeance," the funniest thing of the kind that we have ever seen. Light, popular music was used here.

Now we mentioned that there was at least one novelty put over at the Rialto this week. Here it is and it is worth trying for the effect that it will have on the audience. During the animated there was only faint blue lighting in the main dome and so when the lights came up at the end of this number, the audience saw the members of the Rialto male and female choruses seated on the steps that lead to the stage and a moment later they began to sing "My Old Kentucky Home." This number is made all the more effective because one never sees the chorus come on or disappear, as they vanish after the feature has started, and here one is spared anything of the obvious effect. Of course, it makes a big hit with the audience.

We have never known a feature to get more laughs than "His Majesty Bunker Bean," with Jack Pickford. There is literally a laugh every moment and the audience has the time of its life throughout. The music is all popular and catchy and if the audience really had time to stop laughing for a moment it would have been humming the strains.

Then another big chorus effect. This is the march from "Aida." With the lights all pink and green the curtains part, showing the chorus, and after the number they march from the stage to a processional.

"Friend Husband," a Mack Sennett comedy in which the wonderful cat and dog play a considerable share is the other comedy element of the bill and the laughter started up again. Then everyone left the audience slapping his neighbor on the back and swearing that this was the best old world that ever was, and—to use the language of the "flapper" in the picture—that "we perfectly well knew it all the time."

Yes, these two bills are more than idea giving. They make one stop and think the heights that the development of motion picture presentation has reached.

It certainly does pay to strive for the best. When you can get audiences leaving your theatre like those that are leaving the Rivoli and the Rialto this week, you are creating thousands and thousands of patrons that will certainly make motion picture exhibition safe for you.

Striking stage display used by Harold B. Franklin at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, to encourage the Liberty Loan. The cut fails to reproduce the effect of bursting shells at the lower right hand corner. The display literally brought the people out of their seats.

How Two Danbury Theatres Draw Bulk of their Patronage from Out-of-Town

DANBURY, CONN., long famed as the home of the hatting industry, offers a remarkable study in motion picture conditions with its two theatres that are drawing upward of seventy-five per cent of their patronage from the surrounding smaller towns as far as twenty miles away. Danbury is situated on the dividing line between New York and Connecticut and the patronage therefore comes from two States.

Taylor Opera House, seating 1,100 and devoted entirely to motion pictures, and the Empress, seating 1,500, which runs pictures only for three days and then vaudeville and pictures for the remaining three days, are the two houses which are playing to capacity at almost every performance. Of course, there are few communities where the population is so dense, but these houses certainly offer a lesson.

One of the remarkable things about this state of affairs is that there are no suburban trolley lines and not over six trains a day enter the town, and a big share of the patronage comes from towns that have no railroad connection with Danbury. The answer to this is the automobile. The prosperous farmers of the section practically all own machines and travel to the city two and three times a week to see good pictures. Manager F. A. Shear, of the Empress, says that he has counted patrons who hailed from seventeen suburban points at a single performance.

Both of these theatres depend largely upon the newspapers for their advertising. The Empress uses the Danbury News only, while Manager B. J. Martin, of the Taylor Opera House, supplements this with papers at New Milford, Conn., and Brewster, N. Y. Mr. Martin uses the same style of advertising in the smaller papers as he does in Danbury. He is opposed to mailing lists. "Once we tried this and sent heralds broadcast," he said, "but the scheme cost too much money and the results did not warrant the expense. We cut off the mailing lists and our business has kept up just the same." But Mr. Martin is a great believer in posters to draw in the people from the surrounding country. He says:

"Rural dwellers like to see posters in their neighborhoods. We put up anything we can get—3-sheets, 6-sheets, 24-sheets. Each attracts attention and brings us good patronage. By such means we keep the rural people informed as to what we are going to show, their curiosity is aroused and in they come to spend an evening. We never have any trouble in getting our bills up. Simply give the owner of an advertising site some tickets and he is sure to welcome us. That is the only expense."

Mr. Shear also uses the bill-posting plan. "If we have an eight or nine-reel picture coming to the Empress, we get out in advance with the bills. They draw the trade in fine shape. They supplement completely the advertisements in the Danbury News, and between the two we can draw all the people our house will hold. Every person outside town likes to see the bills up, just as I happen to know that everyone watches for the News to see what attractions we are advertising. Then they make up parties and come in to see us.

"These neighborhood parties are great things for the rural resident. Many a man goes out among the neighbors who do not own cars and offers to take some of them 'in to the Empress' for an evening. Most car owners in the country prefer this plan of bringing four or six in with him to coming in alone or even with one other person. Perhaps they co-operate in their farm work to make up for such favors; at least that would seem to be the way they do things, for we are continually getting happy parties from the various districts on pleasant evenings. Of course, the farmer and his family cannot get into town in the afternoon, but the summer residents make up for that to a large extent. And in the off-season they show up very often for an afternoon of shopping topped off by a visit to the pictures."

"What do they like, these dwellers in the country?" Mr. Shear was asked. "Oh, anything with a laugh they will take in great numbers. A good strong comedy-drama is the thing to make them flock to town. But they sure do like a good laugh. And I find that is the case with the dwellers in town also. Everyone likes to laugh up here in Danbury.

Taylor Opera House runs motion pictures alone. The Empress carries pictures only on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, then a good vaudeville show is added for the rest of the week. With the Empress the big out-of-town days are Monday and Wednesday. The country people seem to prefer straight pictures to even very good vaudeville. Tuesday is rather a slow day with both houses; on Saturday the town seems to turn out for both houses, for on Saturday night many people are turned away for lack of room and go over to the other house for the show that is running.

Three of the unusual lobby "cards" used by the American theatre, Salt Lake City

Startling Results Achieved in Inexpensive Lobby Displays by Salt Lake City House

IT'S a mighty good sign when exhibitors all over the country begin striving for artistic effects in their lobbies. Last week we printed an account of the work that is being done at the Central Park theatre, Chicago. Here is another striking instance, this being the achievement of Parke Vawter, in charge of the lobby decoration for the American, the 3,000 seat Swanson and Nolan house in Salt Lake City.

Aside from their artistic merit, one of the important points about these decorations is that they are inexpensive. Mr. Vawter first found that a compo board costing about a dollar could be used time and again if water color paints were the only kind applied. Compo board when new contains a heavy sizing, and because of this the water color paints may be washed off with water. To dry them with a fan is the best. As soon as dry, a new design may be applied, and the board has all the appearances of being absolutely new. Vawter has a number of boards he has used from fifty to seventy-five times each, thus taking the place of mat boards which would not be purchased for less than twenty-five cents each, thereby making a saving of approximately $14, which is some item when it is considered that from ten to fifteen posters are used in the lobby each week.

Compo board has an additional value for lobby display work, as it is stiffer than mat board, and will hold up plaster paris designs. Mr. Vawter makes such posters as illustrated by the photographs herewith by using equal parts of plaster paris and whiting mixed with water to a creamy substance. This mixture he applies with a force funnel, and there is no limit to the designs that can be worked out along this line. To make the poster more stable, he places tacks in the compo board, and then puts the plaster paris whiting composition over the tacks which prevents the decoration from falling off or children from picking it off. Where the raised letters and designs were made with this composition, Mr. Vawter has found the best way to color it is to use bronze powders. These may be blown or dusted on, and when the composition has set, all that is not embedded in the composition will fall off, leaving a very brilliant and attractive surface.

An additional advantage of this style of poster is that the work can be done very speedily, and at the same time have a very high classed finish. Lettering with a force funnel such as the words "Today," "Hands Down" and "Weaver of Dreams" in the accompanying photographs, which are of raised letters, were done quicker with a funnel and the composition, than it would have been possible for the artist to do with a brush.

In the case of "The Weaver of Dreams," illustrated above, the background and figure are in natural colors and the raised lettering in pale gold. The color scheme for "Today" is antique bronze with white lettering and the panel in deep purple. There is more detailed work in the display on "Hands Down," the head and hat being in natural colors, the words "Hands Down" being in gold on a bluish background. Subordinate lettering is in Geranium Lake and the panel in turquoise blue. The neckerchief is in red and yellow with a silver buckle and earrings. This gives some idea of the varied color schemes that may be followed in this form of work. These displays are certainly going to attract attention week after week wherever they are used. People will come to look for them just as much as for the features themselves.

The lobby of the American theatre at Salt Lake is sixty or seventy feet in length, and approximately twenty feet in width, thus affording ample room for numerous posters.

Regent Theatre Celebrates Second Anniversary

Regent theatre, the handsome Montreal house, has just celebrated its second anniversary with a great gala performance. Manager F. H. Wranicker arranged for the occasion one of the most elaborate programs in the history of a motion picture house and appreciation of this was shown by a record breaking attendance.

The performance opened with "Mobilization March," especially written for the occasion by William Eckstein, musical director, and played by the combined orchestras of the Regent and Strand theatres. Then followed a nature picture and then a Metro-Drew comedy. Six solo numbers and a duet by leading musicians and a recitation followed and then came the feature, the Lee Kiddies in "The Troublemakers."

Flagstaff Theatre Buys City $1,000 Liberty Bond

Manager J. J. Costigan, of the Orpheum theatre, Flagstaff, Ariz., did something unique in the way of aiding the citizens of his city to buy a $1,000 third Liberty Loan bond to be presented to the city.

Mr. Costigan donated the use of his theatre, music and the services of all employes for the performance on April 8, while various film companies gave the pictures free and prominent citizens of the city appeared in vaudeville numbers. It was a great idea and with the indorsement of the mayor behind it, it went over in big shape. There is not a town in the country where the theatre cannot identify itself with the public spirit by a similar arrangement.

Old Scores Are Settled in " Boss of the Lazy Y "—Western

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Remember the novel " Boss of the Lazy Y " ? Who, once having read it, could ever forget it? Written by that master story-teller of Western life, Charles Alden Seltzer, it made a stir such as few recent recent works of fiction have made. It has been successfully adapted for the screen and will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— with Roy Stewart in the leading role. Stewart is famous for his virile Western characterizations, and as Calumet Marston, " Boss of the Lazy Y," is the ideal hero. A fine company was assembled to support the star, including Josie Sedgwick, Frank McQuarrie, Graham Pette and Walt Whitman. When Tom Taggart, who killed his enemy, old Jim Marston, slanders Betty Clayton, Cal Marston forces him to apologize and makes a deadly enemy of him. Later, Cal overhears Betty in conversation with Taggart and, suspecting her of treachery, threatens to leave her ranch, of which he is boss. But he yields to the mysterious influences which her personality has over him, and stays. Journeying to the town of Lizette, Cal has a clash with Taggart and drives him out of the town. On his way home Cal is ambushed by Taggart and a confederate. All through the night the fight rages and when Cal's team wanders home Betty sees a bullet hole in the wagon bed. Seizing a rifle she dashes to the scene of the ambuscade and joins in the fray. Cal is down to his last bullet when a sheriff's posse comes to the rescue. Taggart is killed and, although Cal has suspected Betty of joining in the attack on him, the two are eventually united in the bonds of love.

Mme. Petrova in " The Life Mask," a Baffling Mystery Drama

(First National Six-Reel Production)

Madame Olga Petrova, the incomparable, returns to the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in " The Life Mask," adapted by Mrs. L. Case Russell from the anonymously written novel of the same name. It is essentially a mystery play and the building of the scenario has been so skilfully handled as to leave serious doubt in the minds of the audience regarding the final outcome until the very last scene has been played on the screeen. The unraveling of the tangled skein, a task ably discharged by the capable cast, affords entertainment of the most inviting nature. The famous Polish star offers a characterization entirely different from anything she has previously done in the films. Told briefly, the plot deals with an unwilling marriage forced upon Anita Courtland (Mme. Petrova) in order to save the family honor. Woodruffe Clay, her husband, is injured in a fall and during his illness drives his young wife to the point of desperation by his brutal treatment. One evening, while sitting up with the patient, Anita experiences a dreadful nightmare and when she awakens her husband is dead. Then follows a rapid chain of circumstances in which suspicion is cast upon herself, the nurse and three other members of the household. Madame Petrova has adapted herself admirably to the atmosphere of mystery which pervades the production and her performance in this, the third, starring vehicle made under the banner of her own producing organization is a remarkable exemplification of her versatility and true histrionic ability. The production was directed by Frank Crane, and it is said that ten of New York City's best detectives were called into consultation regarding the criminal aspects of the mystery. A fine cast is seen in support of the star, Thomas H. Holding and Wyndham Standing having prominent roles.

" The Splendid Sinner," Newest Mary Garden Film, Coming

(Goldwyn Six-Reel Production)

At the ——— theatre on ——— Mary Garden, who made her screen debut in the sensational production of " Thais " will be seen in her second Goldwyn picture, titled " The Splendid Sinner." The story was written by Kate Jordan, and Edwin Carewe directed the production. Hamilton Revelle, remembered for his admirable work in " Thais," again has the role opposite the star. Revelle has had a distinguished career on the stage, having supported Olga Nethersole, Mrs. Leslie Carter, Frances Starr, Otis Skinner and others, and his work on the screen has been a delight to motion picture audiences. Anders Randolph plays the " heavy " role and others in the cast, which maintains a high standard, are Roberta Bellinger, Hassan Mussalli and Henry Pettibone. As Dolores Fargis Mary Garden plays the part of a woman who puts behind her the hollow life she has been leading for years and, against the promptings of her better judgment, marries Hugh Maxwell, a young physician, who is ignorant of her past. But her happiness is shortlived, for the man who once protected her appears without warning and urges her to renew their tie. Nor does disaster stop here for her husband interrupts them and in a burst of fury and shattered hopes he leaves Dolores. But they meet again, Dolores as a nurse in a French hospital now in possession of the enemy, her husband as a wounded soldier taken prisoner in a dash across the front. The old love returns and Dolores resolves to atone for the wrong done the man she worships. She enables him to escape, the precious documents she has stolen from a German officer next his heart. But as she is led to the council chamber to be sentenced for her loyal service to France again familiar eyes meet hers. Her nemesis, now a German officer, stares at her. Despite his pleas the sentence of death is passed and in the morning Dolores is led out to her death.

" The Splendid Sinner," with Mary Garden, is announced as the attraction at the ——— theatre on ———.

Rex Beach's " The Heart of the Sunset," with Anna Q. Nilsson—A Thriller

(Goldwyn Seven-Reel Production)

" Heart of the Sunset," Rex Beach's screen classic of the great Southwest, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Don't fail to spend an hour or more at the ——— theatre while Mr. Beach's masterpiece is being shown. Its thrilling to the nth degree. You will find it ideal entertainment. See it. Anna Q. Nilsson is in the featured role. In support are seen Herbert Heyes, Robert Taber, E. L. Fernandez, Jane Miller, William Frederic and Irene Boyle. The picture was produced by Goldwyn, under the direction of Frank Powell, with William Fildew at the camera. " The Heart of the Sunset " tells the story of a beautiful American woman's terrible experience with Mexican bandits and her perilous escape after her husband has been murdered, and she has been forced to wed the bandit chief. The production is in seven reels, and seven reels of more thrilling entertainment on the screen, you have never seen. It's worth while and your time. Alaire Austin (the part presented by Miss Nilsson) is riding in the desert of the Southwest when her horse falls dead. She is exhausted by her walk in search of shelter, and as she reaches a water hole in the desert, falls unconscious. She is found by Dave Law, a Texas ranger. Alaire has a worthless husband. A rebel Mexican general falls victim to Alaire's beauty, and he has her husband shot because he thinks that with him out of the way he will stand a better chance of forcing his affections on Alaire. The chief's men have in the meantime stolen a herd of cattle from the ranch of Alaire, and she, without informing any one of her venture, goes into the desert in search of the bandits. She is captured by the bandit chief, and is forced to become his wife. The ranger succeeds in finding the lair of the bandit, and during his absence and before the bandit has had the marriage performed, is married, himself, to Alaire. But—well, you will have to see the picture to enjoy the happy ending.

Maurice Maeterlinck's " The Bluebird " on Screen—Marvel of Symbolic Exposition

(Paramount-Artcraft Six-Reel Production)

Maeterlinck's " The Bluebird " has been scenarioized by Charles Maigne and produced for the screen by Paramount under the direction of Maurice Tourneur. It's a picture of beauty and one that you will never forget. Many of you remember the stage production, and many more have read the great Belgian poet's work. Its inspiring grandeur and simplicity is reflected in the creation which Director Tourneur has made, with all the impressiveness of the most grand. Maurice Maeterlinck, the Belgian Shakespeare, and well he deserves the honor. He understands human nature, and most of all the subtle touch of the symbolic which speaks with the force of a gifted orator in Paramount-Artcraft's creation of his greatest of all works, " The Bluebird." The author is one of the most distinguished poets, philosophers, dramatists and essayists of modern times. " The Bluebird " is at once, a fairy tale, a morality and a mystery play, possessing a lightness of fancy which none of the other of his immortal works possess. It touches with the wand of charm, the childhood that lies at the heart of age and bids it quicken. Everything in daily life, Fire, Water, Bread, Sugar, Milk, are personified, and in such a manner and with such skill by the impersonators, that you will marvel at its exposition. All are given a soul. The thread of the story is carried by two small children who are in search of the Bluebird, meaning happiness. Robin Macdougall and Tula Belle are the principal characters, and their work is marvelous. Others in the cast are: Edwin E. Reed, Emma Lowry, William J. Gross, Florence Anderson, Edward Elkus, Katherine Bianchi, Lillian Cook, Gertrude McCoy, Lyn Donelson, Charles Ascot, Tom Corless, S. E. Popapovitch, Mary Kennedy, Eleanor Masters, Charles Craig and Sam Blum.

The picture beggars description. Seeing is believing in this case. See Maeterlinck's " The Bluebird " at the ——— theater on ——— of ——— week.

Ambassador Gerard's Story, "My Four Years in Germany"—Marvelous Revelation

(My Four Years in Germany, Inc., Nine Reels)

Former Ambassador James W. Gerard has written of his experiences as American representative at the court of the Kaiser, " My Four Years in Germany." Under the direction of William Nigh, his work has been created for screen presentation in nine reels. It is coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, and there isn't a man, woman or child in the ———, who should fail to see this picture. It is inspiring. The picture is based on facts—not fiction. It takes you into the capital of Germany, Berlin, and with Ambassador as an escort, you are shown the cunning, underhanded tricks perpetrated by the most hated of all men, Kaiser William. " My Four Years in Germany " opened at the Knickerbocker theatre, New York, a few weeks ago, and there wasn't a minute during the opening performance that was not disturbed by either the signs of disapproval by the vast audience or applause in appreciation of the commendable. The German intrigue is laid bare—it is revealed before your eyes—not as some clever author of fiction imagines, but as Ambassador Gerard, America's representative in Germany before and during a period of the war, saw it. In the cast are seen: Halbert Brown, Willard Dashiell, Louis Dean, Earl Schenck, George Riddell, Frank Stone, Earl Dane, Fred Horn, Percy Standing, William Bittner, Arthur C. Duvel and Ann Dearing. Those who have been conspicuous in promoting the scenes of German thirst for the blood of human kind, are characterized and shown in all their hideous, treacherous activities. Mr. Gerard has furnished the facts, and Director Nigh has transferred them to the screen with care and faithfulness. " My Four Years in Germany " is a picture that all will be the better for having seen—better Americans and better patriots.

It will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre ——— week.

" Little Miss No Account " Has Gladys Leslie, Winsome Star

(Vitagraph—Five-Reel Production)

Gladys Leslie, remembered for her performance in " His Own People " and " The Wooing of Princess Pat," has the featured role in " Little Miss No Account," which will be the attraction at the ——— theatre on ———. Miss Leslie, who is one of the screen's youngest and most beautiful stars, is a New York girl and her first photoplay experience was gained with Thanhouser. Later she was seen in several important features on the Pathe program, attracting special attention by her work as Sophia in " The Vicar of Wakefield," in which Frederick Warde was starred. She is now under a long term contract to appear in Vitagraph Blue Ribbon features. In " Little Miss No Account " she has the part of a poor little actress who is held prisoner by plotting relatives seeking to rob her of a great property of which she knows nothing. She runs away on her birthday and then two men come into her life. One is a suave, unscrupulous gambler who tries to win her. The other is a rising young assistant district attorney who really falls in love with her. Into a gambling house she is lured by the gambler at the instigation of her stepfather who has learned of her whereabouts. The house is raided and she is locked up along with the habitues of the place. The gambler hopes to discredit her with the prosecutor but his charges only act as a boomerang. The gambler and the girl's plotting relatives are all rounded up and, her property all restored to her, she becomes the prosecutor's wife. In the cast supporting Miss Leslie are Frank O'Connor, William Calhoun, Eulalie Jensen, West Jenkins, Richard Wangeman, Carleton King and Stephen Carr. William P. S. Earle directed the picture from the scenario by A. Van Buren Powell, taken from the book, "The Reflection of Scarlet," by Edward P. Swaney.

Hayakawa, Famous Japanese Player, in "The Honor of His House"

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

That remarkably versatile and accomplished Japanese motion picture actor, Sessue Hayakawa, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— in his latest Paramount play, "The Honor of His House," by Marion Fairfax. The role which the Japanese star enacts in this production adds luster to his already brilliant reputation gained in "Alien Souls," "Honorable Friend," "The Soul of Kura San," "Hidden Pearls," "Hashimura Togo" and other successes. Nor is it to be wondered at that Hayakawa has achieved such brilliant artistic success. His uncle was a famous actor and stage manager in Japan, and it was through him that the young man was attracted to the stage. He became a member of his uncle's company in which the famous actress, Madame Yacco, was then appearing. He remained with the company about six years, during which time he became acquainted with his future wife, Tsuru Oaki, who was then playing child parts. Coming to this country he entered the University of Chicago, where he completed his education, and upon his return to Japan he appeared in Japanese versions of Ibsen and Shakespeare. Later, while playing along the Pacific Coast in a Japanese company he attracted the attention of Jesse L. Lasky, who engaged him for the stellar role in "The Cheat." From that moment he has been a fixed star in the firmament of motion pictures. The basic situation of "The Honor of His House" deals with the love of two men, Count Onato of Japan and Robert Farlow, an American ex-professor of the sciences in Japan, for Lora, a pretty half-caste girl, whose mother was a Japanese and whose father was an American. The opening scenes take place on a Pacific liner, which is wrecked, leaving the three principal characters of the drama as the only survivors. Both men demand the girl and she accepts Onato. Later Farlow again enters their lives and how matters are brought to a stirring crisis in which Onato sacrifices his life for his young bride, leaving her to his rival, is interestingly shown. The excellent supporting cast includes Jack Holt, Maym Kelso, Forest Seabury and Tom Kurahara.

Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford in "The Red, Red Heart"—Strong Drama

(Universal Five-Reel Production)

Universal's latest feature starring Monroe Salisbury, is titled "The Red, Red Heart," in five reels. The story was written by Honore Willsie and adapted to the screen by Bess Meredith. The picture was produced by Universal under the direction of Wilfred Lucas. In the supporting cast are seen Val Paul, Gretchen Lederer, Ruth Clifford, Allan Sears, Monte Blue and Princess Neola. The action of the play is laid in the deserts of Arizona. Mr. Salisbury has the role of a young Indian, college bred. Roda Tuttle, interpreted by Ruth Clifford, is a young Eastern girl who has become despondent since the tragic death of her father and mother in a railroad wreck. She is brought by her fiance, John DeWit, to Arizona to recuperate. She has lost all interest in life, but Jack Newman and his wife, Arizonians, do everything to make life happy for her. Kut-Le, a full-blooded Indian, graduate engineer, is employed on a big irrigating project by Newman. He is the son of an Indian chief and a leader among his people. He takes a keen interest in the young girl, on one occasion saves her life by rendering heroic treatment when she is bitten by a rattlesnake. But all that he can do, will not get her away from herself. She is still remorseful and despondent. He decides to use desperate means to make her forget. He kidnaps her and takes her into the heart of the desert, where he defends her from searching parties. Her fiance and a friend find them. The young Indian first repels their attacks and then delivers the girl over to them without resistance. DeWit in revenge attempts to shoot the Indian in the back and this arouses the feeling of gratitude in the heart of Rhoda, and they become more than mere friends.

FOR TODAY ALONE?

Or Are You Building Trade for the Future As Well?

THOSE exhibitors who are content to take today's profits and spend them can possibly get along without the intensive use of exploitation. Those who are building their business not alone for today, but for the future as well must build on a solid foundation, and publicity is its cornerstone.

Do just a little more than you have to do to get the people in your theatre today. Work with the intention of keeping the interest in motion pictures at the highest point and at the same time making your house THE house of your community.

Unquestionably you can lead a certain percentage of the people into your house blind, but you are taking chances and not building on a sound foundation. The public has a right to know about the pictures that you are asking it money to see. Use the advertising and news columns of the newspapers and your house program to do this. Talk about your pictures. Here's the material on which to base those talks. Don't say that you are getting along well enough without them. DO BETTER.

June Caprice in a Fox Farce Comedy, "A Camouflage Kiss"

(Fox—Five-Reel Feature)

A good laugh is in store for the patrons of the ——— theatre on ——— when June Caprice, the attractive little Fox star, will be seen in a rollicking farce comedy titled "A Camouflage Kiss." Miss Caprice has many friends here among picture fans, gained through numerous screen appearances which include those in "The Ragged Princess," "Miss U. S. A.," "A Modern Cinderella," "Patsy" and "The Mischief Maker." In "A Camouflage Kiss" she demonstrates that she knows something about kisses, especially kisses in the dark. Henry Millarde directed the picture which is from a story by Stephen Fox, and in the cast are seen Bernard Thornton as leading man, Pell Trenton, George Bunny and Lola May. Miss Caprice plays the part of a young girl who becomes engaged to a man because her brother-in-law needs him in business. The brother-in-law is a producer of pork but Hoover has put a crimp in his business. But he hears of a man who is doing well in the bean business so he proposes a combination of pork and beans. With the aid of the brother-in-law the bean man becomes engaged to June. But he is very shy and gets another man to steal a kiss from June in the dark, hoping to leave the impression that he is the kisser. When, however, this man kisses June in the daylight she recognizes the kiss as being the same kind she received in the dark. This brings on a complication and pork and beans get nicely mixed. But in the end they are all separated and somewhat refined.

June Caprice in "A Camouflaged Kiss" is announced as the attraction at the ——— theatre on ———.

"The Lie" Is Screen Version of Widely Known Dramatic Success

(Artcraft—Five-Reel Production)

Elsie Ferguson, widely known screen star, comes to the ——— theatre on ——— in her newest Artcraft production, "The Lie." In this picture, which is filled with heart-appealing scenes of great power, Miss Ferguson has the able support of David Powell, John L. Shine, Percy Marmont, Betty Howe and Maude Turner Gordon. J. Searle Dawley was the director in charge. The story of "The Lie" is one of intense human interest and is based upon the famous play by Henry Arthur Jones. The sacrifice by a young woman of her own happiness to save the honor of her family threatened by the act of her erring sister, forms its basis. Miss Ferguson enacts the role of Elinor Shale, daughter of Sir Robert Shale, a dissipated Englishman. She is in love with a man of wealth and social standing when her sister, Lucy Shale, confesses a shameful secret to her. Lucy later becomes the mother of a son for whom Elinor finds a godmother, thus opening the door for scandal by which she is the innocent sufferer. Lucy weds the man whom her sister loves but the latter makes no complaint, preferring to suffer in silence rather than have her sister exposed. Eventually, however, Elinor finds happiness in the love of another and in the affection of her little nephew who worships her as his mother. This, in a few words, is the story of "The Lie," and its telling on the screen is said to have a dramatic appeal seldom conveyed so effectively in a motion picture.

"The Lie," with Elsie Ferguson in the leading role, is the attraction for ——— at the ———.

William Farnum in "Rough and Ready," a Photoplay of the Frozen North

(Fox Standard Six-Reel Production)

"Punch" is a word which has been much abused in the exploitation of motion pictures, but "Rough and Ready," which comes to the ——— theatre on ———, certainly has that quality in abundance. William Farnum, who has been featured with such great success in many William Fox productions, has a congenial role in this play, which has the frozen North as its background. As the stout-hearted Bill Stratton he is seen as a strict self-disciplinarian who is as straightforward in his dealings with others as he is with himself. Rather than tell an untruth he sacrifices himself to save the home of a friend from disruption. Misunderstanding, his sweetheart imagines he has been unfaithful to her and jilts him. Stratton is stunned at first by the force of this terrible blow to his feelings. He decides to seek solace in the long, long trail in the Northwest, where the keen, cold winds make one forget all about the joy of living. The arrival of the girl, Evelyn, in the little village of Yellow Gulch, in which he is living, results in complications which form the basis of an absorbingly interesting story, and before Stratton wins the vindication due him he has to fight as few men have fought to clear his name. In every essential detail "Rough and Ready" is unusual—in the high histrionic standard, in the quality of the photography, in the novelty of the double and triple exposures, in the beautiful settings in the snow-covered mountains, in the excellence of the direction of Richard Stanton, and in the dramatic value of the story. Mr. Farnum's leading woman is petite Violet Palmer, whom picture enthusiasts will remember as the co-star in "The Blue Streak." Others in the cast who have important roles are Alphonze Either, Jessie Arnold, David Higgins, Frank Newton, Mabel Bardine and Franklin McGlynn.

Ann Murdock in Her Most Fascinating Comedy-Drama, "The Richest Girl"

(Mutual Five-Reel Production)

Ann Murdock in her brightest comedy-drama feature, "The Richest Girl," will hold the boards at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Miss Murdock is supported by David Powell, in the principal male role; Charles Wellesly, Herbert Ayling, Gladys Wilson and Paul Capellani. The picture was produced by the Empire All-Star Company under the direction of Albert Capellani and released on the Mutual program. "The Richest Girl" affords an hour of entertainment at the theatre, which cannot be beaten. The stronger drama is nicely intermingled with the lighter veins and with Miss Murdock carrying the title role, there is little chance for patrons of the ——— theatre to leave after this performance with anything but a bright remembrance of "The Richest Girl." Paul Normand, a clerk in the internal revenue bureau for the district of New York, rents a cottage in Jersey for the summer and invites his fiancee and her father, who is the commissioner of internal revenue, to spend the week-end with him. To complete the party, Felix, an artist friend, is invited. The first night of the gathering and before Flora, his fiancee, arrives, Benjamine Downey, "the richest girl," while motoring in the suburbs, discovers tire trouble and is "left in the ditch" on the road in front of Paul's door. She asks that she be given shelter for the night and Paul can do nothing but grant the request. But what will Flora and her father think when they arrive? Flora and her father do not arrive until early morning, and they are greeted on their arrival by "the richest girl" preparing breaking in the kitchen for Paul and his artist friend. "The jig is up"—but Paul succeeds in winning the "heart and hand" of "the richest girl."

Pathe Uses New Market Plan

Policy Said to Combine Good Points of Both Open Booking and Program System—In Operation April 15

Helene Chadwick, In Pathe's "The House of Hate"

BASING the decision upon a careful investigation of conditions throughout the trade and the testimony of representative showmen in all parts of the country, Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., announced this week a move involving approximately $1,000,000 in the news that beginning April 15, all Pathe Plays, starting with "Innocent" and looking forward into the future, will be booked in what is to be known as the Pathe Selective Feature Service.

This policy will combine, Pathe says, the good points of the open booking and program plans. All exhibitors who have contracts for Pathe Plays will on April 15 and thereafter be allowed to select Pathe Plays in accordance with the policy referred to above, beginning with the next feature they are to run, while exhibitors whose contracts for Pathe Plays do not go into effect until after April 15, will be permitted to select their pictures from the beginning. On the other hand, all exhibitors will be sure of a Pathe feature every two weeks if they want it.

Last week Mr. Brunet sent to the most widely known exhibitors in the country the following wire: "Reports received by us from all parts of country indicate that a majority of exhibitors favor open market booking against program booking. I take the liberty of asking your opinion as representative exhibitor in your community so we can be guided by best interest of exhibitors in determining this vital question. We have a great many important productions for release this year and will be guided by exhibitors' views as to best method of distribution from their standpoint. This telegram being sent to all members of Advisory Board of Exhibitors Service Bureau. Kindly wire collect your view of open market booking against program booking."

The feature pictures affected by Mr. Brunet's order covered in the Selective Feature Service are "Innocent," the Woods play starring Fannie Ward with John Miltern of the original cast and Armand Kalisz; "Loaded Dice," starring Frank Keenan; "The Naulahka" from Kiping's novel starring Antonio Moreno and Doraldina with a cast including also Mary Alden, Helene Chadwick and H. J. Gilmour; "The Great Adventure," starring Bessie Love from the novel by Henry Kitchell Webster; "The Hillcrest Mystery" starring Irene Castle with a cast including Ralph Kellard, and J. H. Gilmour; "Twenty-One," from George Randolph Chester's story, starring Bryant Washburn; "Ruler of the Road," from Jeannette Lee's book, "Simeon Tetlow's Shadow" starring Frank Keenan; "How Could You Caroline," starring Bessie Love from the story of Izola Forrester and Mann Page; "The Mysterious Client," starring Irene Castle with Milton Sills and Warner Oland in the cast.

Ebony Company Begins New Production

FOLLOWING the arrangement with General Film Company to distribute its regular releases of one-reel comedies, the Ebony Film Corporation of Chicago has begun a number of new subjects to continue its series, the first six subjects of which have already been completed and scheduled for lease. Some very attractive paper is now available for them.

In the Ebony Comedies these casts are composed entirely of colored players. They are slapstick productions intended to rate along with the standard white face offerings available. In addition they have an appeal of novelty to be considered, and on top of that even the distinctive humor of the negro as brought out by them.

So promising is the outlook for the increasing success of these offerings that L. J. Pollard of the Ebony corporation writes General Film that some very ambitious comedy productions are contemplated further along, these to be interpretations of successful magazine stories dealing with colored characters. It is said that several stories which have appeared in Munsey's Magazine may be filmed with the colored players of highest ability.

Universal Books According to Exhibitor's Desires

Universal has sent the following telegram to each of its exchange managers throughout the country: "Book exhibitors as they want to be booked whether open or contract. Let them be the judges of what will be best for their box offices. When they book any Universal brand give them every assistance in promoting the picture."

This wire was followed by a letter explaining that in order to obtain one or more of the Universal Special Attractions it is not necessary for an exhibitor to book all of them. "Rent any picture of ours you desire, without being tied up to take some picture you do not want," is the gist of the information Universal is now busy sending to every exhibitor in the country.

Screen Veteran Seen in "Third Floor Back"

Sidney Goldin, who impersonates Jape Samuels, the get-rich-quick swindler, in the film version of Jerome K. Jerome's "Passing of the Third Floor Back," starring Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, soon to be released on the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is one of the real veterans of the screen.

Goldin came to America as a youth from Russia and gained his first experience as an actor in Chicago, appearing in some of the early productions of Selig and Essanay. He soon gave up acting for directing, and becoming associated with Lincoln J. Carter he became known as one of the first independent directors in the country. Later he signed a contract with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and for several years produced Universal features.

William Farnum Finishes "True Blue"

Word was received last week from the William Fox studios in Hollywood, Cal., that William Farnum had finished his newest production. The original copy of the film is now in the Fox offices here and it has been decided to release the drama under title of "True Blue." It will be a Standard Picture.

World Has New Subject for Blackwell-Greeley

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are actively engaged under the direction of Dell Henderson on a new picture which bears the working title of "The Beloved Blackmailer." The story was written by Harry O. Hoyt, one of the new members of the World scenario staff.

Tourneur to Produce Independently

Maurice Tourneur, one of the best known directors in the motion picture field, whose work has won him an enviable name, announced last week that he will hereafter produce his own pictures. Director Tourneur's most recent production is "A Doll's House," starring Elsie Ferguson, for Artcraft.

The announcement last week, as issued from Mr. Tourneur's office, said in part: "Mr. Tourneur will from now on be artistically independent, working in his own studio, choosing his own scenarios and making his own casts, knowing that great work is always greatly in demand and that perfection has its sure and appreciative public."

Detailed plans for Mr. Tourneur's organization have not been made known, but it is expected that within a few weeks a complete outline of the intended work will be made.

Reichenbach Praises "Tarzan" Printing

In a letter received April 1 by Motion Picture News, Harry Reichenbach praises very highly the printing and developing of "Tarzan of the Apes." This work was done by the Rothacker Studios of Chicago.

The letter follows:

"Dear Mr. Johnston: Just saw a print of 'Tarzan of the Apes' and I want to state that it is the most remarkable piece of printing and developing I have ever seen, and with work of this kind, consistently sent out, the industry will be in a great deal better shape. In a great many of the scenes Mr. Rothacker has succeeded in getting four colors. The work is masterly and Aaron Jones, Nat Ascher and a number of other people who sat with me through the picture raved about it.

"All this I say in justice to Mr. Rothacker, for his work adds no little value to the production.

"(Signed) Harry Reichenbach."

Dual Role Provided for Roy Stewart

Roy Stewart has his first dual role in "Paying His Debt," forthcoming Triangle production made under the direction of Cliff Smith. Numerous double exposures had to be taken of Stewart in the roles of Frank Borden, "The Man," and Pete Morton, "The Vanishing Bandit." Steve Rounds was the cameraman. Josie Sedgwick has the leading role in this production. The cast also includes Harry Yammamoto, Japanese actor, and Walter Perkins, who is cast as Father Junipero Kelly.

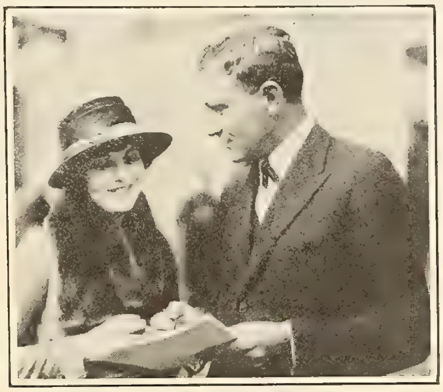
Baby Ivy Ward in "The Candy Girl," Metro

Baby Ivy Ward, the four-year-old actress who appeared as the little Belgian in Metro's patriotic production, "Draft 258," has been engaged to play a sympathetic child role in support of May Allison in her second Metro starring vehicle, now being produced by Harry Franklin under the working title of "The Candy Girl."

Goldwyn Visits the Exhibitor

Warren, Bolster and Weiss Cover Various Sections and Apply Heart-to-Heart Talks—Goldfish Advanced Idea

THREE executives of Goldwyn are making a concerted effort to meet face to face the exhibitors of the country and to discuss with them the problems they have to deal with.



"Like This Idea?" Asks Edgar Selwyn, and Madge Kennedy's Smile Indicates That She Does. They Are Goldwyn Playwright and Star, Respectively

The three are vice-presidents of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation—Alfred Weiss, F. B. Warren and Harold Bolster. Working in conjunction with them is Arthur Lucas, Southern Division manager for the company.

In a two weeks' tour of the Atlantic States, a territory with which he has been intimately familiar for many years, Mr. Weiss has talked with hundreds of men in whose theatres Goldwyn Pictures are being played and with scores who have not yet contracted for them.

Mr. Warren has been for nearly a month on the Pacific Coast, where his itinerary embraces most of the important cities between Los Angeles and Seattle.

Mr. Bolster is in the Middle West. Making temporary headquarters in Chicago, he is working through all of the larger cities.

Mr. Lucas is covering the South.

No unusual conditions, it was said at the Goldwyn home offices in New York City, are responsible for this simultaneous tour of four of the company's officers. Samuel Goldfish, president of the company, simply felt it was time to further demonstrate to the exhibitors of the country the honesty and earnestness of Goldwyn's established policy of co-operation with theatre owners to their best interests.

"Goldwyn wants its exhibitors to feel that their problems are its problems," said Mr. Goldfish. "If Goldwyn can continue to please the exhibitor it can continue to please the public. The Goldwyn executives who have gone to talk to the country's theatre owners are well equipped to help solve any perplexities which may have arisen in the comparatively few months in which our productions have been on the market. I expect profitable and lastingly good results from their tours."

"The Blue Bird" to Be Exploited by Mail

A DIRECT-BY-MAIL appeal to the public has just been started by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on the new Artcraft special, "The Blue Bird," in addition to the extensve advertising and exploitation campaign which has been under way for some time.

Thousands of appeals are now being sent out daily from the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters in New York to large and small communities throughout the country, going to the most influential people in every town. This mailing list includes names from the Official Register and Directory of Women's Clubs in America, county and town superintendents of schools, presidents of boards of education and secretaries, city superintendents and principals of high schools, presidents, superintendents or other officials in all universities and colleges, preparatory schools, normal and teachers' training schools, schools of theology, schools of music, schools of art, schools of elocution, oratory and dramatic art, etc., etc.

In its mail campaign, the distributors of this production bring out the particular timeliness of Maeterlinck's message of happiness and direct its appeal to those who are desirous of seeing a "better" film. The nature of "The Blue Bird" as an entertainment makes it particularly appropriate for exhibition in conjunction with all schools, colleges and civic as well as social institutions, it is said. Its message to women is also expected to attract support from women's clubs throughout the country.

It is announced that every person who has thus far seen "The Blue Bird" has marveled at its unusual merits in production and has heartily endorsed the film for the great thoughts it conveys. Such critics as Alice Coon Brown of the Ohio State Journal, Penelope Perrill of the Dayton Journal, the editor of the Christian Herald, and others have already published favorable reviews on the picture, declaring it a subject that every person should see.

Miss Young Begins "The Claw"

Immediately upon arriving at Hollywood, Clara Kimball Young secured a studio and set right to work filming "The Claw," her next production with her own company for Select Pictures. The original from which the photodrama is taken is from the pen of Cynthia Stockley, author of "Poppy," picturized by Norma Talmadge, now also a Select star. The scenario for "The Claw" was written by Charles E. Whittaker, who was responsible for the continuity of "The House of Glass," in which Clara Kimball Young appeared.

In the Center and at the Left Are Moments in the Triangle Play, "The Love Brokers," In Which Texas Guinan Is Presented. At the Right Are Josie Sedgwick and Roy Stewart, In "The Boss of Lazy Y"

Six Triangle Features Under Production

TRIANGLE has put into production at the Culver City studios an American-Japanese drama title "The Loyalty of Taro San," a screen adaptation of the story by E. Magnus Ingleton, who also wrote the recent Triangle release, "Her American Husband." Frank Borzage is directing. The action opens in Japan, where Taro San, a rickshaw runner, attracts the attention of an American lawyer. Both go to America. There Taro San's loyalty is questioned and he saves his employer and benefactor. Jack Livingston is the lawyer and Jack Abbe, Japanese juvenile, is Taro San. Maud Wayne makes her initial dramatic appearance as Livingston's leading woman.

Jack Conway has nearly completed "Her Decision," in which Gloria Swanson is featured. This is the third dramatic release of the former Keystone comedienne. J. Barney Sherry also is featured and the cast includes Darrell Foss and Ann Kroman.

"Madame Paulette," a comedy-drama in which Wallace MacDonald and Claire Anderson have leading roles, is well under way under direction of Raymond Wells. The cast includes George Hernandez, George Pearce, Walter Perry, Anna Dodge and Dot Hagar.

Roy Stewart, with Josie Sedgwick as leading woman, has nearly finished, under Cliff Smith's direction, his latest Western drama tentatively titled "A Man Worth While."

Director Gilbert P. Hamilton is said to have found something unique in the way of a location for a fishing village scene for "Judith," in which Alma Rubens is featured. Pauline Starke and Edward Piel have leading roles and others in the cast include Lillian Langdon, Anna Dodge, Iris Ashton, Myrtle Rishell, Alice Crawford, Walt Whitman, Lee Hill, Lee Phelps and Ward Caulfield.

"The Siren in the House," a society drama which Jack Dillon is directing is well under way. Olive Thomas and Wallace MacDonald have the leading roles.

Catholic News Lauds "The Cross Bearer"

THE Catholic News, a weekly magazine closely affiliated with the clergy of the Catholic Church, under issue of March 30, devotes a half column to a description of "The Cross Bearer," which is remarkable for its tone of superlative praise. "The Cross Bearer," which is distributed by World Pictures, is described as "thrilling, entertaining, a splendid spectacular photoplay of timely interest." This is one of the first times recorded that an organ connected with the church has given spontaneous praise to a motion picture.

Under caption of an "Impressive Film Play," the Catholic News says: "Thrilling, entertaining, a splendid spectacular photoplay of timely interest is 'The Cross Bearer,' with Montagu Love in the role of Cardinal Mercier, Belgium's heroic churchman and the world's idol. The production has aroused the enthusiastic admiration of audiences wherever it has been given. The background is Belgium shortly after the outbreak of the war. The miseries of his afflicted country, complicated with the romance of a young Belgian officer and his sweetheart, the latter the Cardinal's pretty ward, supply material for the connection of a clever plot that holds the spectator's interest through the succession of intensely dramatic scenes and episodes leading up to a gratifying climax.

"Mr. Love plays the role of the eminent Churchman with dignity, passion, brilliancy and power that reveal in convincing manner his ability. Jeanne Eagels impersonates 'Liane de Merode,' the heroine, with winsome grace and charm, and the remainder of the cast is excellent. No expense has been spared in staging the production, which has been adapted to the screen by Anne Maxwell and photographed by Philip Hatkine, directed by George Archinbaud."

Vivian Martin Plays Novel Role in This One

Under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon, Vivian Martin recently finished "Unclaimed Goods," for Paramount release April 15. The plot is said to be most unusual. A girl is sent by express and then held as "unclaimed goods" with the threat of being sold at auction just because the consignee hasn't the money to pay the charges. She is fed just as are some chickens and a tiny calf who are her companions in the express car. Miss Martin's temperament, it is said, carries off the extraordinary situation convincingly. Harrison Ford appears as leading man and others in the cast are George McDaniel, Casson Ferguson, Carmen Phillips, Richard La Reno and George Kunkel. The scenario was written by Gardner Hunting from the original story by Johnston McCulley.

"Mother" Mary Maurice in Hospital

Mary Maurice, Vitagraph's aged actress, affectionately known among screen folk as "Mother," is in St. John's Hospital, Brooklyn, recovering from the effects of an operation performed ten days ago. She was stricken a few days after she had completed her work in "Over the Top," in which she plays the role of Sergeant Empey's nurse. Although she is in her seventy-fourth year, this is the first time that "Mother" Maurice has been forced to be away from her work for more than three days since she became a screen actress.

Interest in "A Doll's House" Aroused

Following the announcement that Elsie Ferguson has been cast for the leading role in a photoplay based upon Ibsen's "A Doll's House," Universal states that Bluebird exhibitors from many sections have been making inquiries of the exchanges regarding bookings on "A Doll's House," in which Dorothy Phillips was featured. The Bluebird production of "A Doll's House" was released last June.

"He Couldn't Fool His Wife" Is the Title of a New Clover Comedy for General Film Release

Ned Finley and Company at Bat Cave

Ned Finley and his company of players, including Marion Henry, have again left New York for Bat Cave, N. C., where the filming of Blue Ridge dramas has been resumed. Several more stories by L. Case Russell will be filmed at once and it probably will be many months before the members of the company return to New York.

Hodkinson's Work on the Coast Completed

The home office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that it has just received telegraphic information from Mr. Hodkinson that the conquest of the Pacific Coast by the "Hodkinson plan" is practically completed and that further interesting announcements will soon be forthcoming.

Another item of interest to exhibitors considering the co-partnership plan is that arrangements are being concluded for the acquisition of a new product to be released in conjunction with the Paralta Plays, which at present form the major part of Hodkinson Service. While no further definite information is available it is safe to assume, says the Hodkinson office, that the new product will be equal in quality to Paralta Plays.

Third Dramatic Role for Gloria Swanson

Gloria Swanson, former Keystone comedienne, is now working in her third Triangle feature production, titled "Her Decision." In "Society for Sale," an April release, Miss Swanson will play opposite William Desmond. "Smoke" is a forthcoming society drama featuring Miss Swanson, in which Edward Piel will have the supporting role. Jack Conway directed. He is also directing "Her Decision." Miss Swanson was the first of the Keystone comediennes to be conscripted for dramatic work.

Universal Offers Carey Special

Program Week of 22d Provides Twenty-two Reels of Features, Serials, Comedies and Nature and News Subjects

A UNIVERSAL Special Attraction, "The Scarlet Drop," is the main feature of Universal's scheduled releases for the week of April 22, which total twenty-two reels of features, comedies and serials. Harry Carey, who has starred in so many Western pictures for Universal, has the leading role, with Molly Malone as the other featured player.

"Boy Scouts to the Rescue," the ten-reel serial which is causing considerable comment wherever it is shown, provides one of the week's two-reel subjects. The second episode, titled "On the Trail," is the release. This serial has the active support and promotion not only of the Boy Scouts of America but of every local Scout organization and is being actively pushed by the Scout Masters all over the United States.

The week's Bluebird feature will be "The Marriage Lie," with Carmel Myers.

Three comedy releases are scheduled for the week. Harry Mann will be seen in a Nestor one-reeler, "The Stolen Keyhole." Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran make their second appearance in the Lyons-Moran Star Comedies of one reel, this one being titled, "The Guilty Egg," and Gale Henry and Hughie Mack are featured in "Her Movie Madness," an L-Ko Comedy of two reels.

The Eddie Polo serial, "The Bull's Eye," is in its twelfth episode, the title of the chapter being "Burning Sands," while Marie Walcamp's "The Lion's Claws" has reached its fourth installment, titled "A Woman's Scream."

Another short reel subject to be released is the Finley Nature Study, "In and Around Key West, Fla.," and the Universal Animated Weekly, Universal Screen Magazine and Universal Current Events complete the week's program.

Dan Whitcomb Back with American

Dan F. Whitcomb, who has many stories for the screen, among them "The Bride's Silence" and "A Game of Wits" for Gail Kane, has returned to Santa Barbara, where he is writing a mystery story for one of the American Film stars.

Tourneur Deplores Stars' Indifference

MAURICE TOURNEUR, the director, whose Artcraft production called "The Blue Bird" has elicited more praise than has anything of its kind in months, and who last week announced his intention of producing independently, this week confided to MOTION PICTURE NEWS something that several producers have long suspected. He declared many stars and players are indifferent insofar as genuine acting is concerned.

During the course of his explanation Mr. Tourneur said: "Actors as a class are mentally and spiritually lazy. They shirk real emotion. It is too much of an effort. They don't want to be disturbed. I find many who are not sufficiently interested in what they are doing to find out what the story is they are playing in, much less to give any intelligent study of the particular role they are cast to interpret.

Maurice Tourneur, Director, Who Is to Produce Independently

"I can easily recall more than one woman star whose indifference goes to these lengths. All she wants to know is what kind of a dress she will need in the next scene, and usually she sends her maid to get this information.

"Contrasted to these is an artist like Elsie Ferguson, beautiful, gifted, but above the sensitive. She is the perfect instrument for a director of imagination to work with, because she has imagination herself.

"We have come to what may be termed the parting of the ways in the production of pictures," he continued. "Thrills are a back number, if I may use the expression. And for this reason: All the dangerous, daring, spectacular things have been done, over and over again. We have had earthquakes and fires, shipwrecks and tornadoes, leaps-to-death, and all the melodramatic tricks a hundred times intensified, showed too often on the screen for an audience to be amazed by such things any more. Now we are getting a truer sense of values. We are coming to see that there may be more drama in one look revealing the sufferings of a soul than there is in the most hair-breadth escapes ever devised. We are coming to appreciate the fact that true drama is true feeling and that it cannot be faked.

"The motion picture of the future will deal with character studies. It will reveal personalities with all the subtlety of the novel. Then we will truly see the soul transferred to the screen."

"Fate Decides" Is Nazimova's New Production for Metro. Viola Dana Is Presented in "Riders of the Night"

Metro Names Another Big Special Cast

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN and Beverly Bayne are said to be supported by a cast of stellar rank in the forthcoming Metro All-Star Series picture, "With Neatness and Dispatch," a screen version of Kenneth L. Roberts' story of the same name published in the Saturday Evening Post. June Mathis and Luther Reed prepared the scenario and Will S. Davis directed the production.

Frank Currier, Metro's character actor, appears as Police Commissioner Roger Burgess, whose nephew Paul Donaldson (played by Francis X. Bushman) is the hero of the story.

Hugh Jeffrey is cast as Police Inspector Corcoran, who assists Geraldine Ames, the heroine (played by Beverly Bayne) to find a crook to "do a little job—with neatness and dispatch."

Ricca Allen, who is often a member of Metro casts, plays Aunt Letitia Judson, the guardian of the Ames girls, who believes that all men are bad.

Sylvia Arnold, who plays Mary Ames, the sister of Geraldine, makes her first appearance in a leading role in this picture. Miss Arnold is a Newark girl who made her screen debut in a small part in "Red, White and Blue Blood" with Bushman and Bayne.

Walter Miller plays John Pierce, the fiance of Mary Ames. Miller is well known as a screen actor, having been long identified with the Biograph Company.

Arthur Housman is cast as Burns, the crook-chauffeur. Housman is an old Edison player and played for Metro in "Draft 258" with Mabel Taliaferro, "The Brass Check," "Under Suspicion" and "Red, White and Blue Blood" with Bushman and Bayne.

John Charles is seen as the real "Slim" Keegan—the crook whom Bushman as Paul Donaldson is mistaken for, and which starts the picture's numerous complications.

Sidney D'Albrook, in "Draft 258," with Mabel Taliaferro, plays Daly, the man of all work at the Judson homestead.

Bessie Barriscale Plays Role of a Crook

BESSIE BARRISCALE has completed her Paralta Play, "Blindfolded," under the direction of Raymond B. West, and will start immediately on her next production, "Patriotism," which has been written especially for her by two of the staff writers at the Paralta Studios, R. B. Kidd and Jane Holly.

"Blindfolded," which is from the pen of E. Richard Schayer, is considered by Miss Barriscale as one of the most complex roles which she has ever enacted before the camera. In her new play, Miss Barriscale is seen in the role of a young girl who is educated by a crook, a sort of Fagan, who teaches her all the science of yeggdom instead of her A, B, C's. She learns to open safes by touch and her sense of hearing, and the numbers of the combinations constitute her arithmetic. Surrounded by these environments, she will still be seen as the natural, lovable, little person, who will win the hearts of the audience, the kind of a girl that Miss Barriscale can portray so well. Through all the melodramatic happenings, the thrills, and suspense with which the story abounds there is said to run a current of human appeal that awakens a warm sympathy for the little heroine. Much attention has been given to this phase of the story by Mr. West, it is said, as well as to the other details that go into the making of a human-interest photoplay.

Goldwyns "Catch On" in Small Towns

Though Goldwyn Pictures have been on the market only seven months, that company considers it worthy of note that they have "caught on" in some of the smallest and most remote communities of the country. Not a day passes that Goldwyn does not receive word from its exchanges that at least six of these small and almost unheard of towns have been signed up.

It would be extremely difficult, Goldwyn says, to find a more satisfied customer than L. V. Violett, owner of the Royal theatre, Ione, Cal. With a population of less than 1,000 to draw from, the Royal played Jane Cowl in "The Spreading Dawn" to 838 persons on Monday, March 19. He reports almost as good success with "Sunshine Alley" and "Nearly Married."

Many Clevelanders Saw Pathe Russian Film

Big crowds attended the opening performance of Pathe's "The German Curse in Russia," at the Grand theatre, Cleveland, on Sunday, March 24, better than 5,000 admissions being taken during the day. The local papers all praised the picture, which Harry Summerville, manager of the Grand, and A. M. Holah, manager of the Cleveland office of Pathe, co-operated in putting over.

Metro Releases Dolly Sisters' Film

"The Million Dollar Dollies," starring the well-known Dolly sisters, has been acquired by Screen Classics, Inc., and will be distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation. This romantic fantasy, which is the first screen vehicle in which the stars have appeared together, was written and directed by Leonce Perret, the French director, who was the author and director of another Screen Classics super-feature, "Lest We Forget," in which Rita Jolivet, survivor of the Lusitania, was starred. Emerald Pictures Company produced "The Million Dollar Dollies."

The Dolly Sisters' First Picture Will Be Released Through Metro

Petrova Now Has Her Own Studio

Madame Olga Petrova, who for some time has been the possessor of her own company and her own productions, now has her own studio. Through Conrad Milliken, general manager, and Robert North, studio manager, the Petrova Picture Company has leased for a period of months the new Bacon-Backer studio in West 38th Street, New York City. This is said to be one of the finest and best equipped studios in New York. Ralph Ince already has in active production on the spacious stage the picturization of Gertrude Atherton's novel, " Patience Sparhawk." As a matter of fact not only the tenant is new but the building and equipment are so new that no picture made in the studio has yet been released.

Unique Scenic Effects in " The House of Silence "

A number of unique and striking effects will be noted, it is said, in the Paramount production of " The House of Silence," which was adapted by Margaret Turnbull from the novel, " Marcel Levignet," by Elwyn Barron, and in which Wallace Reid appears, supported by Anna Little. By means of yards upon yards of black velvet covering the walls, with black carpets and white woodwork, the characters stand out with peculiar vividness—that is, their faces and hands and the light parts of their clothing. The rest melts into the background, producing a most uncanny and weird effect.

Parsons Busy on Third Capitol Comedy

At his studio in Hollywood, Cal., " Smiling Bill " Parsons is in the midst of producing his third Capitol Comedy for Goldwyn distribution. It is to be called " Birds of a Feather " and is said to be even funnier than his first two. In his support will be seen Molly Malone, Sylvia Day, Harry Bennett, George French, Eugenie Ford, Harry Richards and Dorothy Dane. Miss Day was until recently a Ziegfeld girl, while Molly Malone has appeared as leading woman in many motion picture productions. Jay Belasco was to have been in the cast but the draft board interfered.

Loew Congratulates Jewel on " The Kaiser "

Following close upon the booking of " The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," over the entire Loew circuit, Marcus Loew has written a letter to Jewel Productions, Inc., in which he warmly praises the picture. He says: " I cannot refrain from sending this letter congratulating you on the wonderful production and propaganda of your picture, ' The Kaiser.' . . . No true American, after seeing this picture, could fail to do his bit, whether at the front, fighting the enemy, or at home, contributing to the Red Cross and the various other things that one can do while at home.

" In conclusion, permit me to say that every American will be grateful to you for this production."

Gerard Film Shown to Soldiers

" My Four Years in Germany " Receives Unanimous Praise of Camp Upton Men—Other Striking Testimonials Cited

THE first week of April was marked by several special showings of Ambassador Gerard's " My Four Years in Germany," which has recently been acquired by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Upon the request of Lieut. J. M. Loughborough the big feature was taken out to Camp Upton on the evening of April 2 and shown to over 3,000 soldiers, mostly members of the 305th Infantry, at Y. M. C. A. headquarters. The unanimous verdict of the fighters was that the film expose of Prussian diplomacy and military oppression offered a most convincing argument for our vigorous participation in the war.

What is also taken as a remarkable tribute was the selection of " My Four Years in Germany," in its selection by the Chamber of Commerce of Washington, D. C., to start off the Third Liberty Loan campaign in the capital on the evening of April 6.

Sidney B. Lust, chairman of the publicity committee that had the opening of the drive in the District of Columbia in charge, gave an exhibition of the picture to one of the most distinguished gatherings that has been entertained by the National Chamber of Commerce in many a day. Practically all the members of President Wilson's cabinet were present, headed by Secretary McAdoo of the Treasury, who has the Liberty Loan campaign in charge.

Shown at the conference of Methodist Episcopal clergymen at Newburgh, N. Y., the film is said to have drawn highest praise from Rev. C. C. Marshall, of New York City, and others. In this connection the First National Exhibitors' Circuit also points to the fact that the picture played to capacity houses at the Knickerbocker theatre all through Holy Week.

Arrangements have been made to show the Gerard picture to the soldiers in the camp of the Twenty-seventh Division at Spartanburg, S. C., on April 15.

Chapin Production Gets Solid Support

THE nine thousand members of the Massachusetts Teachers' Federation, it was announced this week, have pledged themselves to promote the exhibition of the " Son of Democracy, " the Paramount series produced by Benjamin Chapin, and in a lengthy letter to John McConville, manager of the Boston office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the reason for this action is explained by Mabel M. Anderson, the chairman.

After paying a glowing tribute to the historical accuracy of the pictures, Miss Anderson says: " Such an accurate reproduction of family life in the early days of our country's story is of priceless value in teaching our children, especially those of foreign birth, the simple, homely, invigorating surroundings in which this famous builder of our country laid the foundations of the nation which is fighting for world-liberty today. One short reel does more to make it a part of our children's heritage than hours of schoolroom teaching can ever do.

" We teachers are greatly indebted to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for this masterly interpretation of ' Our Greatest American, ' and we leave the theatre pledging ourselves anew to spare no pains to make our children appreciate the meaning of his immortal pledge to the nation, that ' Government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth. ' "

The Teachers' Federation has begun a movement for the systematic exhibition by the moving picture theatres of educational films for children, and to have the accompanying program, on the day such films are shown, made especially suitable for the children.

Throngs See "Over the Top"

Empey Picture Produced by Vitagraph Likely to Stay at Lyric for Some Time—Critics Sound Praises

THE big crowds and enthusiasm that have marked the first week in the Lyric theatre of "Over the Top," Vitagraph's screen adaptation of Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey's famous war book, are taken by Vitagraph as an indication of a long and successful run for the picture.

So widely had "Over the Top" been read and exploited that Vitagraph had a mighty task, in the production of the picture, to give to the public, all that was expected. If any testimony of the success of the undertaking were needed, in addition to the capacity business enjoyed at the Lyric all week, Vitagraph points to the trade and daily press reviews, which have been unanimous in their praise. "Even the most enthusiastic readers of Empey's book could not have anticipated the screen possibilities as unfolded in this Vitagraph version," says one reviewer.

"Over the Top" was produced to awaken the American people to a keener realization of just what their sons are up against "over there," and is built on actual conditions as they exist, and as Sergeant Empey himself found them in his eighteen months of fighting in front-line trenches in France, and as he pictures them in his book.

Sergeant Empey's acting is said to be a true reflection of the man—natural but strikingly forceful. Just as he puts his dynamic energy into his patriotic work, he refights before the screen the heroic deeds he performed "over there." President Smith, who watched his work closely in the filming of the picture was strongly impressed by his acting and his opinion is echoed by every critic when he says that "he acts as he fights," and his decorations and his seven wounds are silent tribute to his fighting abilities.

The patriotic appeal is sustained throughout the picture to a powerful ending where Empey discovers on the body of a German general he has slain papers and charts disclosing a final German offensive destined to smash through the Allied lines and open the way to Paris.

Ince Stars Keep Pace with the Times

FOR the purpose of completing certain snow scenes for "Tyrant Fear," her forthcoming Paramount picture, Dorothy Dalton, Thomas H. Ince star, accompanied by Thurston Hall, her leading man; R. Wm. Neill, the director, and a staff of assistants and cameramen, journeyed to Truckee, Cal. Immediately upon her return, Miss Dalton resumed work at the Ince studios upon the new Paramount picture in which she has the role of a secret service operative.

Enid Bennett's latest Ince production for Paramount, called "The Biggest Show on Earth," was given a private showing recently to an invited audience at the Thomas H. Ince projection room. The affair was primarily intended as a welcome home to Miss Bennett and her husband, Fred Niblo. The showing of the new picture was attended by the Ince stars, Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray, William S. Hart and fifty or more guests.

William S. Hart, the Ince star in Artcraft pictures, is still in Northern California, getting snow scenes for his next picture, and meantime Artcraft will release "Selfish Yates," which promises to surpass in interest almost anything in which the virile westerner has appeared. It is by C. Gardiner Sullivan and was directed by Mr. Hart.

Goldwyn's "Joan of Plattsburg" for May 5

IN "Joan of Plattsburg," scheduled for release May 5, Goldwyn offers exhibitors and the public what it claims is the first patriotic comedy-drama ever screened, predicting that the combination of the story by Porter Emerson Browne and the artistry of Mabel Normand will bring money to box offices everywhere.

Retakes of important scenes have just been completed by George Loane Tucker to make the production conform to the Government's request for the elimination of certain scenes which have an indirect bearing on training methods pursued at the great Plattsburg military camp, where much of the action of the play transpires. Goldwyn says unhesitatingly that the picture in its new form is a greater, more powerful production than was the original.

While "Joan of Plattsburg" is in no sense a war story, nor can it be interpreted as propaganda, the story of a charter orphan who developed into an inspired soldier-girl, it is claimed, will strike a responsive chord wherever shown. The orphan reads the romance of Joan of Arc and herself hears voices which she imagines are the same that led the Maid of Orleans to the rescue of her beloved France. The origin of these voices, and how Joan of Plattsburg responds to them as she sees herself the reincarnation of the immortal Maid, coming by accident upon a way by which she can render magnificent service to her country—all this is the backbone of the story.

New Hayakawa Play "Has Everything," 'Tis Said

A large number of the Lasky studio people witnessed the first private showing of "The Honor of His House," Hayakawa's new Paramount picture, at Hollywood not long ago and all were enthusiastic over the production. "It's got everything," said one of the actors present—and he wasn't in the picture, either. "A splendid star and cast, a plot that simply takes the eternal triangle and twists it into a bow knot; and it has been directed with consummate skill by William C. De Mille. Marion Fairfax wrote the story and scenario and is said to have used a thoroughly original and powerful theme. Florence Vidor supports.

Fox Films Sell Heavily in Foreign Fields

The office of William Fox reports that practically all the foreign territory for "A Daughter of the Gods" has been sold, China and Mexico having been disposed of during the past week. Five of the most influential buyers of Chile are said to be bidding against each other for "Woman and the Law," the feature based upon the De Saulles case being of more than ordinary interest to the people of that country, the native land of Mrs. De Saulles. Fox also reports that "The Honor System" is meeting with success in Brazil and that the Fox Standard Features are having a big sale in Australia.

"Blue Bird" Draws Carl Laemmle's Praise

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has written an open letter to the Paramount officials congratulating them upon the excellence of Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird," as produced by them. He also calls their attention to the fact that the "Blue Bird" was produced without the assistance of any of the high priced Paramount stars and at the same time that it is the most wonderful picture Paramount ever has presented

Bessie Eyton in Metro-Lockwood Cast

In addition to Pauline Curley, Stanton Heck and Bert Starkey, whose names were previously announced, Bessie Eyton, Peggy Prevost and Harry de Roy have been engaged by Fred J. Balshofer to appear in the cast supporting Harold Lockwood in "Lend Me Your Name," a new Metro All-Star Series production, now in the process of making at Metro's Hollywood studio under Mr. Balshofer's direction. Miss Eyton will play Sophronia, the domineering wife of the Earl of Gilleigh (Harold Lockwood), who instigates all the trouble which furnishes the comedy situations for the picture. Peggy Prevost has an ingenue role and Harry de Roy will appear as a comedy man-servant.

Louise Glaum in a New Kind of Role

In her first production under the Paralta banner, titled "An Alien Enemy," Louise Glaum, who hitherto has been seen only in vampire roles, will be introduced as a thoroughly sympathetic character, it is said. At certain points in the story, however, she will have an opportunity, it is further stated, to display those qualities which have made her delineation of dramatic roles famous. "An Alien Enemy" presents Miss Glaum as an American girl of German descent. The picture was directed by Wallace Worsley from Monte M. Katterjohn's story.

Helene Chadwick Added to "House of Hate" Cast

In the tenth episode of Pathe's Pearl White serial, "The House of Hate," Helene Chadwick makes her first appearance as a member of the cast. This young actress, who will be remembered as the heroine of "The Naulahka," makes her serial debut in the underworld character of "Queenie Kate," and adds her name to those of the others in the cast including Miss White, Antonio Moreno, J. H. Gilmore, Paul Clerget, Peggy Shaner and J. W. Dillion. Miss Chadwick, before coming to the screen, has adorned many magazine covers, having posed for Penrhyn Stanlaws, Harrison Fisher, James Montgomery Flagg, Henry Hutt and others.

Progress in Petrova Bookings

First National Tells Collins That Star's Showing Is Satisfactory—First Picture Was Released Around Christmas

COINCIDENT with the signing of Ralph Ince as exclusive director of Petrova Pictures, and the leasing of a studio for Madame Petrova's productions, comes the following announcement from the First National Exhibitors Circuit, contained in a letter from John D. Williams, general manager of the circuit, to Frederick L. Collins, president of the Petrova Picture Company:

"You will notice from the reports submitted to you that we are over the fence regarding negative cost on Petrova. I think this a very satisfactory showing when you consider that the first picture was only released Christmas."

This move is particularly gratifying to Petrova when it is considered that only two pictures have so far been actually released, and in many parts of the country the first of them was not shown until about thirty days ago. More bookings, it is claimed, were received the first thirty days of March than in the full months of December, January or February, and it is said that the Petrova pictures are still on the rising side of the booking arc. "The Life Mask," which is said to be one of the most interesting of the Petrova Pictures, will be released April 18.

Reports from the road indicate that any disappointment that some exhibitors have felt in the quality, or lack of it, of some of the productions in which Madame Petrova appeared before undertaking her own productions, has been entirely erased by the general worth of "Daughter of Destiny," "The Light Within" and "The Life Mask." The impression is held by her company that Madame Petrova has still to release the best of her pictures, "Tempered Steel," by George Middleton, author of "Polly with a Past," and directed by Ralph Ince. It was the screening of this picture that led to the immediate signing of Mr. Ince to direct the future productions starring Madame Petrova.

The new arrangement of a permanent Petrova directing staff has already had two results that augur well for the future: the purchase outright of the rights to Gertrude Atherton's novel, "Patience Sparhawk," and the selection of a studio exclusively for the use of Petrova Pictures.

The officials of the Petrova Picture Picture Company are inclined to credit the success of Petrova Pictures, first to the quality of the productions and the renewed popularity of the star, and second to the trade paper and nation-wide advertising campaign conducted in behalf of these pictures.

Diversity in Selexart Subjects

"Blue Blood," the First of the Group of Three Selexart Pictures Distributed by Goldwyn, Stars Howard Hickman

GOLDWYN is directing the attention of exhibitors to the diversity of appeal in the group of three Selexart pictures it is distributing. "Each story is of a distinct type, each conveys a different message," reads a Goldwyn announcement. "All are modern, swift-moving tales of life in three strata of society—the high-born aristocracy, the cutthroat domain of ward politics and the Alaska mining camp."

"Blue Blood," starring Howard Hickman, the first release of the group, is a drama based upon the curse of tainted blood. In the early scenes the audience is permitted to see what manner of men were the forebears of Spencer Wellington. Later are seen the extremes of abandon to which Wellington's malady drives him. A score of beautiful girls, all virtual prisoners in a palace of marble and gilt erected on Wellington's estate, are required to amuse their jaded master with dances and weird rites conceived by his disordered brain.

One of the pretentious settings of this drama is the great room of Wellington's retreat. Sunk in the marble floor in the center of the room is a deep pool filled with crystal water. Into this Wellington plunges in pursuit of a scantily-clad girl just as the disease which has been gnawing at his brain overcomes him, something within his head bursts and he tumbles to the floor dead.

"Honor's Cross," starring Rhea Mitchell, is essentially a story of the great city and the devious ways of those who turn the wheels of commercialized vice to the profit of its exploiters. "Social Ambition," the third of the series, traces the redemption of a luckless man through love. Howard Hickman and Rhea Mitchell are the stars.

Choose Title for Madame Nazimova's Next

The title of Madame Nazimova's second Metro production has been decided upon in a conference in which Madame Nazimova, President Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger, studio supervisor, participated. The new seven-act feature, which will soon be released, will bear the title, "Fate Decides." Many others were suggested for the gypsy drama, but "Fate Decides" was selected as being strongest and most in keeping with the central theme of the story, in which the power of destiny is said to be skilfully emphasized.

Surrounding the Russian star in this production is a cast said to be of distinguished personnel. Charles Bryant will again be seen as her leading man, and others who will appear are Irving Cummings, Edward J. Connolly, Dodson Mitchell, Frank Currier and Nila Mac.

Bushman-Bayne in Society Play

Story of Next Metro Subject for Co-Stars, by Katharine Kavanaugh, Is as Yet Unnamed—Brabin to Direct

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN and Beverley Bayne, who have just completed "With Neatness and Dispatch" for Metro, under the direction of Will S. Davis, will next appear under the Metro banner in an original and as yet unnamed story of society life in New York City and the Adirondacks, written by Katharine Kavanaugh, of the Metro Eastern scenario staff. Charles J. Brabin, who directed the stars in "The Adopted Son" and "Red, White and Blue Blood," will guide them in the new production. Mr. Bushman is now spending a brief vacation at his estate, Bushmanor, near Baltimore, and immediately upon his return production will be begun on Miss Kavanaugh's story.

Typically a Bushman and Bayne vehicle, the story is said to be replete with comedy elements and thrilling moments. It is the same type of picture as "Red, White and Blue Blood." It was following the production of this comedy-drama that the policy of casting the co-stars in vehicles of this type was adopted. "Under Suspicion," "The Brass Check" and "With Neatness and Dispatch," which followed "Red, White and Blue Blood," show that Bushman and Bayne excel in these comedy-dramas, which give full play to their versatility. Francis X. Bushman will play Hugh Dexter, a young man who believes he is a woman-hater, with particular dislike for society butterflies. Miss Bayne will be seen as Phylis Lane, a "butterfly," who wagers that she can change his ideas.

This is the fourth of Miss Kavanaugh's stories to be produced by Metro. She is also the author of "Wheels of the Law," in which Emily Stevens starred; "Peggy, the Will o' the Wisp," starring Mabel Taliaferro, and "The Winding Trail," a recent release from the Western studios, with winsome Viola Dana in the stellar role.

Metro Will Distribute "My Own United States," Starring Arnold Daly

Alice Brady Has Star Role in "The Trap"

ALICE BRADY has the stellar role in "The Trap," which World-Pictures will release April 15. The character of this picture is said to be a decided deviation from Miss Brady's immediately previous World drama, "Spurs of Sybil." That picture was a society comedy, but "The Trap," on the other hand, is said to deal with the vicissitudes which beset a persecuted girl of obscure birth. George Archainbaud, who directed "The Cross Bearer" and other World successes, handled the production and the supporting cast includes Frank Mayo, Craufurd, Curtis Cooksey and Robert Cummings.

Miss Brady plays the role of Doris Shaw, who is a motherless child living in an obscure fishing village, the principal interest of the inhabitants being the persecution of those who had different religious opinions. Nat Fletcher is a keen suitor for her hand but he scarcely measures up to her standards. It is only when Stuart Kendall, a wealthy artist, visits the village that she finds a man fulfilling her requirements. But Nat revenges himself by circulating false reports regarding her so that the fanatics become worked into a frenzy and stone her out of the village. An outcast, she succeeds in reaching New York in a penniless condition. One day while enviously watching the laughing diners in a little Bohemian restaurant, she faints and one of those who offer their solicitous attentions is none other than Kendall, the artist. An engagement as a model follows and Kendall showers attentions upon her. She is saved from her unscrupulous admirer, however, by a gallant young Western rancher who is obliged to surmount many obstacles before winning her.

Glimpses of Hawaii in 113th Travelogue

Glimpses of Hawaii, the Paradise of the Pacific, are shown in the 113th release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue. The approach to Honolulu is made by steamer and passing into the inner harbor the landing is made in a basin of volcanic hills. Among the fine old mansions of the city many quaint natives are met. The Hawaiians are enthusiastic lovers of horse-racing, and spirited races take place at Diamond Head, near which a native feast is given and the hula-hula is danced.

New Nazimova Picture

Nazimova's second Metro picture has been titled "Toys of Fate," and it will have an early release. The star portrays Azah, a gypsy princess of true blood, in this tale of a tribe of Romany.

Irene Castle Picture Is Timely, Says Pathe

Pathe cites the recent torpedoing of the Celtic, following not long after the sinking of the Tuscania, as evidence of the timeliness of Irene Castle's latest Pathe Play, "The Hillcrest Mystery," written by Ouida Bergere and directed by George Fitzmaurice. The story deals with wireless communication by spies with the enemy and attempts to attack American transports. It has been described as "a gripping mystery tale, in which the spectator's attention does not drop for a single instant." In addition to Irene Castle the cast includes J. H. Gilmore, Ralph Kellard and Wyndham Standing.

Exhibitors Voice Pleasure at Pathe Plays

The personal triumph scored by Fannie Ward in her first Pathe Play, "Innocent," and Frank Keenan in his, "Loaded Dice," are indicated by reports from exhibitors playing these picture. The Kunz Bros. Amusement Co., owners of the Princess theatre, Springfield, Ill., write to Pathe as follows:

"Your first picture, Fannie Ward in 'Innocent' went over big with us. We are certainly pleased with the results obtained and the sentiment of the patrons as they all agreed it was an exceptional production. This is the kind of picture that makes friends for your house."

New Walthall Print

The first print of Henry B. Walthall's newest Paralta play, "With Hoops of Steel," arrived in New York last week where it was screened for the executives of the Paralta organization.

"The Planter" Proved Big Success, Says Mutual

According to Mutual, one of the real box office successes of the past year, judging from reports, has been "The Planter," in which Tyrone Power was starred. The Whitehouse theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., reports that it ran this subject four days and broke all box office records. The Bijou theatre, Racine, Wis., used "The Planter" two days and reports that in spite of an advance in the scale of prices it packed the house both days. Mutual says that the special press book on the production was one of the reasons behind its success.

Toto Comedies Shown on Many Screens

It is stated by Pathe that many prominent exhibitors are booking Toto Comedies. Among them are the Valentine theatre, Toledo, which has booked the Toto Comedies for seven days; Fox's Terminal, Newark for six days; Stillman, Cleveland for seven days; Grand, Williamsport, Pa., for seven days; Gifts, Cincinnati, for six days; Proctor's Schenectady for three days; Strand, Akron for four days; Dome, Youngstown for four days; Colonial, Indianapolis for three days;; Isis, Indianapolis for three days; Palace, Wichita, Kans. for three days; Idle Hour, Kansas City, Mo., for three days and Regent, Great Bend, Kans., for three days.

Alice Joyce Has Begun O. Henry Feature

Having completed work on "Strength of the Weak," a forthcoming Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, Alice Joyce, under the direction of Tom Terriss has begun the production of "Find the Woman," adapted from "Cherchez la Femme," one of O. Henry's best known stories. This announcement of Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, states that he believes that Miss Joyce's role in "Find the Woman," is splendidly adapted to her type of dramatic expression and it is expected that her portrayal will rival any previous effort on her part. The company will go to New Orleans for locale in a short time.

Are Belasco's Ideas Feasible?

Announcement That He May Direct Picture for Universal Raises Doubts as to Practicability of His Proposed Methods

THE announcement made last week that Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, had opened negotiations with David Belasco with the purpose of having "the wizard of the stage" direct a picture at Universal City not only caused the greatest surprise in the industry, but raised serious doubts in the minds of many leaders in the world of motion pictures as to whether Mr. Belasco will be able to produce a picture that will shed further lustre on his reputation without completely remodeling his methods. While expressions of satisfaction were heard on every hand, yet there were many who openly questioned the practicability of the idea advanced by the famous stage impressario.

"Of course," said one of the largest of motion picture producers, "even that Mr. Belasco is considering producing a picture is something of which the industry should be proud. It means that the greatest of the legitimate producers is coming to the realization that through pictures he may become even greater than he at present is. We of the motion picture field certainly shall welcome him into the fold, even though it may be for but a short time.

"But, because Mr. Belasco is considering entering the motion picture field, there is no reason to predict that he will stand head and shoulders above several directors now producing pictures.

"It was with some interest that I read Mr. Belasco's ideas of how he would go about making a picture. While I may be all wrong and Mr. Belasco one hundred per cent correct, I believe that several months' schooling would be a necessity for Mr. Belasco before he could, with any degree of success, attempt to direct a picture. And even then he would need the assistance of a brainy cameraman and an able assistant director.

"Mr. Belasco's idea of rehearsing his company for weeks certainly is to be commended. But he forgets that in the legitimate field performers are not paid during rehearsals. In the motion picture field they are paid for all their time. Such being conditions, is Mr. Belasco big enough to upset all precedents?

"The second suggestion of Mr. Belasco's to which I take exception is the thought that he can photograph all of his scenes in sequence. In advancing that idea Mr. Belasco is taking us back ten years. That was the method of production in the early days of the industry. Later business methods came into vogue and we realized that all action in the same set should be taken while the set was available and later assembled in sequence. One of the causes for this was that when the motion picture art advanced there were as many as seventy and eighty different locations. Some of them were miles apart and some of them were utilized several times in the naming of the same picture. If we had followed Mr. Belasco's idea we would have had to transport companies continually to the same location.

"Another suggestion of Mr. Belasco to which I take exception is that he will make pictures without 'mottoes,' as he describes subtitles. I do not believe an acceptable picture without subtitles can be presented, and I base my objection on my study of audiences. I have seen well written subtitles cause a spontaneous applause more enthusiastic than any acting.

"Notwithstanding the exceptions taken by me to Mr. Belasco's ideas of the manner in which pictures should be made, I feel that I speak for the entire industry in saying that all of us will welcome Mr. Belasco into the motion picture fold."

General Gets Hesser Feature

"Triumph of Venus" Stars Betty Lee in Semi-Mythical Story—Water Scenes Said to Be Feature

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week that General Film Company will distribute Edwin Bower Hesser's "The Triumph of Venus." This is the Victory Film Manufacturing Company's feature production in which Betty Lee is starred. This production, which has already distinguished itself as a unique screen spectacle, has not been shown to the public except at an invitation performance at the Strand Theatre, New York.

The five reels of this photoplay feature are said to abound with beautiful scenes. The story is of a novel character, inasmuch as it deals with the domestic life and human moods of the Greek deities on Olympus. There are numerous scenes in which attractive nymphs disport themselves in mountain streams. The cast is said to contain some of the most bewitching feminine personalities ever collected for a picture, Betty Lee's grace appearing to advantage in her role of Venus. She is given excellent support by other members of the cast, consisting of Phyllis Beveridge, Bonnie Marie, William Sherwood, Hassan Massali, Grace Hamel, Percy Standing, John Fedris, Beatrice Armstrong, A. Freeland, Don McDonald, Carl Dane, Ruth Bradley and N. Paul Roche.

An outstanding feature of "The Triumph of Venus" is the water scenes, in which graceful nymphs perform many spectacular and beautiful swimming and diving stunts. A turbulent mountain stream, in which the water pours over rocks and falls into deep pools, provides a most attractive setting for these stunts. The story follows with considerable faithfulness the myths and legends of the ancient gods, the action being laid on mythical Mount Olympus and on the Isle of Milo. Locations for the pictures were obtained by Captain Hesser in the White Mountains, where the company spent many weeks filming the big feature.

Fox Standard Feature Shows Up Divorce

WILLIAM FOX declares that "The Blindness of Divorce," the new Standard Picture which has just been released, is designed frankly to show divorce as a work of the devil.

"I have tried to make something more than an entertaining play," said Mr. Fox in discussing his new production. "I have tried to make a play that will force people to think. I have aimed to show just what the 24-sheets of the picture represent—a fiend pushing apart a man and woman whom God joined together. In my time I have seen a good many divorce cases, but I am convinced that there was not one in ten that was justified.

"Good people everywhere agree with me. Our clergy, our prominent thinkers, our judges are crying out against this shattering of family ties and sapping of our national life by the divorce decree—a decree that is all too often lightly granted. Therefore I have produced this picture in an effort to arouse the public against this curse to men, women and innocent children."

"The Blindness of Divorce" shows a typical tragedy of family life. The husband, a good enough man in his way, thoughtlessly neglects his wife and child for the fellowship of his friends at the club. A young lawyer, a former suitor of the wife, notices this neglect and forces his attentions on the unwilling woman. One night he goes to her home and seizes her in his arms—just as the husband returns unexpectedly from the club. In spite of her innocence, a divorce follows. The husband is given custody of the little daughter and the disgraced mother is scorned by society. Discouraged and embittered, she eventually becomes proprietress of a fashionable gambling place.

The play was written and directed by Frank Lloyd. Charles Clary plays the part of the husband and Bertha Mann does some of the best acting of her career as the wronged wife and mother. Dramatic in the extreme is the big court scene in which the woman broken by the law denounces the hypocritical judge.

More Activity Promised

According to a Paralta announcement, Henry B. Walthall in the future will be seen in plays which will carry the maximum of action allowed by the story. This is said to be in response to a public demand to see Walthall in roles of the distinctly active type.

Real Types Chosen for Doris Kenyon Picture

In selecting the cast for "The Street of Seven Stars," the Mary Roberts Rinehart story in which Doris Kenyon will appear at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., Miss Kenyon has chosen, so far as possible, types from real life to portray the different characters. In her search she invaded the Metropolitan Opera House, where she secured Harriet McConnell for the minor part of Sadie, the soprano. Her sister, Marie McConnell, a concert pianist, was selected as Scatchett, the little pianist of the story. Helen Criswell, who conducts a real coffee house in Greenwich Village, will keep one in the play. Others in the cast include Hugh Thompson, leading man; Carey Hastings, Stephen Carr, Iva Shepard, Frank Crayne, John Hopkins, George Moss, Raphael De Mise, Hattie Fielding and John Sunderland.

Ethel Clayton Featured in Comedy-Drama

On May 13 World Pictures will present Ethel Clayton in "Journey's End," described as a mirthful society comedy replete with entertaining "business" and laugh-provoking situations, yet possessing a vein of serious drama. Miss Clayton's role is said to fit her personality and ability perfectly, creating a favorable impression upon a critical audience when projected at a private showing. Those supporting Miss Clayton include Muriel Ostriche, Frank Mayo, John Bowers and Jack Drumier.

Director Travers Vale selected Palm Beach as the only satisfactory background for the picture and a large company spent considerable time at that resort obtaining suitable effects.

Optimism Arrived with Spring, Says Berman

That the business which the coming of Spring has brought to the exhibitor has caused the latter to become his optimistic self once more, and that all indications point to a highly profitable Spring and Summer for the industry, is the statement advanced by Harry M. Berman, sales manager of Jewel Productions, Inc.

The manner in which the trade in general is responding to announcements of the release of big features and, of even greater importance, the manner in which the fans are now flocking to the theatres are the factors responsible for this belief.

Breaks a Record

All records have been smashed by the Triangle reading department for the number of manuscripts handled since the first of the year, according to a report by Philip J. Hurn, head of the department, to Vice-President and General Manager H. O. Davis. According to Hurn's figures about 3,500 manuscripts and stories have been read in the past three months and from this number about forty stories purchased, making the acceptance a little more than one per cent of the total submissions.

Cast Chosen for Pathe's New Serial

"The Wolf Faced Man" is the working title of another Western serial being made for Pathe Exchange, Inc., by the Diando Film Company in California. Work on this serial, which will portray new thrills, new mystery and new stunts for serial fans, has begun and will be pushed to a rapid completion. The release date has not been selected, but it will be some time during the coming summer.

The cast chosen for "The Wolf Faced Man" includes George Larkin, Betty Compson, Ora Carew, Horace B. Carpenter, William Quinn, Fred Malatesta, Harry O'Connor, True Boardman. The camera work will be done by W. H. Thornley and Robert Phelan. The story has been written by Lucien Hubbard and W. A. S. Douglas. Mr. Hubbard is also writing the continuity.

Crane to Direct Madge Evans for World

Frank Crane, one of the foremost motion picture directors, has recently signed a long-term contract with World Pictures and is already at work directing Madge Evans and Johnny Hines in "Clarissa" at the Fort Lee studio. Crane has been associated with the directing end of the industry since the early days, having produced pictures for World, Pathe, Balboa and Vitagraph. His latest achievement was the directing of Mary Garden in "Thais" for Goldwyn.

Fox Points to Cast in Divorce Picture

Exhibitors are advised by the William Fox office to call special attention to the cast of "The Blindness of Divorce," the Fox Standard Picture which has just been released and which Mr. Fox himself describes as "appealing to the hearts of all womankind." For the two most important feminine roles Director Frank Lloyd went outside the Fox organization, obtaining Bertha Mann, leading woman of a big stock company on the Coast, and Rhea Mitchell. Charles Clary, who has been seen in many Fox productions, has the leading male role, while other delineations are in the hands of Bertram Grassby, Fred Church, Willard Louis and Marc Robbins.

Fox Titles Four New Features

Two Are Completed and Others Are Well Under Way—Mix Production Awaited with Much Interest

FOUR new productions, two of which have been completed and the other two are well under way, have been titled at the William Fox offices. The pictures star Tom Mix, Gladys Brockwell, Jane and Katherine Lee, and William Farnum.

Mix's film will be called "Ace High," and Lynn Reynolds, who wrote the story and is screening it, is almost midway in the production.

"We await with interest," Mr. Fox said, "the finished product because it should be really the best thing Mix has done. He is known the country over for his preeminent ability as a horseman, having been in the saddle since childhood, and 'Ace High' gives him an admirable opportunity to display his equestrian skill against a most dramatic background. The story is one of brisk adventure in the service of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police.

"Gladys Brockwell's new vehicle, on which photography was begun practically at the same time as 'Ace High,' is to be released as 'The Unmarried Wife.' It will show this star in a role quite different from that in which she is usually seen. Charles Kenyon provided the 'script and Edward J. LeSaint is the director. The chief members of the cast are L. C. Shumway, Bertram Grassby and William Scott.

"The Jane and Katherine Lee subject, stormy comedy-drama, will bear the title of 'We Should Worry!' Written and staged by Kenean Buel, this photoplay tells the story of the exciting moments that resulted from a kidnapping. The cast is exceptionally large. Among its members, besides the starlets, are Ruby De Remer, William Pike, Henry Clive, Edward Sturgis, Tammany Young, Charles Craig, George Humbert, Henry Hallam, Sarah McVicker and Ann Egleston.

"The last of the four pictures we have named is 'True Blue,' which William Farnum recently completed as a Standard. Frank Lloyd was the director."

"The Woman in the Web" Starts April 8

WALTER W. IRWIN, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, announces that the first episode of "The Woman in the Web," the latest Vitagraph serial, was released on Monday, April 8. It will introduce to motion picture patrons of the country a new serial combination made up of two young players already well known throughout the United States and Canada. They are Hedda Nova, the young Russian actress, and J. Frank Glendon, star of many O. Henry features.

In "The Woman in the Web" Vitagraph again presents its president, Albert E. Smith, in the role of serial author, he having collaborated with Cyrus Townsend Brady in the writing of the fifteen-episode melodrama. They were the authors of "Vengeance—and the Woman," the sequel to the first Vitagraph serial, "The Fighting Trail," and Vitagraph points to the success of their previous effort as a fair guarantee that "The Woman in the Web" will be worth while.

David Smith, brother of Albert E. Smith, directed the first episode which bears the chapter title of "Caught in the Web," and in several of the other episodes had Paul Hurst for his aide. The latter part of the serial was made under direction of Mr. Hurst, Mr. Smith having been placed in charge of a Blue Ribbon feature.

Hedda Nova, who has been seen in "The Bar Sinister," "The Sign Invisible" and other independent pictures, is said to show consummate daring in the very first episode when she flees from the roof of one building to that of another across a human bridge formed by a half dozen men linking their bodies together. She also is said to do a number of thrilling riding stunts. These and many similar hazards amply prove her daring spirit.

J. Frank Glendon, remembered for his work in Metro, Fox, Gaumont and the Vitagraph O. Henry stories, is a product of the Montana range, a master horseman and a daring athlete. In the first episode of the picture he leaps fifty feet from the top of a tower into a tree, it is said.

"De Luxe Annie" Cast Has Been Chosen

WORK on Norma Talmadge's new Select production, "De Luxe Annie," a screen version of the Broadway play of the same name, in which Miss Talmadge will be presented by Joseph M. Schenck, is well under way at the Talmadge studios in East Forty-eighth street. The screen presentation will be made under the direction of Roland West. The adaptation of the story is by Paul West.

Casting has been completed, and Miss Talmadge has chosen a group of well-known players for her support. Eugene O'Brien will again appear opposite her, and others in the cast are Frank Mills, Edward Davis, Fred R. Stanton, Joseph Burke, Edna Hunter, little Lorna Volare and David Burns.

"De Luxe Annie" first appeared in The Saturday Evening Post as a two-part serial written by Scammon Lockwood, and early in the present dramatic season was made into a play by Edward Clark and produced at the Booth theatre. Miss Talmadge's role of "De Luxe Annie" is a crook part of unusual character, said to be lifted far out of the commonplace by an odd psychological twist, giving the star fine opportunities for interpretation. It will be the fifth of Miss Talmadge's Select series.

Three Artcraft Stars Shine

April Made Radiant by Douglas Fairbanks, "Bill" Hart and Elsie Ferguson—Latter's Picture on April 8

DURING the month of April three productions will be released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under the Artcraft trade-mark, presenting a wide variety of subjects, as well as in the character of the stars. Wm. S. Hart appears in a Western picture, Elsie Ferguson in a high-class society drama, and Douglas Fairbanks introduces new methods of producing laughter in his acrobatic way in a comedy-drama.

Hart started on the first day of the month with "The Tiger Man," a Thomas H. Ince production from a scenario written by J. G. Hawks especially for the star, and directed by himself. Hart plays the part of Hawk Parsons, a fierce bandit whose soul, deadened by crime, is strangely regenerated through the refining influence of a good woman, but is not quickened into life until he comes to the realization that she is purity herself and he a moral monster unfit to stand in her presence.

On April 8 "The Lie," starring Elsie Ferguson, was released. Aside from the fact that it provides Miss Ferguson with an emotional role it is a subject entirely different from anything she has appeared in on the screen. It was adapted to the screen by Charles Maigne, from the play by Henry Arthur Jones which was produced with success on the speaking stage of England and America. It deals with high social circles of England.

"Mr. Fix-It" is the title of the Douglas Fairbanks offering released on April 15. This picture was produced by Allan Dwan from a scenario by himself based on a suggestion by Ernest Butterworth, and presents Fairbanks as the expounder of the theory that happiness is a habit that comes only to those who afford happiness to others. Aside from the entertainment afforded by the display of his remarkable talents, both physical and artistic, Fairbanks is imbued with a sincere desire to teach a lesson of cheerfulness with each picture, and "Mr. Fix-It" is said to thoroughly fulfill his wishes in this direction.

Unique acrobatic "stunts" were devised for Fairbanks to perform, and it is claimed that he risks life and limb a great many times, one of the startling feats being a hand over hand climb across a political banner swinging high in the air across a street.

World Sets Four for Release

May Brings Quartette of Features Expected to Mark New Era—Big Stars Presented During the Month

THE release sheet of World Pictures for the month of May holds forth four pictures said to be of exceptional merit, one of the photoplays being a special of hitherto unknown excellence distributed on the program.

The names and release dates are as follows: May 6, Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson with a cast of fifty stars in "Masks and Faces"; May 13, Ethel Clayton in "Journey's End," with John Bowers, Frank Mayo and Muriel Ostriche; May 20, Montagu Love and Barbara Castleton in "Vengeance"; May 27, June Elvidge with John Bowers in "The Oldest Law."

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson leads the list in a film adaptation of Charles Reade's novel, "Peg Woffington," in which he has a supporting cast of prominent players. Most of the stars are household names to picture-goers. George Bernard Shaw, Sir Arthur Pinero, Sir James Barrie, Irene Vanbrugh, Sir George Alexander, Lillah McCarthy, Lyall Swete, Gertrude Elliott, Gladys Cooper, Viola Tree and a host of other English stage stars. Only the circumstances under which this photoplay was produced permitted the concentration of such a distinguished cast. The Academy of Dramatic Arts decided to produce a picture for the benefit of the orphaned children of English actors who died during the war, and a committee composed of Shaw, Pinero, Barrie and a number of other notables selected Charles Reade's novel as the most suitable story for picturization. The publicity possibilities which lie in this film for the exhibitor are an unlimited mine of money-making advertising material.

The succeeding picture is "Journey's End," which is released on May 13, starring Miss Ethel Clayton. Three players possessing a following almost equivalent to most stars support Miss Clayton, namely John Bowers, Muriel Ostriche and Frank Mayo, Travers Vale handling the direction.

Montagu Love and Barbara Castleton follow on May 20 in "Vengeance." This picture marks the first appearance of Miss Barbara Castleton in World Pictures, with whom she has signed a long term contract.

June Elvidge makes her appearance on the World program in a drama titled "The Oldest Law," supported by John Bowers.

Peggy Hyland and Company Back from South

Peggy Hyland and her company producing "Peg of the Pirates" for William Fox, have returned to the Fox studios in New Jersey from the South, where they have spent more than three weeks making exteriors under the direction of O. A. C. Lund. Most of the work was done at Charleston, S. C. Ocean scenes aboard a privateer and a pirate ship on the Atlantic will be a feature of the film. Among those who appear prominently in the cast are Eric Mayne, Sidney Mason, Frank Evans, L. Wolheim, Ajax Carroll and Carlton Macy.

Montagu Love Has a Big Part in Wm. A. Brady's "Stolen Orders"

Gambling Club Feature of "Stolen Orders"

One of the most interesting scenes in William A. Brady's feature picture, "Stolen Orders," is said to be that depicting a fashionable gambling club operating under full steam. This institution of chance which will be shown on the screen in "Stolen Orders" is said to resemble closely, in fact almost to be a reproduction of one of the clubs recently brought out of its discreet retirement in richly furnished quarters through the activities of the authorities in New York City. This particular place and its less particular methods of separating patrons from their cash has been the unwilling recipient of considerable attention from the newspapers.

In this production, which is based upon the big Drury Lane spectacle, "Sealed Orders," Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love, June Elvidge, George MacQuarrie and Madge Evans enact the principal roles.

Frank Keenan in Second

Frank Keenan will make his second appearance as a Pathe star in "Ruler of the Road," which will be released the week of April 21. This is said to be even stronger than "Loaded Dice," Keenan's first Pathe Play. It is a railroad story, Jeannette Lee being the author and "Simeon Tetlow's Shadow" being its original title.

Mary Warren, Triangle Player

Would Organize the Film Industry for War

A group of executives who will bring together for war work every person connected with the motion picture industry and all its branches in the United States is proposed by Jack Conway, Triangle feature director. The plan is still in embryo, but Conway feels that if it reaches in any degree the proportions he sees for it, he will devote all of his time to bringing film people together under one great win-the-war-banner. He invites all who are interested to write to him for details. "There are a hundred and one ways in which we, as a body, could be helpful, where as individuals we are scattering our fire."

Ralph Ince Mme. Petrova's Permanent Director

Contracts have been signed by Madame Petrova and Ralph Ince whereby the latter will direct the Petrova productions exclusively, having laid aside all other plans for the present. It is possible that Mr. Ince, who has been at the head of his own producing company since leaving Vitagraph some years ago, will return to the screen as an actor as well as director in support of Madame Petrova in a special feature to follow the production of "Patience Sparhawk."

Referring to the engagement of Mr. Ince, Frederick L. Collins, president of the Picture Company, makes the following statement: "Madame Petrova's plan of changing directors with each feature until a man of Mr. Ince's known abilities was available has been found to be a very wise one, partly because she has been fortunate in securing this excellent successor to George Irving, Larry Trimble, and Frank Crane, but chiefly because she has not been committed to any one man's work, until she has found, by months of testing, that particular man best fitted to bring out the highest abilities of the star and the greatest possibilities in her productions."

About New Productions

Clever juvenile actors are featured in "I'm a Man," the newest release in the Judge Brown stories, distributed by General Film. This is described as a stirring patriotic story of timely nature.

Bluebird spreads forth the tidings that Carmel Myers is surrounded by a notable cast in "My Parisian Wife," the picture in which she is now working. Edwin August is among the players.

In Mary Miles Minter's forthcoming American-Mutual production, "The Greater Call," under production at Santa Barbara, the star appears in a "ravishing" (says the p. a.) costume.

As different as possible from "Hidden Pearls," yet with a similarly exotic atmosphere, Sessue Hayakawa's newest Paramount subject, "The Honor of His House," promises to excel the former production.

Mae Marsh is in the midst of a new Goldwyn feature, which the company has not named as yet. Director Hobart Henley took the star to Georgia around Easter time in search of a neglected mansion for scenes.

Katherine Harris Barrymore (Mrs. John Barrymore) has been engaged by Metro for a role in "The House of Mirth." Her part will be the lead in this new production.

W. W. Hodkinson says it has to be a real picture these days to get away with a seven days' run in almost any town, particularly Milwaukee. Kerrigan's "The Turn of a Card" turned the trick.

Maud Wayne, who has appeared in seventeen Keystone comedies, has her first dramatic role in the new Triangle feature, "The Loyalty of Taro San," which Frank Borzage is directing.

"Tinsel" is the title of Oscar Apfel's second World Picture in which Kitty Gordon is the star. Muriel Ostriche and Frank Mayo are featured in the cast.

Universal said last week it had received a letter of virile endorsement of Jewel's production, "The Kaiser." This was sent to the management of the Broadway, where the picture is running.

Bookings are said to be rapidly coming in for "Chase Me Charlie," the Essanay-Chaplin comedy released by the George Kleine System. The picture is compiled from Essanay-Chaplin productions.

The charm of "Twenty-One," Pathe-Bryant Washburn feature, lies in visualizing the dreams of a full-blooded American boy, according to an exhibitor who booked it for a week.

"The Ordeal of Rosetta," which Alice Brady has finished, will be her fifth Select Picture. In it the star has a dual role, and Craufurd Kent appears opposite her. Ormi Hawley is also in the cast.

The nature of the story chosen for "Ace High," a new William Fox picture, on which Tom Mix has started work, makes necessary five persons to play two characters in the production.

The interior scenes of the ducal palace of Gismonda were taken recently for the Paramount picture of that title, starring Lina Cavalieri, at the Fort Lee studio of Famous Players-Lasky.

Work is progressing rapidly on "The Firebrand," Virginia Pearson's dramatic production, whose action is laid in Russia. Edmund Lawrence is in charge of Miss Pearson's new subject.

The juvenile court scenes, which form such an important part in the forthcoming George K. Spoor feature, "Young America," have been prepared under the direction of Judge Ben Lindsay.

"The Firefly of France," which has been running in the Saturday Evening Post, has been bought as a screen subject for Wallace Reid, the Paramount star. Ann Little will be the feminine lead.

John Adolfi, the director whose first World Picture will be "The Heart of a Girl," written by Maravene Thompson, has returned to New York with his company after taking scenes at Washington.

Essanay is planning to issue other prints of the ten Broncho Billy dramas of the hills and plains, owing to the strong demand for them. They will be released through the George Kleine System.

One of the More Solemn Expressions Utilized By Mabel Normand In Goldwyn's "Joan of Plattsburg"

Burlingham Coming with Unique Swiss Views

Frederick Burlingham, American explorer and cinematographer, who once descended 1,200 feet into the crater of Vesuvius and is also well known for his work on the Matterhorn, Mont Blanc and the Jungfrau, has left Switzerland for New York with a unique series of new views, it was announced last week.

Among his new Alpine scenes is the ascent of the Zinal-Rothorn, at Zermatt, more dangerous than the Matterhorn, and a film showing the scaling of the Blümlisalp, where the whole party narrowly escaped death by the breaking of an ice cornice on the summit. Mr. Burlingham was taking a scene at the time and consequently succeeded in registering the accident in detail, which views are unique in Alpine history and which never again may be seen.

Metro Completes Five and Starts Seven

With four productions just completed, one in the last stages of completion, and seven, with themes ranging from powerful drama to romantic comedy, either started or ready to be placed in the hands of stars and directors, Metro's Western and Eastern studios are crowded and bustling with activity.

At the Hollywood plant of the company, which is entering upon a new era of expansion with Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of Metro Pictures Corporation, in supreme charge of all matters of policy, the selection and supervision of vehicles for the stars at the studios there, and George D. Baker, in full charge of all actual producing, two stars have completed productions while one has interiors to do and three will immediately begin new pictures.

Graves with Universal

Ralph Graves was engaged last week by Universal to appear opposite Ella Hall in the Ella Hall Special Attractions.

News Notes from Canada

Jewel Feature a Hit in Canada

"The Price of a Good Time" Closes Run at Rialto in Toronto, Thereby Winding Up Successful Advertising Campaign

WITH the end of the run at the Rialto theatre, Toronto, Canada, of the Jewel feature, "The Price of a Good Time," has terminated what Canadian showmen declare to be one of the most successful advertising campaigns ever used in conjunction with a moving picture, in the Dominion.

One of the results of the Rialto campaign was the extension of the original run from one week to ten days. A more important result is the lesson it has taught Canadian exhibitors in general regarding what can be accomplished when an effort is made to lift moving picture advertising out of the well-beaten rut.

The Rialto management traveled the usual advertising path so far as newspaper advertising, billboards and heralds were concerned—with the exception of the fact that it used just twice as much of each of these mediums as is ordinarily purchased. The two Toronto Sunday papers carried striking ads, while the town was literally plastered with 24-sheets.

One of the remarkable features of this campaign was the co-operation given the Rialto theatre by the management of the T. Eaton Company, a department store in Toronto, in the distribution of heralds. A representative who called upon the store officials was granted permission to walk through the establishment and place a herald into the hands of every one of the hundreds of employees. Since one of the most stringent rules of this establishment forbids the throwing of papers on the floor, the heralds were pocketed and taken home. As the result, the business done by the Rialto that evening broke all previous box office records.

People whose business required them to walk along Yonge street, "Toronto's Broadway," were not allowed to forget that "The Price of a Good Time" was being shown at the Rialto. Practically every vacant store had in its windows either a photo frame showing scenes in the production, or else window cards and one sheets.

An unusual lobby display, which showmen who visited the theatre expressly to see declared to be the equal of anything Kashin, formerly of Montreal, conceived during his stay in that city, also helped to attract crowds.

Canada Exhibitors Look Ahead

Solution of fuel difficulties is now occupying the attention of exhibitors all over Canada, and the outlook for the coming winter is none too bright.

The situation which Canada is facing today may be attributed to conditions obtaining in the United States. While not wholly dependent upon the States for its fuel supply Canada is dependent to the extent of 55 per cent of its total coal requirements and 98 per cent of its crude and refined oil products. The fuel situation today can be blamed on the ease with which fuels of all kinds were imported from the United States and to the apathy displayed towards the exploitation of certain of its own fuel resources by the public at large. Canada's supply of lignite and peat is enormous, and outside Toronto there are seven bogs which could supply the city with 26,500,000 tons of fuel.

Talking of Combines——

To his astonishment, one of the New Brunswick exchange managers found the other day that certain exhibitors in the extreme end of Nova Scotia had formed a sort of combine, agreeing should any house be threatened with darkness owing to non-arrival of film, to pass along the show which they had just used, instead of sending it to the theatre named by the exchange. To all intents and purposes the film would be lost for a number of days, and had it not been for one honest exhibitor who sent in his check for the rental of the film, the exchange would have had some difficulty in discovering just where the fault lay. Strange to say the lucky exhibitors not only got their show for nothing, but with one exception, they made absolutely no acknowledgment to the exchange.

Premier Theatre Burns to Ground

The Premier theatre, owned and managed by W. H. Coyner, Sydney, N. S., was burned to the ground last week. This little house was constructed only about three years ago. Mr. Coyner, however, did not weep long over his loss, but two days later was running a show in another hall, which he was fortunate enough to secure. Plans have already been drawn up to replace the theatre burned down, and this will be a concrete building. The Regal Film Co. lost twelve reels in the fire.

Goes Seventy Miles for Pathe Play

L. Ernest Ouimet, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., which handles Pathe pictures in Canada, had an interesting indication of the drawing power of "The Hidden Hand" recently when the general manager of the Dominion Atlantic Railroad, whose office is situated at Kentville, N. S., telephoned to the manager of the Empire theatre, in Halifax, asking that "The Hidden Hand" be put on first thing at the matinee, as a party of ten, including himself, desired to see this serial every Monday afternoon and to return again on the afternoon train to their home in Kentville. The distance they travel is seventy miles each way.

Theatres Fear Daylight Saving Bill

All Canadian exhibitors are on the qui vive regarding the coming daylight saving bill about to be passed. This has obtained its second reading and everybody expects the worse. Two years ago when this was tried out in the Maritime Provinces every theatre lost money, and it was generally recognized that the measure was absolutely against the interests of the theatrical business. In spite of the fact that the passing of the bill has been well advertised no action seems to have been taken by the exhibitors, at least in the Maritime Provinces.

Golding Loans Theatre for Soldiers

Manager Golding of the Imperial theatre, St. John, N. B., loaned the theatre, on Good Friday, to the executive of the Soldiers' Comfort Association. A sacred concert was arranged in which the best talent of the city participated, and the whole affair was distinguished for its reverential character. The Specialty Film Co. loaned films depicting the various phases of the war both on land and sea and these were exceptionally well received.

Exchanges Have Trouble with Trains

Owing to the cancellation of so many trains the film exchanges of New Brunswick are put to much trouble and inconvenience. It is found to be impossible to guarantee serials arriving on time, and many houses have had to disappoint their patrons. The Imperial, St. John, N. B., is running "The Bull's Eye," but two or three installments have been delayed.

LOCAL EDITING FACILITATES DISTRIBUTION OF "SCREEN TELEGRAM"

President Freuler of Mutual is giving his personal attention to the Screen Telegram to insure its character meeting the standards set by the company for their new venture in the field of the topical. To avoid delay in distribution, Mr. Freuler has arranged that all matter turned by the New York cameramen be edited, titled, and printed in New York, instead of being sent first to Chicago.

The number of subjects contained in each reel with their proper footage is a matter also receiving consideration by Mr. Freuler and the editorial staff.

Screen Telegram No. 10 contains unusually comprehensive pictures of the Italian troops on their own front and will be sure of a hearty welcome.

DRAMATIC SUSPENSE IN WAR PICTURES

The second of the Official Italian War Pictures, now showing at the Rivoli theatre, has the suspense and climax of a well wrought feature. During the bombardment of an Austrian port by the Italian fleet, an Austrian battleplane appears and essays to bomb the battleships. A fleet of Italian hydroplanes immediately starts in pursuit and an exciting chase ensues. The plane, determined to accomplish its purpose in the face of a cloud of enemies, continues to attack the fleet, and comes within an ace of destroying one of the boats. Meantime, however, the hydroplanes are drawing nearer and rapidly surrounding the daring plane which, to escape destruction, makes a swift "tail spin" to the sea, where the aviator is taken prisoner. This is the chief incident, but the entire reel is a succession of splendidly stirring events that hold the spectator entranced from start to finish.

PUTTING SALT ON HIS TAIL

Sister was rather sceptical of Buddy's admonition to catch a bird with salt, so she tried her own method of scattering crumbs for the little visitor, and soon had him literally eating out of her hand. Then she got even with Buddy.

This is the pleasant little tale that W. L. Finley embodies in his latest bird picture, along with many other delightful snapshots of so-called wild birds feeding familiarly at his doorsteps. A flock of robins in winter settles on an apple tree to eat the fruit not deemed worthy of plucking; the shy fly-catcher is discovered on her nest; the long-legged avocet is seen wading and nesting. Last come a row of magpies, as solemn as a minstrel show.

The picture is a delightful one for children.

HOW DOES HE DO IT?

Does Jack Cohn sit around waiting till time and the passage of the seasons drop the apples of news into his lap?

Not he! Just what he does by way of helping on the harvest we don't know, but while other people study the newspapers to learn what they ought to be doing or might have done, Jack gets busy with a word here and there, and the apples just naturally come down and hit him in the head, in the shape of telegrams and 'phone calls from the biggest men of the land asking him to send his cameramen for exclusive material.

So Jack was not at all surprised the other day to hear Mr. Roosevelt at the other end of the line. There were to be Liberty Bond doings at Oyster Bay and a Universal cameraman was desired. Later, pictures were to be taken of the grandchildren with grandpa. Somebody beside T. R. was "de-e-lighted."

Short Subjects in Review

By Clara DeLissa Berg

Quality and Conditions Separate Factors

ORRIN G. COCKS, Secretary of the National Committee for Better Films, affiliated with the National Board of Review, makes a brief plea in the April Bulletin of the Committee that exhibitors might well heed.

Too much emphasis, according to Mr. Cocks, has been placed on the quality of the pictures shown young people, to the exclusion of that very important matter, the conditions under which the picture is shown. Dark streets in the neighborhood of the theatre, insufficient light in the theatre itself, children sitting throughout the house without adult supervision, crowding in the lobby and unsanitary arrangements are all factors which contribute in large measure and even more directly to the much-deplored "injurious effect" of motion pictures on the young.

Make your theatre the social centre of your community. Have it clean and well-lighted. When you invite children to special performances, give over one portion of your house to them, and invite parents or members of a local women's club or committee to act as chaperones for the children sitting there.

Those nickels that come rattling into the till from the youngsters' hands will shine much more brightly when they bear no stain of physical ills that too often are the cause of moral ills in themselves past cure.

MR. EXHIBITOR, MEET MR. CANNIBAL KING

"Corking!" So there, we just had to say it! It is the only word that covers adequately the mingled amusement, pleasure and genuine interest with which we viewed the Outing-Chester picture devoted to the Fiji Islands and their one-time cannibal inhabitants.

First of all, as a scenic, it is very attractive, the foliage being of course tropical and the architecture of the capital town simple and picturesque. But of this there is but a trifle, and the rest of the reel is given up to pictures of the natives in their various activities and amusements. They are a fine-looking lot, these erstwhile man-eaters, tall, well-built, with thick, bushy hair and pleasant expressions. A fair amount of clothing seems to be the thing, the policeman wearing petticoats cut at the bottom into neat points, and one of the royal family even going so far as a dress suit. Indeed, as the title man tells us, the visitors were not surprised, though the spectator would be perhaps, to see the boys and girls who jump so fearlessly into the sea from high rocks wearing wrapper bathing suits. But little informalities still persist. Tea parties, or rather kava parties, are pleasant social functions, but the kava, instead of being poured from a pitcher, is squeezed out of a sort of dishcloth by the gentleman who officiates at the flowing bowl.

Concluding the reel are entertaining pictures of a festival at which the Fiji women and a band of very pretty Samoan girls are the actors.

The novel and interesting character of the pictures, enhanced by the clever and witty titling, renders this reel unusually attractive and entertaining.

SEEING THE SEA WITH THE CINEMA

Whoever it is that directs and titles the undersea pictures issued from the Ditmars Studios that continue to delight audiences at the Strand theatre manages to get a "punch" and a laugh in each number.

Crabs and lobsters are the chief performers in the fourth issue, and the adventure of a hermit crab who, after fitting himself with a new dress, goes out to investigate the food value of the razor clam, is a veritable farce. The clam is not going to stand for such nonsense and digs in head first. A crab whose appearance is a comedy in itself is a marine daddy-long-legs. His spider-like legs have a spread of twelve feet.

Then comes a fight between two lobsters "of the heavyweight class." There is a good, lively tussle, but the battle seems to end in a draw. Not so lucky is the lobster who ran foul of a devil fish. He puts up a game fight, but is finally overpowered and completely enveloped by the twining tentacles.

The melodrama over, the exhibition ends very properly with a comedy, in which the sole actor, a crab, fits himself with a coat of sponge. With this proper camouflage, he is equipped for adventure safe for himself, but deadly to his intended victims.

HAM AND——

Which would you rather do or be eaten, is the usual formula put to our good friend the pig. But pigs of unusual intelligence may escape this fate, as the current Universal Screen Magazine shows, by learning to perform difficult feats of an acrobatic nature suitable for the stage. The result is very amusing to watch.

The editor of the Magazine was certainly in a pleasant frame of mind this week, for he has included, in addition to the pigs, some delightful pictures of swans, the aristocrats of birddom. Also, the pictures of the "spud drive" are of a very cheerful and optimistic nature. The "man with a hoe" would be speedily thrust into the discard if he attempted competition with the great tractors that are now used to harvest the important potato crop.

The United States Department of Agriculture contributes a film showing your Uncle Sam as a lumberjack in his forest reserves. No industry is more important at the present time than that which produces timber for our much needed ships. The pictures are interesting and attractive.

Wille Hopkins illustrates in "mud miracles" the marked resemblance existing between some barnyard friends and certain humans.

PLEASANTLY HUMOROUS

The next time you meet a bear in the woods—a likely happening—don't climb a tree. Two can play at that game, as the boys at camp, photographed by the Bray Studios, found out. The bears in question, however, are gentle and playful pets, fond of ice-cream cones and bottled soda water, as well as friendly boxing matches. The picture is most enjoyable.

A novel phrasing of the titles adds to the interest of the pictures, showing how Uncle Sam makes his postage stamps.

Goodrich Dirt, ably seconded by Spot, looks for "easy money" in meeting "Kid" Somebody on the mat. But the "Kid" is anything but aptly named, and poor Goodrich suffers his usual sad fate.

THEY LIKE TRAVELS

Lying just off the heart of the theatrical district in New York is a picture theatre. It has no neighborhood clientele, nor is it patronized by those who visit the big Broadway houses. It caters to the man who has an hour or two to idle between business appointments.

This house, charging only ten and fifteen cents admission, offers in addition to a feature and a comedy, News Weeklies and an Educational. Travel pictures, says the manager, are in high favor.

COMING PROGRAM OFFERINGS

Triangle Announces List for April 14

THE Canadian wilderness is a fertile field for romantic picturization but seldom touched. Ralph Westfall, the author of "The Law of the Great Northwest," which heads the Triangle April 14 program, was for many years a member of the Royal Mounted Police. During this time he met with hairbreadth escapes and thrilling adventures, many of which have appeared in popular magazines. When Mr. Westfall joined the Triangle scenario staff he was given a free hand and he is satisfied that the "atmosphere" of his story has been maintained throughout this production. Margery Wilson and William V. Mong are the featured players.

"Who Killed Walton?" the second release of the week, has been adapted from Norman Sherbrook's story, "The Veil." It is said to present a gripping mystery situation, combined with an interesting love theme. Walton is a character who sprang into prominence less than a decade ago as the victim of New York's most prominent murder case. Mary Mersch is the Marian Emlen of the story.

J. Barney Sherry is the politician. Mary Mersch, as Marian Emlen, makes her debut as a Triangle player. Frank Bonn, who has hitherto appeared in Triangle Keystone comedies, is Walton. Dora Rodgers, also of the comedy forces, is Elsa Armytage. Edwin Brady is the reformer. Thomas N. Heffron directed.

Eugene Carey and Margery Wilson Appear In Triangle's "The Law of the Great Northwest"

A negro jazz band was transported to Culver City to supply color and atmosphere needed for the big New York cafe scene in "Who Killed Walton?" This is said to have had an excellent effect.

"First Aid," a Keystone comedy, with Maude Wayne, William Franey and Myrtle Reeves, is the concluding release of the week.

Pathe Drives Forward with White Serial

"THE HOUSE OF HATE," Pathe's Pearl White serial in which Antonio Moreno appears and which is heralded by Pathe throughout the country as the best serial it has ever had, is driving into the far West with great success, according to reports.

Lou Cullins of the Grand theatre, the Dalles, Ore. made his first trip in two years to Seattle recently, and booked "The House of Hate" after having had a look at the special informational reel for exhibitors, prepared by Pathe as one of the usual means of promotion worked out on this serial. Mr. Cullins is an old circus man and has a knack of putting over pictures with stunts and ballyhoos. He remarked about the cleverness of the informational reel and spoke of it as an interesting and important innovation. He anticipates carrying out the suggestion in the campaign book as to an unusual stunt for putting this serial over.

The Rex theatre, Aberdeen, Washington is a vaudeville house and they play Pathe serials as one of the strongest drawing cards on their bills. "The House of Hate" will run there.

Manager Sothern of the Grand theatre, Bellingham, Washington has also joined the nation-wide group of smiling "House of Hate" exhibitors.

Fairbanks-Artcraft Moved Up One Week

In order to balance the program for the month, according to an announcement from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, a change has been made in the order of the Paramount and Artcraft releases for April. "Mr. Fix-It," the Artcraft picture starring Douglas Fairbanks, which originally was set for release on April 22, has been advanced one week to the 15th. "Rich Man, Poor Man," the Parmount Picture starring Marguerite Clark, which was announced for April 15, has been set back to the 22d.

The rest of the schedule for April, as heretofore published, will remain the same, Vivian Martin, in "Unclaimed Goods," being released the same week as "Mr. Fix-It," and Charles Ray, in "Playing the Game," with the Marguerite Clark picture.

Shipman-Whitman Top the Vitagraph Program

The list of Vitagraph releases for the week of April 15, as announced by President Albert E. Smith, is as follows:

Blue Ribbon Feature, five parts, "The Girl From Beyond," adapted from Cyrus Townsend Brady's widely read novel, "A Texan Romance," and featuring Nell Shipman with Alfred Whitman.

Serial, two parts, "The Open Switch," the second episode of "The Woman In the Web," featuring Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon.

Vitagraph Drew Comedy, one part, "The Deceivers."

Big V Comedy, one part, "Counts and No Counts," featuring Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock.

"The Primitive Woman" Is Mutual Offering

In its April 15 release, "The Primitive Woman," Mutual presents Margarita Fischer. The play is from Henry Albert Phillips' story and was directed by Lloyd Ingram. In it Miss Fischer plays the part of a modern Eve, arrayed in talcum powder and some seaweed, who roams the woods to show up a high-brow professor whose ideas of prehistoric woman have proved distasteful to her.

The Screen Telegram, Nos. 14 and 15, showing novel angles of the war situation, will be released April 17 and 21. "The Helping Hand," starring Billie Rhodes, is the Strand Comedy for April 15.

"Lost on Dress Parade" First April O. Henry

The April release list of O. Henry stories distributed by General Film Company is headed by "Lost on Dress Parade," a picture of high life in New York City and said to contain a number of fine dramatic situations. Patsy Deforrest and Evart Overton are the featured players. It is the story of a draughtsman in an architect's office who manages to save a dollar a week for ten weeks in order to have a "gentleman's night of it" at a fashionable cafe. His ten dollars open up a strange series of adventures.

The succeeding feature will be "Nemesis and the Candy Man," with William Dunn and Miriam Miles.

Pathe Features Keenan in Railroad Drama

Pathe offers as its leading feature for the week of April 21, "Ruler of the Road," a railroad drama, with Frank Keenan in the stellar role. It is an adaptation from the story by Jeannette Lee, called "Simeon Tetlow's Shadow," and was produced under Ernest C. Warde's direction.

Other subjects on the week's program are the seventh episode of the Pearl White serial, "The House of Hate"; a one-reel Harold Lloyd comedy titled "It's a Wild Life"; travel scenic titled "Trinidad," and the thirty-fourth and thirty-fifth releases of Hearst-Pathe News.

Whether It Be In Gingham or Suit of Armor, Mabel Normand Is Her Cheery Self in "Joan of Plattsburg," Goldwyn Picture

Madge Kennedy Scores in Dramatic Role

In "The Danger Game," her newest Goldwyn picture, ventures from straight comedy into the more serious side of motion picture drama. How this change will be received by exhibitors is forecast, Goldwyn believes, in a letter received by Nathan Ascher, of Ascher Brothers' Amusement Enterprises of Chicago, who writes Samuel Goldfish: "I believe that this new production, 'The Danger Game,' will whirl this beautifully talented star to the highest point of screen popularity.

New Title for Castleton-Love Picture

"Vengeance" is the new title selected for the first Barbara Castleton-Montagu Love feature which will be released by World Pictures May 20. It was produced under the working title of "The Swami," but this was regarded as not sufficiently clear and definite. "Vengeance," which was directed by Travers Vale, is the first World Picture starring Barbara Castleton, although she has appeared in several independent productions. Montagu Love appears in the role of an Indian mystic and priest.

Jaxon Comedies Now in Seventh Series

General Film Company this week releases the fourth subject of the seventh series of Jaxon Comedies, "Beating Him to It." Following this will come "Forced Into Matrimony." Although the Jaxon Comedies have been running for nearly a year now, General Film reports that they continue to grow in popularity with the exhibitors.

Glances at the Program

Bud Duncan, Dot Farley and Kewpie Morgan, in Clover Comedies by the National Corporation for General Film Release, have contributed "He Couldn't Fool His Wife" to the program.

The actual shooting down of a German aerial raider over Paris is said to be one of the features of Universal Animated Weekly No. 17. Pictures of the damage done are also shown.

"His Majesty, Bunker Bean," Paramount picture, with Jack Pickford, was released April 8. Louise Huff appears opposite Pickford in the picture, directed by William D. Taylor.

Madge Kennedy's peculiar personality presented itself again on April 7 in Goldwyn's "The Danger Game." The star no sooner finished this picture than she started on another one.

The members of the L-Ko beauty sextette are said to be given a real opportunity to display their charms in the comedy release of April 22 on the Universal program. The name is not announced.

Pathe plans to release at an early date "Our Fighting Ally—the Tank," which shows how the tank and tractor will help win the war on the battlefields and on the farms.

Gaumont News No. 2 has scheduled eight subjects, with scenes all the way from Berkeley, Cal., to New York, and on across the seas to France. It is considered very complete.

"The House of Silence," a Paramount subject, with Wallace Reid, was released April 8. It is a detective story, with trap doors, secret springs and everything that goes with such a plot.

"A Night Out," the ninth of the new edition Essanay-Chaplin comedies distributed by General Film, will be released the latter part of April, it was made known last week.

One of the most amusing scenes in "Saucy Madeline,' 'the Paramount-Mack Sennett release of April 22, occurs in the bowling alley where a match game takes place. Polly Moran is in the cast.

"The Return of O'Garry" is released this week by General Film Company. Other stories will be released by General every two weeks, the second Finley picture being set for April 27.

"The Making of a Sammie" is the feature of Universal Current Events No. 47, illustrating the life of a rookie at the training camp. The scenes are selected from the various camps.

Viola Dana's horsemanship is tested in a gallop by night on a Kentucky thoroughbred in "Riders of the Night," which Metro will release as an All-Star Series picture April 29.

"The Lie," with Elsie Ferguson in the star part, was released under the Artcraft trade-mark April 8. It gives the star wide latitude for the display of her emotional talent.

Doris Kenyon's First Production for De Luxe Is "The Street of Seven Stars"

Theda Bara's Own Story Is Current Fox Release

"The Soul of Buddha," from Theda Bara's own pen and in which the author appears as the star, is the current release on William Fox's Standard Picture schedule. J. Gordon Edwards, who has directed all of Miss Bara's productions during the past two years, was in charge of the picture. Miss Bara appears first as a dancing girl in a Buddhist temple; later as a favorite of the Parisian stage. The story begins in Java and the action is carried to the Apache dens of the Latin Quarter of Paris.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

Universal Newsettes

The Universal Company has added another producing unit, which has been placed under the direction of Harry Pollard, former director of American subjects featuring Margarita Fischer. Ella Hall is to head this new company. Announcement was also made at the studios that another actress has stepped into stardom. Ruth Clifford, who heretofore has been co-starred, is to be the featured player of a company, and has been placed under the direction of Rupert Julian. Another new member of the Universal organization is Little Gloria Joy, aged three years, who has appeared in a number of speaking stage successes, as well as in several motion pictures. Her first appearance for the Universal will be in support of Dorothy Phillips, under the direction of Allen J. Holubar, in "Discipline and Genevra." William Stowell is playing the masculine lead.

Members of the serial company making "The Brass Bullet," under the direction of Ben Wilson, which was formerly known as "Pleasure Island," had a very exciting experience this week when the steering gear of the ocean-going launch, leased from Baron Long to transport the producing unit to Catalina Islands, was broken. The yacht floated for two hours, and then drifted against a submerged rock, breaking the rudder, when several miles off shore. The players were brought to port by another vessel several hours later.

A very unusual setting which is a composite of many historical places of interest along the California coast, has been built at Universal City for scenes in "The Brass Bullet." It represents Palisades hotel, an old-fashioned lighthouse and some of the other noteworthy buildings at famous resorts.

The first Mary MacLaren photoplay, at present known as "A Man's World," is nearing completion under the direction of Ida May Park. This is a tale of a girl disinherited and abandoned by her father, and will have a number of sensational scenes, including an automobile wreck which has many unusual features.

Paralta Paragraphs

While no official statement has been made by either the Paralta Studio management on the coast or representatives of Pathe, nevertheless it is definitely stated that Pathe will conclude production at the Paralta studios following the completion of the present subjects on which the Bryant Washburn, Bessie Love and Frank Keenan companies are now working. A number of changes have been made at the Paralta plant during the past week, and there promises to be quite a number of others.

Raymond B. West who, since his affiliation with the Paralta as director, has been in charge of filming subjects starring Bessie Barriscale, is next to direct Jack Kerrigan in a play as yet unnamed, and Howard Hickman will make his debut as a director, being placed in charge of the filming of the next Barriscale release. Reginald Barker, who began producing the second Louise Glaum Paralta release, has taken up the making of the Mastercraft subject, "One Woman." Wallace Worsley is in charge of completing the second Louise Glaum film.

Nat Brown, vice-president, is serving as executive manager at the studios, and Frank Kane, brother of Robert, treasurer of the Paralta Plays, is also at the Hollywood producing plant. J. C. Hampton has taken up his work as business manager. Gerald C. Duffy, engaged to direct publicity, is expected on the Coast within a few days.

Live Triangle Items

S. A. Lynch, president and general manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, is expected in Los Angeles within the next few days, and it is very probable some announcement will be made shortly as the result of conferences here during Mr. Lynch's visit to the Culver City plant, which will give definite information regarding the distribution of the six and seven-reel subjects which have been in production for several weeks at the Triangle studios, the first of which has been advertised as being "The Servant in the House." Several films of this size have been completed, and four others are now in the various stages of production. While the information has not come from any authentic source, it is believed these pictures are made by the Reliance Motion Picture Company, and will not be released on the regular Triangle program.

Of the new subjects started for the Triangle this week, one of particular interest is that in which Jack Livingston will be seen in the featured role. The picture is at present known as "The Loyalty of Taro San," and has to do with the experiences of a young American lawyer in Japan, and later portrays the loyalty of the son of the Cherry Blossom land when he makes numerous sacrifices for his employer, the attorney, in America. Maude Wayne, who has been seen in many Keystone comedies, will make her first appearance in dramatic work in support of Livingston. Others in this subject are Lillian West and Lillian Langdon.

Vitagraph News Bits

The departure of several of the Vitagraph Companies from their Hollywood studios makes possible more active work on the erection of the improvements at the plant, including the new enclosed stages and laboratories and dressing rooms.

Preparations are now being made for the Earle Williams Company to begin work on an adaptation from the Harold McGrath story, "The Girl in His House." The work of filming this will be started within a few days.

Director George Sargeant and company, who have been engaged in filming the Wolfville tales, have stared in on the third release, which will be known as "Toad Allen's Elopement." The company has been working in Topanga canyon this week on this subject.

A new comedy has been put in production which will feature Montgomery and Rock. This at the studio is known as the sleep-walking comedy and it is known that many of the thrills will consist of the somnambulist walking about on girders of a skyscraper now being erected in the business district of Los Angeles.

The Larry Seamon Company is still at work on "Cleopatra," or rather the burlesque of that tale.

All members of the William Duncan Company are enjoying the best of health and Winter weather in Bear Lake Valley, and so the members of the studio staff are set at rest with respect to worrying about these players because communication was cut off by a recent story. William Duncan has sent several thousand feet of film to the studio, and by this it is seen that snow is falling just at the time that he wanted it. In fact, in a letter to the officers of the studio he advises that the weather could not have been better if he had ordered it.

Director Paul Hurst and "The Woman in the Web" company, have arrived home from the Santa Cruz mountains with about five thousand feet of exterior water scenes. The latter part of this week the players went to San Diego where a number of aeroplane flights were filmed. In two of these Otto Leaderer appeared as the pilot.

With Pathe Players

Director Stuart Paton and several members of the Diando Company's producing unit filming "The Wolf-Faced Man," drove to a location near Fresno, California, a distance of 300 miles from the studio to secure several shots for the second episode. The several scenes were all taken in one long grind, when Betty Compson and George Larkin rode a log down a dangerous flume. The company is now working at the frontier house where a majority of the scenes for this serial will be taken, this consisting of a special studio recently erected.

Work will be started within the next few days at the Diando Studio on the next Baby Marie Osborne subject for Pathe, which will be produced from an original story by Frank Beresford, and titled "The Record." William Bertram, who has just completed filming "The Soul of a Child" with this little star, will also direct her next subject.

Arthur Rosseau, secretary of the Pathe Exchanges, Inc., who is spending several weeks on the West Coast, was a guest at the Diando studios the greater part of the past week.

Fox Studio Doings

More than two hundred people, a dozen camels, fifteen burros and one hundred horses were taken far into Palm canyon by the Fox Company last week for scenes in the Theda Bara production of "Salome." A special train of six cars was needed for the big troupe, in addition to the automobiles which drove to the location 150 miles from Los Angeles. The scenes made here show the scriptural siren at the time she first beholds John the Baptist, surrounded by numerous disciples, while he was preaching of the coming of the Saviour. While at the location it was necessary for all members of the trip to sleep out of doors, and the organization had more the appearance of a traveling circus than of a motion picture company.

The William Farnum Company is shortly to go to Arizona where exterior scenes will be made for two photoplays adapted from the story by Zane Grey, "Riders of the Purple Sage," and the "Rainbow Trail." Continuity for these stories are now ready, and no time will be lost in going to the Arizona desert and making exteriors, for it will be necessary for Mr. Farnum to be back in Los Angeles by the middle of April to begin the whirlwind campaign for Liberty Bonds about that time. On this trip Mr. Farnum will speak from the back end of a special train in the principal cities in California, ending with an address from the steps of the State House at Sacramento, where he will be the personal guest of Governor Stevens. For the past several weeks Mr. Farnum has been working with his director, Frank Lloyd, in the making of a Liberty Loan appeal film, and now 120 prints of this picture are in the hands of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo for distribution to the various state committees. The expenses of this trip, as well as the making of the film has been borne by Mr. Farnum. It has not been decided which of the two Zane Grey stories will be released first, but it is understood the two will be produced, as far as exteriors are concerned, at the same time while the company is in Arizona.

Director Lynn Reynolds and the Tom Mix Company are still at work on the American-Mexican border where they have found some decided rugged spots ideal for the exterior scenes for the coming Tom Mix picture.

The cast selected to support Gladys Brockwell in her next production, which was written by Charles Kenyon, includes William Scott and L. C. Shumway in the principal roles.

Here and There

Delay in editing the first Chaplin picture for the First National Exhibitors' Association, has made necessary postponing the release date to April 14 instead of April 7. This release titled "The Dog's Life," is now completed in every respect, and either Sid Chaplin or Business Manager John J. Jasper will take the negative film and edited positive print to the New York office of the Exhibitors' Association. Mr. Chaplin left Los Angeles Monday, April 1, for the East, and his trip on the Liberty Loan Bond campaign will require six weeks, which means he will not return to Los Angeles until May 10.

The Metro West Coast producing organization, was increased this week by the arrival of the Bert Lytell Company, which in the future will work at the Hollywood Studio. The company, besides Mr. Lytell, includes Anna Q. Neilson, as leading woman; Edwin Carew, director; Finis Fox, assistant director; Robert Kurlee, cameraman, and Harry Northrup, Ernest Maupin and Edwin Smiley, actors. The Lytell Company will first make a Western picture titled "The Trail of Yesterday," which gives Mr. Lytell a new type of Western part. This company is now at work at the Metro studios, and thus the organization there is larger than at any time previously. The number of companies working at the Hollywood Studio now are four.

Harry Sherman, Director Charles Swickard and Electrician Homer Scott have returned from a week spent in Arizona where they selected exteriors of the first Sherman production starring Dustin Farnum, which is an adaptation from the Zane Grey novel, "The Light of Western Stars," now running serially in a large number of newspapers throughout the country. The entire Sherman organization, numbering about forty people, will leave within the next ten days for Arizona where the exteriors will be filmed. The principals supporting Dustin Farnum in this picture are Winifred Kingston, who will take the leading role opposite, George Fields, Virginia Ames, Bert Attling, Frank Clark, Joseph Swickard and others. Roy Clements prepared the scenario from the Zane Grey novel.

The Metro subject made by Director John Collins, under the working title of "The Night Riders," has been completed and retitled "The Heart of Kentucky." Miss Dana will next work in a story having a California atmosphere, under the direction of Frank Reicher, and Director John Collins will return to New York, leaving for the East within a few days. The California story has been titled "Nita's Wooing," and is an original photoplay by Albert Shelby Le Vino. Although this is of a Western type, it does not have any bad men characters.

APRIL 20, 1918 NEWS MORE NEWS

Fair—all week.

W. W. Hodkinson is still in town.

Ruth Clifford, star—how does that look?

Jesse L. Lasky may be expected on the Coast shortly.

Eddie and Lee, the boys, or Lyons and Moran, all mean the same.

Big Roy Stewart has a new black beaver sombrero that cost thirty-two bucks.

F. B. Warren, the rubber-healed vice-president of Goldwyn, was in town this week.

Carl Laemmle was said to be on his way West, but he has not arrived up to the time of going to press.

Bill Beaudine is the father of a Native Daughter. The stork passed Bill's way last Saturday night.

Lynn Reynolds is not like most directors. He has not followed the Griffith method of producing without a script.

Grace Darmond came out of seclusion at the Vitagraph studio the other day to do a little shopping in our midst.

To all those who wish to adopt the coiffure made popular by Glen Cavender, let it be said he wears a wig.

Earle Williams and Tommy R. Mills are becoming rather risque—the picture coming up is titled "The Girl in His House."

Monroe Salisbury has been playing Far North and savage parts so long he does not feel natural in regular clothes.

Ollie Sellers has joined the Home Guards, and, it is said, not so much for the training, but for the benefit of reducing.

Harry Gribbon has taken on weight lately because he's happy and contented now that he's back cavorting for Mack Sennett.

Edward Sloman has become so fond of Santa Barbara and the American studio that he has apparently cut acquaintances in Loss.

Harry L. Keepers has abandoned our village these many weeks and has been heard from on another Broadway—but that would be telling.

Myrtle Lind, of Keystone and Triangle fame, is said to be one of the few girls of the films who has not changed the color of her hair.

A Triangle player went out and spent ninety dollars for a new suit to wear in one scene, and then Dell Andrews, the film editor, cut out that scene.

In addition to directing, Jack Dillon carries his star's jewels about the place, thus serving as a safety deposit vault during the hours of scene making.

Bill Mong is said to be in his second childhood. He just completed playing a character part of a man sixty years old, and now he's frisking about like a young fellow in his teens.

Sessue Hayakawa has joined the personal appearance club—he bowed himself off the stage several evenings this week at Grauman's during the showing of "The Honor of His House."

Our fair city was honored this week by the arrival of the brown-eyed Susan of the films—Clara Kimball Young, herself. It was a day of boquets. Clara is going to do "The Claw" first.

Belle Bennett permitted her maid to wash a piece of lace from a costume in the kitchen sink, and the plumber tore up two blocks of drain pipe to recover the lace, because it had to be used the following day. That's what makes pictures cost.

Wally MacDonald loitered about at Chatsworth Park the other day, and the Triangle company came back to the studios and left him there. It's some thirty miles, without a railroad, and Wally is now ready to play the role of a twelve o'clock fellow in a nine o'clock town.

Bill Desmond turned the town of Downey, Cal., almost wrong side out when he took a troop of soldiers and a lot of pretty girls down there and staged a farewell party. By the time the girls got through kissing those boys good-bye, Bill vows they looked like they had been through a battle equal to Verdun.

Fatty Arbuckle has been placed in Class 5 by a Los Angeles draft board. Cause—overweight. Roscoe celebrated after the examination ordeal, and spent the evening in Los Angeles. He was so accustomed to the life of Long Beach, where they had a curfew bell at nine o'clock each evening, but stopped ringing it because it woke up so many people, and he found it absolutely necessary to diet on chili con carne to keep awake.

Welcome PARAMOUNT!

(No. 203 Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President, Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

The Paramount has been giving Bluebird Photoplays so much free advertising by producing Maeterlinck's " The Blue Bird " that it is only fair for me to return the courtesy.

• • • •

First, therefore, I congratulate the Paramount on making an exquisitely beautiful picture. Maeterlinck's " The Blue Bird," as produced by the Paramount, will live as one of the great classics of the screen as it has lived as a classic of literature. It is, I believe, the finest thing the Paramount has ever done. It should be shown in every theatre in the world, for it will add to the sum total of the world's happiness.

• • • •

Second, I congratulate the Paramount on the big vital fact that " The Blue Bird "—their finest effort and probably the most profitable one for themselves as well as for exhibitors who book it—CONTAINS NOT A SINGLE OVERPAID STAR. Thus, no vast fortunes were wasted on its production. This will enable the Paramount to book " The Blue Bird " to exhibitors at a rate which will permit the exhibitors to make a profit. It is a step in the right direction and I hope it is but the first of several steps the same way.

• • • •

Third, I congratulate the Paramount on their splendid advertising campaign in the newspapers and magazines of recent weeks. I notice that they do not advertise any of their high priced stars in this big advertising campaign, but boost their stars in moving picture trade papers only. This is splendid. It ought to work out well. I assume this is the first move in a well thought out plan gradually to cease advertising the high priced stars altogether, meanwhile keeping the stars in good humor by letting them see their names and faces in print in the trade papers every week. This last form of advertising is comparatively inexpensive and does not add enough to the overhead to make prices higher than the exhibitor can afford to pay.

• • • •

If I am correct in assuming that the Paramount has decided to rely on the merit of its pictures and gradually let the stars " die off," it will mean that the Paramount can operate at a profit. If the Paramount does not have to pay all of its profits out in high salaries and other terrific overhead, it will be a good thing for the whole business because the Paramount is a good producing concern. It has made a large number of mighty fine pictures. If it is planning a starless and high-priceless policy, it can make a far higher percentage of good pictures.

• • • •

All of this will be a good thing for the exhibitor, for it means that before long all producing companies will adopt the Bluebird and Universal plan of depending on good pictures instead of on the names of high priced stars. I have already welcomed to the Bluebird plan such producers as the Metro, Fox, Pathe, Triangle, World and others who have shown a disposition to throw off the star burden that all but crushed the industry. I have hoped for a long time that the Paramount would line itself up for the new reform, and it is now gratifying to note these first indications of a new general policy of wakefulness. The Paramount people have in a great measure helped to put the business on a high plane, artistically, and none will be better pleased than I to see them go through with what they now seem to be starting.

• • • •

It would have been a fine thing, financially, if all the producers named above had seen the merit of the Universal and Bluebird policy two years ago. I haven't the least doubt that it was the origination and adoption of the policy by the Bluebird and the Universal that has made the Universal probably the most solid financial structure in the picture business. And the best of it is that we attained this position not by taking all the exhibitors' profits but by giving them the kind of pictures they needed at prices they could well afford to pay.

• • • •

I hope Maeterlinck's " The Blue Bird " production will make a pile of money for the Paramount people, for this more than anything else will convince them they are on the right track in depending on meritorious pictures rather than on such shifting assets or liabilities as overpaid stars.

• • • •

Exhibitors who do real thinking will see in all this the dawn of a new era—the beginning of a live-and-let-live policy among producers, exchanges and exhibitors—the only ideal cooperative scheme in the whole wide world of real business.

• • • •

Book the Paramount's " The Blue Bird " picture, secure in the knowledge that you are not paying a penny for an overpaid star; because the picture is bigger than any star. The money that the Paramount saves you on this picture and the profit that it will make for itself will be a glorious lesson for everybody.

Public to See "Mickey" Soon

Western Import Company's Release Featuring Mabel Normand Nearly Ready—Prominent Men Give High Praise

"'MICKEY' surpasses everything that has been produced on the screen," said Jacob Gluckmann, of Buenos Ayres, after a recent private showing of Western Import Company's release, featuring Mabel Normand. Mr. Gluckmann is one of the foremost buyers and distributors in South America. He continued: "It contains every photo-dramatic element in its construction.

"It is well known that certain types of pictures are not popular in foreign countries, because the characteristics and tastes of people in the different foreign countries are not similar. In some of the countries the Western picture does not appeal. The sex pictures in other countries are censored. This is where 'Mickey' differs. The elements that are generally undesirable in the picture have been eliminated from this production. There is nothing of a sex nature, there is no war stuff, there is no bloodshed, there are no gruesome scenes—and yet it is the biggest picture from an appeal standpoint that has as yet been produced. It has a human touch, pathos, humor, mystery, and is sensational.

"I am now looking forward to the date of its release and hope that the Western Import Company will give me the first opportunity for the purchase of the 'Mickey' rights for distribution in South America."

J. H. Kunsky, one of the most prominent exhibitors in this country, attended the same showing of "Mickey," and made the following statement:

"It is marvelous. It is the greatest photoplay I have ever seen—and I've seen them all. 'Mickey' is the perfect photoplay. It is different, and the most notable characteristics in this production are the absence of bloodshed, battle scenes and sex problems. It is a big, clean picture that will appeal to everybody."

Conrad Milliken, vice-president of McClure's Pictures Corporation, after viewing "Mickey" said: "It is a great picture and will certainly appeal to all types of people."

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, said: "It surely is wonderful and a sure-fire hit—a masterpiece of film production. It has every conceivable element that can be put into a photoplay."

Russell Doubleday, of Doubleday-Page & Company, the prominent book publishers, said: "I am not much of a picture fan, but 'Mickey' has made me one. It is a marvelous picture with a fine, interesting story."

J. D. Williams, general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, said: "'Mickey' is a remarkable box-office picture. I have never seen anything like it before. When it is released it will be the talk of the country."

Nathan Gordon, president of the Globe Feature Film Corporation, of Boston, said: "'Mickey' is what I would call a real big picture, and every theatre in the country that desires to build up its patronage will run it."

Distribution details of "Mickey" will be given in full shortly.

Every mail is bringing inquiries to the offices of Western Import Company from exhibitors all over the world about the release of "Mickey," the Western reports.

Western Import Company are preparing elaborate and practical campaign books on "Mickey." They will consist of twenty-four pages, covering every phase of this production. It also will include a complete exploitation campaign for exhibitors throughout the entire world. Exhibitors will also be supplied with a small booklet for distribution to the public. This booklet will be practically a miniature facsimile of the large campaign book.

An extraordinary lobby display is being prepared by the Evans Studios, of Los Angeles. This display is composed of four 40 x 60 paintings, four 30 x 40 paintings, four 22 x 28 paintings, a combination frame and also a combination frame of twelve 8 x 10 and twelve 8 x 11 hand colored photographs.

International Studio Buzzes with Activity

The International Film Company's studio, where the popular black and white comedies featuring the Katzenjammer Kids and Happy Hooligan are directed, is buzzing with activity. The director engaged on the final scenes of "Vanity and Vengeance," the Katzenjammer Kids' latest vehicle, which will be released by the Educational Films Corporation of America, in conjunction with its animal feature, Ditdone capacity business. mars' "Living Book of Nature," April 15th, is busy at work.

"The advantages my little characters have over living actors are many," said the director as he evolved a church scene for the new comedy. "I use the word 'living' in place of 'human' advisedly because it is generally conceded that cartoon characters are most human. Every motion is an artistic evolution. Drawings are built upon one another very gradually, taking the action along its entire course, resulting in a most complete symphony of motion."

New Firm in Market for Short Subjects

The Arcey Film Company has been organized at Chicago for the purpose of purchasing and distributing to the representative theatres of the country motion picture subjects of short length.

"I believe the formation of our company will mark a new era in filmdom, at least in the method of presenting short subject pictures to the foremost theatres of the nation, in that it shall be our purpose to rent these productions only to first-class theatres, such as Ascher Brothers of Chicago, and like organizations," said Gordon D. Cook, general representative of the company, discussing the new firm.

"We are especially interested in Griffith-Biograph features, not only because of their tremendous box office possibilities, but for the fact that Mr. Griffith has never been equaled as a producer of short length photoplays, any more than he has been approached as a maker of spectacular dramas. Such plays as his 'Lines of White on a Sullen Sea,' 'The Blot on the 'Scutcheon,' 'Pippa Passes' and 'Ingomar' are nothing short of classics."

Good Bookings for Magnet

Magnet Film Exchange reports that bookings on the Wm. S. Hart features, "The Two-Gun Man," in "The Bargain," "The Bandit and the Preacher," and "The Hell Hound of Alaska," are surpassing all expectations, for bookings. Representative theatres in the New York territory have already booked these features, and a number have played "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," and report that they have

Educational Reports Heavy Bookings of Comics

Bookings for the new comic cartoons, "Katzenjammer Kids" and "Happy Hooligan" are pouring in from all sections of the country, according to announcement made this week by E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation.

Exchange rights for Minnesota, Wisconsin and North and South Dakota have been disposed of to the Educational Film Company, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Consolidated Film Corporation, San Francisco, has bought the California, Arizona and Nevada territory.

Oregon, Washington and Montana have been taken over by the Northwestern Consolidated Film Company, Seattle, Wash.

The Eclectic Theatre Supply Company, Philadelphia, has acquired the rights for the State of Pennsylvania.

In addition to the appearance on all of the "Katzenjammer Kids" and "Happy Hooligan" cartoons which reach 25,000,000 readers every Sunday and which bear the statement that the animated cartoons are released by Educational, the Hearst papers are publishing articles almost daily calling attention to these pictures and to the other product released by Educational, the Brice Scenics Beautiful, Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature," and the Newman travel pictures. These articles couple up the complete short reel service that is being offered by Educational and have been responsible for many new inquiries reaching the home office and the various exchanges.

"Vanity and Vengeance," the first of the "Katzenjammer" cartoons animated by the new process which is declared to make them far better than any others that have gone before, is released for the week of April 15. The following week is a "Happy Hooligan," and after that the two sets of characters will alternate.

Gaumont's Campaign Exceeds Expectations

WHEN the Gaumont Company announced that it would conduct a beauty campaign in co-operation with the leading newspapers of each state, it expected that this announcement would create a great deal of excitement among the many thousands of pretty girls who have aspirations to become screen stars.

Now it appears that this will be almost if not quite as interesting to the other sex. Not only are male theatre-goers anticipating pleasure in seeing on the screen the images of those whom competent judges pronounce the most beautiful girls in the world, but exhibitors are pleasurably anticipating crowded theatres when these pictures are shown.

While the newspapers are helping the Gaumont Company select bewitching girls of more than usual beauty to take prominent parts in spectacular photo-dramas, the motion pictures of the prettiest of the girls will be shown from time to time in the semi-weekly news reels, the Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic, so that contestants will be spared the impatience of awaiting the completion of the big feature photoplays to see themselves on the screen.

There will be participants from every locality in the United States, and their pictures, it is expected, will cause not only the girls themselves, but all of their friends, to flock to the theatres when these news reels are being run. This particular phase of the plan has appealed strongly to exhibitors, it is said, and they have been quick to foresee that theatres showing the Gaumont News and Gaumont Graphic will be very popular, and are hurrying to arrange their bookings.

Sterling Receives Encouraging Reports

Arthur F. Beck, president of the Sterling Pictures Corporation, is in receipt of a letter from Herbert R. Ebenstein, manager of sales, who is touring the country, in which he states that the independent exchangemen throughout the territory he has visited are welcoming the "Sterling System" method of placing pictures, enthusiastically. "The Hypocrites" and "The Natural Law" are the first two features placed under the "Sterling System."

"The Hypocrites" is an adaptation of Sir Henry Arthur Jones' play that ran under Charles Frohman's management at the Hudson theatre for seven months, and "The Natural Law," played at the Republic theatre for eight months under John Cort's direction.

New York Bee-Hive Exchange Sold to Milton L. Cohen—Loew's American Shows "The Orderly"—Twenty-first Comedy Started

The Bee Hive Exchange at 729 Seventh Avenue, which has handled successfully the Billy West King-Bee Comedies, has been sold to Milton L. Cohen, a newcomer in the field, it is announced.

Mr. Cohen, formerly a successful salesman, closed the deal with Nat. H. Spitzer, sales manager of the King-Bee Films Corp., that gives him all the future profits of this exchange.

Mr. Cohen's first move on taking possession was to find larger quarters. He has taken over the offices formerly occupied by the Foursquare Exchange on the eighth floor of the Godfrey Building.

"I'm in the 'film game' heart and soul now," said Mr. Cohen, "and after looking over several big propositions, the Billy West Comedies looked better to me than all the others combined, so I've taken my money and put it into the screen game, and I'm perfectly satisfied with my bargain.

"I have also bought from the Triangle Corp., the rights for northern New Jersey of the Hart and Fairbanks re-issues. I have contracted for the next twelve months on all the Billy West King-Bee Comedies for Greater New York. I am happy to report that the personnel of the Bee Hive Exchange will remain the same as it was under the King-Bee regime.

"Nat. H. Spitzer has generously agreed to devote as much of his time as he can spare from his King-Bee office for the next thirty days, until I become familiar with the Exchange condition, and can meet the Exhibitors personally."

Loew's American opened with Billy West King-Bee Comedy, "The Orderly," for a four days' run, last week. Another Loew house, the "West End," starts this week to play the King-Bee Comedies.

The twenty-first comedy featuring Billy West, produced by the King-Bee Films Corp., will be entitled "The Handy Man." This comedy will be released on May 1, the day the King-Bee Films Corp .celebrates its first year in business. The entire world rights to these comedies has been sold by King Bee's sales manager, Nat. H. Spitzer.

Successful Bookings for "Life or Honor"

Buyers who have obtained territorial rights to "Life or Honor," Ivan Film Productions' latest production, report that the feature is meeting with marked success. Eastern Feature Film Company, Boston, reports excellent bookings on this feature in the New England territory. Herman Rifkin, general manager of Eastern Feature Film, says that "Life or Honor" is completing a run covering the Poli Circuit and reports forty-three days of advanced bookings. Merit Film Corporation, New York, reports bookings in this territory on the Marcus Loew circuit are most successful.

Super Film Attractions of Syracuse, Ohio Ivan Distributors of Cleveland, V. Hoddupp of Indianapolis, M. & R. Features of San Francisco announce release date of "Life or Honor" for week of April 1st.

Ivan's Late Picture Meeting with Success

"Moral Suicide," Ivan Productions' late release, is reported to be meeting every expectation of the exhibitors and public.

A battle for the destruction or salvation of a man's soul is the theme of this picture. Two beautiful women are the antagonists, with deceit, cunning and treachery on the one hand, and a lover's devotion and unselfishness on the other, as weapons.

The camera work is said to be of the finest grade.

The cast includes John Mason, Anna Luther, Leah Baird, Alan Hale, Sidney Mason, Hazel Washburn, Claire Whitney, Jack McLean and William Lampe.

Niles Welch Plays a Real Hero's Part

A cigarette thrown carelessly to the floor by Anders Randolf, one of the principal players in "Reclaimed," the new Richard Field Carroll feature, caused a near panic in the studio of the Harry McRae Webster Prod., Inc., at 120 School street, Yonkers, New York, during a recent rehearsal. But for the quick action of Niles Welch the incident might have resulted seriously for all concerned. As it is, Mabel Julienne Scott, co-star with Mr. Welch in "Reclaimed," finds herself today minus a gown valued at $370. In justice to Mr. Randolf it must be stated however that the throwing of the cigarette was not carelessness on his part, but all a bit of the scenario.

The accident occurred during the taking of one of the big scenes in the new seven-reeler which Mr. Webster is now producing at the Yonkers studio. The company had just assembled following the noon recess, and director, players and cameramen were giving their entire attention to the work of Miss Scott, who, as Amorita in "Reclaimed," was enacting an important scene in an elaborate restaurant setting. "Throw your cigarette to the floor!" shouted Director Webster to Randolf. The actor did so instantly and in less time than it takes to record the result, Miss Scott's gown was in a blaze. Niles Welch rushed on the scene regardless of author Carroll's plot, and extinguished the flames, but not until Miss Scott's gown had been destroyed.

The Needs of the Latin-American Countries

By Katalina Adelaide Soule
(Rojas-Randall Co., Foreign Buyers)

WHEN you speak of pictures suitable for the Latin-American market, just what do you mean?

What impression are you conveying to yourself when you use the words "Latin-American"? It is a flexible term, and like the elastic clause of the Constitution it can be stretched to cover pretty nearly everything, especially in the way of misconceptions, with the result that a mining camp hidden away in the desolate heart of the nitrate desert is not unlikely to receive the same offer as a "super-play" house of Santos or Buenos Aires, a thing that couldn't happen if some Saxon-American producers would take enough time to intelligently acquaint themselves in regard to conditions existent in Latin-America.

Now don't all rise up at once to remark, "But we know all about it and our impressions are A1 and guaranteed ninety-nine per cent pure!" For while that is true of many of you, the reverse is equally true of just as many.

For instance, the other day we saw a state list that counted Cuba as a part of the Union; and, unbelievable as it may seem, we know of an exhibitor in lovely Montevideo who was refused rights to a certain production on the grounds that the picture had already been placed for all American possessions, while only this week a man waxed wrathful with us because we stubbornly refused to class Brazil among the Spanish-speaking nations. "And if it isn't," he finally capitulated, "what difference does it make anyway?" Well, only the difference of some twenty million people, all of whom, with proper inducement, might be converted into movie fans. Further—but the instances are too numerous for citation in this limited space, and those given should be enough to prove that there are still a few things for some people to learn about the lands lying to the South and Southeast of the United States. Everything is not known! Far from it! And that is the excuse we have for the forthcoming articles in regard to motion pictures in Latin-America.

It is our intention to talk of many things in many countries, but most particularly we want to call your attention to the fact that in Latin-America, as in Saxon-America, the ultimate success of a production depends upon the people who line up in front of the box office.

Regardless of the places held by the Producer and the Exhibitor, the backbone of the motion picture organism is, and always will be, the AUDIENCE. If you don't please IT you will eventually have to retire, and it stands to reason that you can't please it forever unless you know something about it. Of course, we admit that said audience is primarily the concern of the exhibitor, who is, or should be, familiar with the needs of his own particular territory; but in spite of this, it can't do the producer any harm to know enough about various localities to enable him to make at least half-way intelligent offers to the much harassed exhibitor, while such knowledge will save the producer time and letterheads and stamps, to say nothing of the conservation of international good will and the individual disposition. For certainly, with a bit of general knowledge stored in your craniums, you wouldn't try to sell to Argentina a film depicting American intervention in Patagonia, you'd know that the Argentines would object to the idea—unless, of course, you worked it up as a decided comedy, when the placing of Patagonia in the tropics would most naturally draw at least one laugh.

Nor would you, if you knew, ever attempt to sell a so-called historical production (no matter how magnificent its staging) to the country most intimately connected with the story, when that film, contrary to all evidence, showed the greatest and one of the noblest heroes of the aforementioned nation as a spiritual and physical weakling. You'd be sensible enough to see that it wouldn't take and that, no matter what you might realize on its sale, it would be mighty poor policy to sell it.

None of you need be told that the sales of today are the parents of all future business. Now it is up to you to decide whether you will make a few hundreds today through a sale that will eventually lose you thousands, or whether you will reverse the condition and by the use of a little genuine knowledge and some common sense rake in the future thousands.

No public, Latin or otherwise, likes to be perpetually misrepresented. It may forgive occasional mistakes, but it will not overlook inexcusable ignorance forever. And in this regard we'd like to call the attention of scenario writers to the fact that all Latin-Americans are not vampires, revolutionists or murderers, nor do they like to see themselves portrayed that way without variations. If you must do it, then your producers shouldn't try to get Latin-Americans to applaud. They won't do it. They're human! Remember that, Mr. Producer, the next time you are looking south, and ask yourself a few questions before you write that letter you have in mind.

Marguerite Marsh Appears for Ivan in "Conquered Hearts"

"Romance of Underworld" Shows to Packed House

"A Romance of the Underworld," the first picture of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, had its initial showing at Keeney's theatre, Brooklyn, last Tuesday evening. The event brought together some of the best known men of the film world. The house was crowded to overflowing and from time to time there were demonstrations which indicated that the audience was keenly alive to the purport of the dramatic story and to the significance of the numerous sensational episodes.

The picture is a screen adaptation from the play of the same name of the late Paul Armstrong. It stars Mr. Armstrong's widow, Catherine Calvert, who also took the principal part in the drama. She is supported by an all-star cast, including David Powell, Eugene O'Brien, Edwin Forsberg, Sybil Carmen and Cecil Chichester. All the exterior scenes were taken in Greater New York. The production was made under the direction of James Kirkwood.

W. H. Gets Out Practical Campaign Book

W. H. Productions Company have gotten up for the benefit of exhibitors a very practical campaign book covering "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska."

The contents include a description of the production, fac-similes of the posters, which are composed of two styles of one-sheets, two styles of three-sheets, two styles of six-sheets, and an attractive twenty-four-sheet; also fac-similes of the lobby displays of ten 8x10's and eleven 8x14's, two styles of slides, photographs of heralds, star half-tone and line cuts and publicity stories; suggestions for lobby display, box office display, window display and street display.

"Reclaimed" Has Strong Cast

Harry McRae Webster's First Independent Production Under Way—Mabel Scott and Niles Welch Co-Starred—Mr. Webster Directing

HARRY McRAE WEBSTER, president of the Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc., with headquarters in the Brokaw Building, announces that work is progressing rapidly on the new seven-reel feature, "Reclaimed," by Richard Field Carroll and co-starring Mabel Juliene Scott and Niles Welch. It is being filmed at Yonkers. Miss Scott and Mr. Welch are supported by Anders Randolf, Sidney Bracey, Frederick W. Peters, Warren Cooke, Mabel Wright and William Lambert.

Mr. Carroll's story is said to be one of intense interest. He explains some of the salient features by the following characteristic expressions: "We have a heroine who is not ruined and rescued from the gutter, is tempted but does not fall, arises from the depths of despair unscathed and victorious; a hero who is not constantly rescuing his heroine from various and sundry death traps and pitfalls. In fact, our picture will be peopled by simple, regular human beings."

"Reclaimed" will mark the first joint starring appearance of Miss Scott and Mr. Welch, two popular screen favorites, both in their own right occupying a firm position in the affection of the fans.

The story tells of a young and beautiful girl, born in ignorance and barbarity, reared amid neglect and want, who grows into young womanhood wild, wilful, unkept and untaught. Her mother, a benighted peasant; her father a renegade and bandit, the descendant of a haughty, proud and ruthless Spanish ancestry, who leave the child a heritage of hatred. Her natural instincts, however, develop a strain of virtue. When she finally meets "the man" her soul is awakened as though she were born again and by the gentle voice of faith and love she is reclaimed.

Mabel Julienne Scott and Catherine Tinsley Appear In "Reclaimed," to Be Released by Harry McRae Webster Productions, Inc.

Mr. Webster's cameraman is Harry Forbes, whose work in Virginia Pearson, William Farnum, Violet Mesereau and Alice Brady pictures is already known in the film industry. Mr. Webster's technical director is John D. Braddon, who handled so successfully the effects in Annette Kellermann's success, "A Daughter of the Gods," and William Farnum's "Les Miserables."

"Reclaimed" will be given a private invitation showing within a few weeks, to which will be invited state rights buyers, as well as those interested in outright purchases and world rights. This picture will be the forerunner of a number of new productions by Mr. Webster, among them a feature to be called "The Damnation of Doubt," by Mildred Considine.

"Conquered Hearts" Has Trade Showing at Strand

IVAN PRODUCTIONS, INC., latest production, "Conquered Hearts," written by Francis J. Grandon and featuring Mae Marsh, will have its premiere showing at the Strand theatre, New York, Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

In "Conquered Hearts" the Ivan people feel that they have a production that will in all respects rise above every other effort. Marguerite Marsh, sister of Mae Marsh, has the opportunity for a most varied line of artistry, and, as Director Grandon says, "she meets every requirement." The cast includes Richard Turner, Harry Myers, Robert Paton Gibbs, Dean Raymond and Emma Lowry.

One of the high lights in the production is when Miss Marsh as Honor Hale appears in one of New York's foremost theatres, the Strand, where she is presented by Harold Edel, of that theatre, to a large and enthusiastic audience who have gathered for the purpose of welcoming the personal appearance of Honor Hale, the successful motion picture star, who in her early youth has been known as Nora Carrigan. Ivan officials express their thanks for the courtesy extended by Mr. Edel, manager of the Strand, in making possible this scene.

Mr. Grandon, who directed "Conquered Hearts," is a graduate of Chicago University, was on the directorial staff in the early days of Biograph, Imp and Lubin, and has directed such stars as Madame Petrova and Edmund Breese. He has directed for Metro, Bluebird and Famous Players.

Arrow Film Announces Open Territory

Arrow Film Corporation reports successful business with its independent offerings. A good part of the domestic territory has been disposed of for its current releases.

"The Eyes of the World" is open for all territory except the eleven Western States, and Illinois, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. "Ramona" is open for all domestic territory except the eleven Western States, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and the City of St. Louis, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

"Persuasive Peggy" for all territory except New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia, Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, New England, Michigan and the eleven Western States. "Souls Redeemed" for all territory except New England, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Southern States, Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Arkansas, Greater New York and Northern New Jersey. "Weavers of Life" for all territory except New England, Indiana, Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

"Today" and "The Mad Lover" are open for Minnesota, Northern Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Michigan, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, and Mississippi.

Warning Against Unscrupulous Salesman

M. S. Rosenfield, State Right Distributors, Inc., New York, has written the NEWS the following letter which speaks for itself:

"Exchanges and theatrical men in general are hereby cautioned against the machinations of C. Harvey Burke, who recently presented himself at the office of Leon D. Netter, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, Ohio, plaintively setting forth his urgent need for work, and offering letters of recommendation testifying to his reliability. Mr. Netter graciously decided to give him a trial as salesman, and advanced him a sum of money for living expenses and railroad fare on March 25, since which time nothing has been heard from or of him.

"Any information as to the whereabouts of Mr. Burke will be appreciated both as an aid to Mr. Netter and a step towards ridding the industry of so obnoxious an element."

Leah Baird Has Successful Dramatic Record

For four years Leah Baird, who has prominent role in Ivan's "Moral Suicide," was on the stage playing leading roles in many dramatic productions before entering the silent drama. She is best remembered for her work in "The Gentlemen from Mississippi." On the screen she starred in "Lights of New York" and "The Devil's Pay Day," and appeared in many other successes with Maurice Costello, Earle Williams and King Baggott.

Elaborate Advertising for Ford's Production

FRANCIS FORD'S timely production, "Berlin via America," which, it was announced, will be distributed on state rights market, has had prepared for exploitation purposes a line of advertising which will afford the exhibitor a wonderful opportunity to profit by the patriotic appeal which this thrilling production will undoubtedly create.

The press book has been planned to intelligently inform the exhibitor in just what manner to advertise the picture after it is booked. A dozen or more "stunts" are outlined — a "teaser" campaign is planned and suggestions are made for a display which will carry a "punch." These concrete suggestions are made from the exhibitor's angle, by an exhibitor. Among other things there are a number of stories, written in newspaper style, which are meant to create interest, both from the patriotic and the human angle. Cuts have been prepared to accompany a number of these stories.

In addition, five or six suggested newspaper advertisements have been laid out. Cuts of these ads can also be procured by the exhibitor.

Unusual care has been taken in the selection of posters, so that they will carry the appeal the showman wishes to convey with a subject of this nature. The paper consists of two styles of ones, two styles of threes, a six-sheet and a 24-sheet. There will be two styles of photographs; a set of eight 8x10's, and a set of six 11x14's.

Seven Troy Theatres Book "Eagle's Eye"

Marguerite Snow in "The Eagle's Eye," Wharton Picture

Seven of the thirteen theatres running motion pictures in Troy, N. Y., have booked "The Eagle's Eye," the 20th episode serial story of the Imperial German Government's spies and plots in America by William J. Flynn, recently retired Chief of the United States Secret Service. Of the remaining six, two more may book, according to a report made to The Whartons, producers of the serial, by Foursquare Exchange. The theatres in Troy which will show "The Eagle's Eye" are: King, Gardner Hall, Monroe, Lansing, Hudson, Empire and Alpine. Contracts for each of them have already been received from the Foursquare Exchange by The Whartons.

Following a special showing of the first three episodes of "The Eagle's Eye" to city officials in Albany, the New York Foursquare Exchange has received a request from the Entertainment Committee of Fort Orange Club, one of the most exclusive organizations in the capital, for a repetition of the run in the club rooms. Arrangements will be made to have the showing at the club some time within the next two weeks.

In addition to Mayor Watt of Albany, those who attended the invitation showing which was held in the Clinton Square theatre on March 21, were Secretary Walter Hutchins, City Clerk David E. Pugh, Commissioner Frost, Chief of Police Hyatt, members of the Common Council, Albany County Red Cross chapter, draft board executives and county officials.

James George, proprietor of the Victoria theatre, at Harrisburg, Pa., has hit upon a unique method of a standing lobby display for this serial. Alterations in the theatre which will result in enlarging the lobby considerably will be completed about a week before the opening of "The Eagle's Eye" on April 10. Mr. George has ordered a large cast of an eagle, measuring six feet from tip to tip of the outspread wings. The bird will be used to advertise Chief Flynn's serial.

Mr. George has made arrangements for publicity notices before starting his display advertising and has furnished the daily papers with the stories and disclosures of the first three episodes. He emphasizes the fact in all of his publicity that the story is by Chief Flynn.

"I am absolutely convinced that the serial has drawing powers which no other picture at the present time possesses," said Mr. George; "it is the authentic history of the German spy in America. If people can be made to understand what it is then they will want to see it and you won't be able to keep them away. That is why I am devoting fifty per cent of my advertising to 'The Eagle's Eye.'"

Steger Starts Picture With Marion Davies

JULIUS STEGER began, this week, the production of his first picture as director-general of the International Film Corporation. The subject is a screen version of Katherine Haviland Taylor's novel, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses." Samuel M. Weller did the scenario. Marian Davies, who was lately seen in the title role of "Runaway Romany," will be the featured player in Mr. Steger's first creation for International. Miss Davies will be supported by George La Guere, in the leading male role; Harry Benham, who is now appearing nightly on Broadway in "The Rainbow Girl"; Dean Raymond, Edward O'Connor, Joe Kelley and Charles Jackson, the boy actor, who was seen to such a good advantage in Benjamin Chapin's Lincoln Cycle pictures. Willette Kershaw, Gertrude Vanderbilt and Madeline Klare will be seen in the principal feminine supporting roles.

Katherine Taylor's novel offers a firm foundation for a screen drama, and Mr. Steger expresses himself as fully satisfied with the many opportunities which the script offers for the human element in the drama. The action and scenes which will be revealed in the initial reels, are laid in Ireland, and the general theme of the story carries with it strong dramatic punches and nice bits of light comedy.

Mr. Steger expects to have the production ready for release on the International schedule of independent releases, some time in May. Work on the initial scenes was started Monday at the Biograph Studios where all the interiors will be taken.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

[Realizing that the volunminous press agent material filling an exhibitor's mail often fails to provide the breezy little items so badly needed for program fillers and your newspaper photoplay editors, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has created this department. It will be conducted by Miss Dorothy Tarbell, and the gossip personalities presented here will be gathered at first hand in the studios and from the players themselves. Not only the stars but the lesser known players whose good work has often gained them popularity in different localities, will be treated in human, intimate fashion in this department.

In connection with this "clip-sheet" service for programs and newspapers, this department also offers all the facilities of the Motion Picture Studio Directory to exhibitors and players in forwarding mail, locating players, furnishing information regarding pictures in which different players have appeared, and so on.]

Douglas Fairbanks has proved himself one of the most strenuous stars on the screen by quite a new means. In "Mr. Fix It" three leading ladies, Wanda Hawley, Marjorie Daw, and Katherine McDonald, were required to keep up with him.

Madge Kennedy, Star of "The Fair Pretender," a Goldwyn Picture; Her Leading Man, Tom Moore, and Her Director, Charles Miller, in the Course of Making a Scene in a Pullman Car

Nazimova's husband, Charles Bryant, who was her leading man in "Revelation," is again playing opposite her in "Fate Decides." Since his first appearance on the American stage in "Bella Donna" he has shown himself a particularly good foil for Nazimova.

Valeska Suratt has been getting away with some very effective vaudeville work since she left the Fox Film Co.

What are mumps? Ask Marguerite Clarke. She is paying the penalty of eternal childhood by having them at the present writing, and just as she was to start on a tour for the third Liberty Loan.

The big three stand as follows, according to the income tax—Douglas Fairbanks, $450,000; Mary Pickford, $250,000, and Charlie Chaplin, $100,000.

The question is, what is Taylor Holmes going to do next? He has left Essanay and has come back to New York. Will it be pictures or the stage? Everyone hopes he will not desert the many to please the few.

James Morrison had just about five minutes in which to learn how to fire a machine gun for "Over the Top." The day before, that particular gun had jammed and as a result both eyes of the British instructor were blown out. Jimmy knew this, but as he said, in relating the thrill of learning how to operate a machine gun, he "didn't think anything about it." Another little adventure he had was leaping over crossed bayonets. If he had slipped he wouldn't have had a very soft seat. "You are there," Mr. James Morrison, they all say.

If you want to earn the undying gratitude of the opera lovers of your town, bill "La Tosca." It is the most satisfying performance of that opera ever given outside of the Metropolitan. Pauline Frederick is superb and the supporting cast, each one of whom bears a French name, more than adequate.

"Young folks, old folks, everybody come," would be a fitting way to advertise Billy Parsons in "Billy's Baby." Even the conservative audience at the Strand first smiled, then chuckled and finally roared with laughter at the "Baby Show." Smiling Billy has made a good start in his first two comedies. They are both so human it is easy to believe they were built around the domestic happenings in Mr. Parsons own home and in the homes of his friends. We are looking forward to more of the same variety.

The newest Fox picture now being filmed in the Biograph Studio is quite a family affair. Miriam Cooper is the star, her husband, Raoul Walsh, the director, and her brother, Gordon Cooper, the assistant director.

In order to give just the right atmosphere to some of the big scenes which take place in the House of Representatives, R. Walsh and several members of his staff went to Washington for several weeks. They spent all their time visiting the House and trying to catch glimpses of the President and other Government officials. So persistent were they that they were nearly arrested as spys.

That their efforts were successful is proved by the big scenes in which the House is duplicated before the camera. Every detail is perfect with the exception of the big clock which had to be taken away as the camera man said the rays from it interfered with his work.

Ralph Faulkner takes the part of President Wilson. He is almost his double and has been very successful in impersonating the President in vaudeville this winter. His performance is splendid, as his dignified bearing, his manner of speaking, his gestures are as much like Mr. Wilson's as his looks. He is now about to start a tour of the Liberty theatres.

Captain Horst van der Golst, whose writings on the war are well known, has been assisting in supervising this newest Fox picture.

Madge Kennedy has just returned from Detroit where she made a speech for the Liberty Loan.

Arthur Guy Empey's real training in dramatic art was derived in France behind the lines when his division was at "rest billets." There he wrote, produced and starred in "The Diamond Palace Saloon," whose run was prematurely ended by the Germans. Despite this extensive(?) experience the skill with which Empey plays his part in "Over the Top" is truly amazing.

Anders Randolf as Rudolph Von Zorn in "The Splendid Sinner" adds still another object lesson to the screen. His portrayal of "the Teuton at his worst" is so sincere and convincing that we are warned again of what we might expect. His next appearance will be in "Reclaimed," the Harry McRae Webster production.

Mae Marsh is from head to toe a typical belle of 1850 in a few scenes of "When Carey Came to Town." A hand bag ornamented with sixty tiny ruffles, designed by Miss Marsh herself, is so fascinating that it may be put on the market under the star's own name.

All eyes are now focussed on the latest Barrymore to take up a role in the film world, first because she is a Barrymore and secondly because she has been chosen by Metro to take the part of Lily Bart in "The House of Mirth," a choice they have delayed for weeks owing to their inability to find just the right type. This latest Barrymore is Katherine Harris, the wife of Jack Barrymore.

No matter where Theda Bara is, the second she gets a new idea about her picture she rings up her continuity writer. Her ideas come in such rapid succession, according to reports from the Fox scenario department, that the aforementioned continuity writer's day is just one telephone call after another.

Now that we are talking about Fox people we might relate the tale of the young thing who was visiting Chicago for the first time. Noticing the many signs about the town advertising house wreckers, she asked a kind friend what they were. Friend responded, why the Fox Film Co. with Theda Bara, Virginia Pearson, etc.

Marion Davies begins her second picture this week, "Cecilia of the Pink Roses," under the direction of Julius Steger at the Biograph studios. She has successfully tried her hand at a number of things, dancing in the Ziegfeld Follies, writing the scenario for "Runaway Romany," and starring before the camera.

"Mother" Mary Maurice, who did such a superb bit of acting in "Over the Top," has been very ill for the last week, but is now on the road to recovery.

Wouldn't you know that Mabel Normand would do her bit just a little differently than anyone else? Part of it is sending chocolate layer cakes each week to soldiers she met at Plattsburg when she was filming "Joan of Plattsburg."

Edward Earle, Vitagraph player, expects to be called at any time for service in the Royal Flying Corps. Eddie is English and says he will be disappointed if he isn't given a chance to strike the Germans from the air.

Paul Scardon, who is directing Harry Morey in his Vitagraph features, spends all his spare time when away from the studio at the ringside—that is—when there is a good bout on. He is a lover of the fistic art and is disappointed only when one of the gladiators fails to register a "knockout."

Will S. Davis, who already has a quartette of Metro pictures to his credit, will direct Bert Lytell in his second Metro All-Star Series picture. Director Davis is now completing the production of a screen version of "With Neatness and Dispatch," Kenneth L. Roberts' Saturday Evening Post story, starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Immediately after cutting this picture, Davis will leave for the Western studio at Hollywood, California, where Lytell is completing his first Metro picture, "The Trail to Yesterday," by Charles Alden Seltzer, under the direction of Edwin Carewe.

Gladys Brockwell has begun work at the William Fox studios in California on a new picture, as yet unnamed, which is said to give her a role quite different from any she has ever played before.

Most of Miss Brockwell's parts have been highly adventurous and she has been widely advertised as one of the Fox string of "vamps." But in this new play she takes the part of a wholesome New England girl, imbued with the stern spirit of Puritanism.

Edward J. Le Saint is directing the new production.

" The Danger Game "
(Goldwyn—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

ROY SOMERVILLE supplied a steady flow of comedy for Madge Kennedy in " The Danger Game," and despite the fact that Goldwyn insists on emphasizing the melodramatic note suggested in the title as the principal one, its five reels present a farce of general excellence. Mr. Somerville's knowldge of the screen is apparent throughout every scene. The plot complications and the business were written to be photographed by the motion picture camera, and as a consequence they quite far surpass even the best farcical situations of the stage that are adapted for pictures. This fact can be readily proven by glancing back to the last Madge Kennedy picture, " Our Little Wife." Here was a stage farce that in its native sphere seemed to possess unbounded possibilities but which in the more trying atmosphere of the studio failed to show to such good advantage. It was stocked with a certain amount of humor in its celluloid form, but " The Danger Game " is chock full of it. The action is complemented by a set of subtitles that fairly brim with humorous and appropriate lines.

As for Miss Kennedy her ability as a comedienne was definitely established in her first three pictures. However, her abilities have never been given such wide play as in " The Danger Game." Frightened and stunned surprise are her chief expressions. She uses them here considerably, but never tires with them. Her skill as an actress and her sincerity and sense of farce values prevent any danger of over-acting. Tom Moore cleverly essays the role of Jimmy, Miss Kennedy's opposite. He seems to the writer to be the most natural and pleasing actor on the screen.

Harry Pollard's long experience with the type of story presented in " The Danger Game " admirably fitted him to direct it. A production department always liberal with effects and lavish on setting, and a cameraman, William Fildew, who secured some unusual shots, have assisted him in no small measure. Paul Doucet, Ned Burton, Mabel Ballin and Kate Blancke are cast in appropriate roles. All in all " The Danger Game " is exactly what a picture farce should be. Mr. Somerville's skilful foundation was a solid base on which to build the pictorial structure.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Clytie Rogers (Madge Kennedy) is terribly peeved when Gilpin, a critic, unmercifuly " roasts ". her novel, remarking that the heroine, who turns a lady-Raffles, is a grossly impossible figure. She decides to get married and selects LeRoy Hunter (Paul Doucet), a type of lounge lizard who thrills her with his poetic speeches and conventionally put unconventionality. But at the marriage license bureau she gets cold feet and retreats. A street window, wide open, suggests that she prove to Gilpin that her novel heroine was not impossible. She enters by the window and is caught by the owner of the house. The police believe her a certain " Powder Nose Annie " who blinds her would-be captors by throwing powder in their faces. She spends the night in jail and next morning is seen by Jimmy (Tom Moore), a newspaper man who recognizes her. He tells the police and they agree to play the trick he suggests. Feigning asleep they permit her to escape and Jimmy escorts her out, assuming the role of a tough burglar, and seemingly taking it for granted that Clytie is the clever Powder Nose Annie. He takes her to the toughest places in the city, incidentally disillusions her as to LeRoy's artistic character, until finally she has had enough and returns to her parents (Ned Burton and Kate Blancke). Later, Jimmy presents himself. and what is Clytie's surprise to discover that he is in reality the despicable Gilpin. However she has to admit that she loves him, particularly when he asks her to marry him.

" The House of Silence "
(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE HOUSE OF SILENCE" is a mighty strong drama which starts off as a mystery. Gradually the mystery is solved, the characters assume definite places. The heroine who has murdered in defense of her honor is placed in the clutches of a disreputable woman who holds one bit of evidence against her. It is the hero's task to secure this evidence and free the girl from the woman's power and this leads him through any number of hazards from which he finally emerges triumphant. The suspense is exceptionally well built up throughout the story. The mystery is well introduced and the development of the plot from the time it is cleared to the end is exceptional.

The picture is an adaptation from a novel by Elwyn Barron. There may be houses where its characters will offend, this despite its unusual strength. A number of scenes—in fact a great many—are laid in a house of ill fame. While they are well produced with as little of the suggestive as possible save where it is absolutely necessary, the fact remains that there are some persons who don't care to peek behind the doors of such a place and witness certain details of licentiousness. It is dramatic in the extreme and it will grip like a vise as a story—but its setting is against it for family consumpton.

Wallace Reid plays the role of the hero and plays it successfully, Anna Little is the girl, Winter Hall her father and Adele Farrington the mistress of the House of Silence. All take their parts well. The adaptation was made by Margaret Turnbull, Donald Crisp directed and the photographic work is that of Henry Kotani. There are some fine night lighting which add consderably to the power of the drama.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Marcel Levignet (Wallace Reid), a rich clubman, with a hobby for criminology, is walking along the street when a girl, dishevelled and wild-eyed runs against him. She tells him that a man needs medical attention in the house nearby. Marcel looks and recognizes it as the House of Silence. He gets his friend Dr. Rogers (Winter Hall) and enters. There they find a prominent lawyer dead on a bed. The maid feigns ignorance of the whole affair. Dr. Rogers recognizes a hat pin with which the wound was inflicted and conceals it. He then fills the wound with wax, washes away the blood and takes the dead man to his wife, reporting that he died of heart disease. Marcel is not satisfied with Dr. Rogers' scheme, and finding the hat pin believes there is something more to know. The doctor on his return to his home learns the truth from his daughter, Toinette (Anna Little). She had been lured into the house by a trick, attacked by the lawyer and was obliged to kill him in defense of her honor. Later Marcel also learns of this. The girl, confident, tells him her story and adds that the keeper of the house, Mrs. Clifton (Adele Farrington), still possesses her pocketbook, dropped in the house. Marcel resolves to get it and enters the house one night, pretending to come as a guest. Mrs. Clifton does her best to imprison him, but he is too quick for her. He procures the pocketbook and then calls the police. With this evidence removed Toinette is freed from any possibility of blackmail.

" His Majesty, Bunker Bean "
(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

HARRY LEON WILSON'S hero who first was given life in the pages of the Saturday Evening Post, and who later trod the stage, that popular young man, Bunker Bean, is now brought into being by Jack Pickford in this comedy. The story of the young man who believed himself a reincarnation of Napoleon and an Egyptian king, and who acted accordingly, is one of the cleverest produced by modern American fiction and it finds a place in pictures at a correspondingly high level. Mr. Pickford's characterization of the youthful hero is as fine a piece of work as he has ever done. It is brim full of enthusiasm and youthful confidence. The cast which surrounds him is excellent. Louise Huff makes an adorable Flapper, Jack McDonald is thoroughly humorous as the eccentric millionaire and Edythe Chapman as the cigarette smoking grand mama is a delight.

There were genuine laughs in the Paramount projecting room when " Bunker Bean " was shown the reviewers—an unusual result for even a good comedy to achieve, incidentally. When Bunker Bean visits the faking fortune tellers and learns from them that he is a reincarnation of Napoleon, when he suddenly discovers that old Nap's love affairs could hardly stand any extensive airing and decides to go further back yet, when he sits through a perfectly good baseball afternoon taking dictation from his employer—these and many other moments are of high comedy value. The moral pointed by the story that " as a man thinketh, so is he," gives it that touch of reality and sincerity of purpose that is so often lacking in picture comedies. One can sit and laugh heartily at "Bunker Bean," and when it's over will feel improved and the better for it—not like a fool who has been laughing aimlessly.

Julia Crawford Ivers prepared the scenario and save for the looseness of the last reel has done creditable work. She has preserved the best material in the Wilson book, presented it with all its original taste and knit the story compactly. The latter reel, however, might be left out. The story stops at the end of the fourth—begins again in the fifth. However, it is all so good that this error, though it might assume alarming proportions in a picture of minor merit, is not to be seriously considered with respect to "Bunker Bean." William D. Taylor directed. Everything seems in good taste as does all his work. Homer Scott photographed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Bunker Bean (Jack Pickford), insignificant stenographer in the office of Jim Breede (Jack McDonald), eccentric millionaire, decides that he has been born before in the past, and consulting a fake fortune teller, learns that his former self was Napoleon. This knowledge gives him a new grip on life and he gains significance. He meets Breede's daughter, the Flapper (Louise Huff) and likes her. However he is disturbed when he reads of Napoleon and discovers that he has had naughty love affairs. The Flapper wouldn't like it at all. He consults again and learns that in a former form he was Ram-Tah, King of Egypt. The fortune teller (Gustaf Seyffertitz) sells him the mummy of himself and Bean's joy is unconfined. All the while he progresses in business and in love. The time comes for his wedding, and then his dog spoils it all by destroying the mummy and proving that it was made in America. So Bean loses all his confidence, and even after his marriage goes back to his former insignificance until he discovers that when he thought himself a king and he acted as one. And after that it's easy, for he understands a little about psychology.

"Mr. Fix-It"

(Artcraft—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS is "Mr. Fix-It" and an excellent fixer he is. His is the duty to revivify a decadent American family the members of which set great stock in name and form and who have so far pursued these false ideals that they have lost track of the fact that they are human beings. And Mr. Fix-It turns the trick. The three maiden ladies who head the family believe him their nephew and welcome him to their home for this reason alone. But shortly he begins to assert his authority. He begins by inviting half a dozen orphaned children and their big sister to make themselves at home in the stately Fifth avenue mansion. He patches up the love affair of his supposed sister and makes the girl he is supposed to marry very happy by refusing her and bringing the man she really loves around. Then he has his own affair with the big sister of the six youngsters and it ends happily.

"Mr. Fix-It" was suggested by Ernest Butterworth, whipped into shape and directed by Allen Dwan. It is episodic in form and with any other man than Fairbanks playing the lead would pall long before the five reels had run their length. But there is another story to tell with Fairbanks. Never before, to our recollection, has he personally shone to such brilliant advantage. The incidental humor he supplies in his every act is sufficient in itself to keep a house roaring from first to last. All big stunt stuff is absent. It is Fairbanks the strong, healthy athlete and the comedian who laughs everything full in the face who appears throughout the picture. His personality, his pep, and, in this role, his ready grasp of human nature, make "Mr. Fix-It" a truly great comedy.

Mr. Dwan is probably the ideal director for the star. The tempo of the action, the arrangement of the scenes, the evident spontaneity of every bit of business are always mindful of his genius as a director of the Fairbanks type of picture. In Wanda Hawley, Marjorie Daw, Catherine MacDonald and Margaret Landis, Fairbanks has four talented and pretty leading ladies. Miss Hawley's part is the biggest. Ida Waterman, Alice Smith and Mrs. H. R. Hancock are the maiden aunts. Frank Campeau is Uncle "Hen," "always laying around the house," and Fred Goodwin in his usual drunk part and Leslie Stuart complete the cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

In England at Oxford, Reginald Burroughs (Leslie Stuart) learns that he is needed to take charge of his fortune in America. He shrinks from going home to his family of dreadfully staid aunts when he thinks of his fiancee (Marjorie Daw), and so, as he has not seen his relatives for fifteen years, he accepts the offer of his roommate (Douglas Fairbanks) to go in his stead. The pseudo Reginald enters upon the lark with great gusto and soon afterwards is established as the head of the house. He learns that he is supposed to marry Olive Van Tassell (Margaret Landis) and that Reginald's sister, Georgiana (Catherine MacDonald) is scheduled to become the wife of Gideon Van Tassell (Fred Goodwin). Each of the girls love another man, and Mr. Fix-It thereupon determines to fix it. But this plan is left to work out itself as shortly afterwards he runs over a girl's doll while out motoring and in this way becomes acquainted with her big sister, Mary (Wanda Hawley), and her many little brothers and sisters. Mr. Fix-It adopts them all and watches the gradual change they bring over the impossible aunts. The love affairs he manages to straighten out. Mary hears one of the aunts referring to his marriage with Olive and broken-hearted leaves a note saying she has gone. Mr. Fix-It and the other men dash for Mary's old home to search for her. They manage to clean up several dives, crook hangouts and the like, but are forced to return unsuccessful. Then Mary appears from her room. She was waiting until things quieted down before leaving. Of course, she doesn't leave.

"Twenty-One"

(Pathe Play—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE comedy offered by the dual role of men of contrasting natures is presented in "Twenty-one," an adaptation from one of George Randolph Chester's stories in which Bryant Washburn makes his debut in Pathe pictures. Jimmy Mufferton and "Battling" Dave Carey are the men who discover they bear such a close resemblance to one another, and when the change of identities takes place there is a considerable amount of humorous results. Jimmy is a mollycoddle millionaire, Dave an aspirant for Jim Corbett's vacant place in the boxing world. The change of places results in Jimmy's favor. He becomes quite the man and wins a big fight. The battler, however, is completely villainized by wealth, and here might we have had the melodrama if Mr. Chester had been writing for the screen. As it is "Twenty-one" is played in a comedy vein throughout, and there is little or no sustaining thread of action that makes one sit tight and follow every bit with complete interest.

Also the comedy resulting from two men changing identities must of a necessity be rather obvious. Particularly as with the present case, when the characters are so firmly planted at the outset. One has a suspicion that Dave is going to hit Jimmy's fat butler square in the stomach and receive a look of indignant surprice—and one is not disappointed, for such he does. And when one sees the battler leer at his little sister and say unpleasant things to his decrepit old grandmother, one knows full well that Jimmy is going to treat them like queen and princess. But with all its obviousness "Twenty-one" is amusing. Mr. Washburn's sharply defined performances and the contrasts offered supply no small measure of pleasant entertainment.

Gertrude Selby appears in a small supporting role while the remaining members of the cast are not named. William Worthington directed for the Anderson-Brunton company. The double exposure work is good and the locations and settings are appropriate.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Jimmy Mufferton (Bryant Washburn), mollycoddle, millionaire, breaks lose when his maiden aunt leaves him alone. That is in so far as to follow a pretty girl until she hesitates in front of a policeman. Then he runs in the other direction. He stops when he comes to a fence on the other side of which "Battling" Dave Charlton (Bryant Washburn) is getting in trim for a fight. The idea occurs to Jimmy to change places with his double and with a little money he puts the scheme through. All goes lightly and happily until Dave becomes so enamoured of his new position, good clothes and easy life that he decides to marry Jimmy's girl (Gertrude Selby) and remain in state. But his own girl interferes and so does Jimmy. Jimmy has been forced to fight Dave's battle in the ring and has won it. With new-born confidence in himself he arrives at his own home to soundly thrash the intruder and claim the young lady for himself.

THIS is a strenuous burlesque of crook characters of the underworld and features Dot Farley, an eccentric comedienne. The two reels contain many ridiculously funny gags. The head crook keeps a package of money lying on a table toward which he leads all disagreeable personages such as policemen. When greedy fingers seize on the package they innocently spring a trap door beneath and the intruder is projected into a tank of water. The first time this is pulled it is uproarious, for the unfortunate cop discovers a dozen of his companions waiting below to welcome him. The action throughout is of a similar type and is surrounded by subtitles that reach the height of good-natured foolishness. When Hedda Holliday (Miss Farley) is released from jail the warden addresses her something like this: "I'm sorry we kept you here seven years instead of seven weeks. The clerk made a slight error. However, you may consider yourself lucky as two prisoners have died because of his little slips." David Kirkland directed under Henry Lehrman's supervision.

" Humdrum Brown "

(Paralta-Hodkinson—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Samuel D. Palmer

THE role of " Humdrum " Brown is not adapted to Henry B. Walthall's distinctive style of acting. The author obviously designed the character of " Humdrum " as an essentially sympathetic one, yet Mr. Walthall's interpretation falls short, at times far short, of arousing sympathy. In brief, " Humdrum " Brown is not Walthall, for the simple reason that Walthall is not, and never can be, a " Humdrum " Brown. Or vice versa, as you will.

The action in " Humdrum Brown " is slow in developing, the first three reels beckoning the spectator entirely to the embrace of Morpheus. But the subsequent climax, embodying a thrilling fight, is upon one almost before he suspects its approach. This, together with numerous flashes of the real Walthall, saves the piece and will make it more than acceptable to the average picture fan, even if not satisfying to the Walthall fan.

Mary Charleson, as the long-waiting sweetheart of " Humdrum," is as sweetly appealing as ever. But why do directors insist upon turning her face to the full glare of the Cooper Hewitts when her eyes cannot stand it? Fine characterizations are presented by J. J. Dowling as Judge Jonathan Nerwalk, Howard Crampton as a dishonest bank president—again—and Anna Mae Walthall as " Humdrum's " sister.

H. B. and M. H. Daniel wrote the story and Rex Ingram directed from R. B. Kidd's scenario.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Hester Brown (Henry B. Walthall), known to all in the sleepy town of Norwalk as " Humdrum," holds a job in the local bank as well as a secure place in the heart of Alicia Boothe (Mary Charleson), the village librarian. But their winding road to the married state ever lengthens as the burden of supporting poor relatives is heaped upon " Humdrum's " shoulders. At the instigation of Winfield Tanner (Howard Crampton), president of the bank, " Humdrum's " brother-in-law, robs the bank, which fails, throwing " Humdrum " out of a job. Suspecting Tanner, the former employe follows his trail to San Francisco, where Tanner is operating as a stock swindler. Having got the goods on him he arrests him, and his woman accomplice on a steamer, but only after a desperate fight in Tanner's stateroom. He returns to Norwalk, where he is made president of the reorganized bank, and marries Alicia.

THIS is, perhaps, Harold Lloyd's funniest single reel comedy. As usual he is the penniless young man in love with pretty Bebe Daniels. He has formidable rivals, two Counts, who are sponsored by Bebe's mama but not by Bebe. The majority of the action takes place in a cabaret where all the principals congregate. It has a laugh in practically every scene and there is a plentiful supply of good business. The producers of the Rolin comedies have a new trick to spring with each reel. That is at least one new trick—here there are several, but probably the funniest is the picture of Lloyd riding on the running board of the taxi which the rivals are paying for. There he gracefully reclines, strikes a match for his cigarette on the pavement and picks up a paper to read as the cab speeds on to its destination. What inspired imagination evolves tricks like this adding considerably thereby to the gayety of nations.

(Fox—Five Reels)

S. A. FRANKLIN, who prepared the scenario from Bennett Cohen's story, " The Bride of Fear," and who also directed has shown just what effect skilful treatment has on the most used of all plots. The central figure of Mr. Cohen's story is Ann Carter, the woman who has something in her past she doesn't care to have the man she loves know. That something is a husband whom she married through force of circumstances. The possibility of his return forms an ever dreaded shadow and then the report comes out that he is killed in an attempted escape from jail. But he is very much alive and eventually comes to blackmail Ann. She kills him—on the face of it—solely in defense of the other man and then happiness is hers. This plot may be regarded purely and simply as straight conventionality but Mr. Franklin's treatment of it gives it a new lease on the emotions of the spectator. It is developed with a fine eye to its possibilities. There are many unusual touches, the scenes and closeups are arranged effectively, and the climax comes with a power that has all the gathered momentum of the preceding action to make it really forceful. It is Mr. Franklin's picture—a striking example of the manner in which real dramatic sense can make a success of a story of the ages.

Jewel Carmen makes a delicately appealing figure of Ann Carter. Charles Gorman typifies the crook-villain most successfully and L. C. Shumway is a natural hero. Charles Bennett in a character role completes the quartette of principals. The photographic work is excellent and the mountings are always realistic.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Ann Carter (Jewel Carmen) comes to the end of her rope in the city, and deciding to end it all, turns on the gas. She is rescued by Masters (Charles Gorman), a gentleman of uncertain reputation who has the adjoining room. Later they are married, Ann accepting his proposal more through fear of being alone than because she loves him. On their wedding eve he is arrested for burglary and sent to jail. In time Ann secures employment as resident secretary to Martin Sterling (Charles Bennett). She meets his son Donald (L. C. Shumway), and it is through her that he breaks away from the riotous life he has been leading. He proposes and she dare not answer him with the truth. Soon afterwards, however, she hears that Masters has been killed in an attempted escape from prison. But her happiness is short-lived, for one night he appears in her room, having traced her to the Sterling mansion. Donald hears the noise and enters and a fight ensues. When Ann sees Donald getting the worst of it she seizes Masters' gun, fires and kills him. The verdict is justifiable homicide and the shadow in Ann's life is removed.

WILLARD MACK, who contributes with some regularity to the World Film scenario department, is author of " The Witch Woman." Some of his past work has shown carelessness probably due to the fact that the name Mack has weight and Willard's realization of this. However, one can always spot at least one element in his stories that furnishes the germ of popular appeal. His acquaintance with the stage and his knowledge of theatric values make themselves felt even through a hastily written vehicle. In the case of " The Witch Woman," however, there is in evidence throughout a certain polish, a smoothness that makes for better picture melodrama. There is less of that conventionality and obviousness that has marred a number of his previous pictures.

" The Witch Woman " features Ethel Clayton, who derives her main support from Frank Mayo in a dual role. Mr. Mayo is the good and the bad brother. Miss Clayton runs afoul of the latter and as a consequence is led to believe the former very bad and without honor, while actually he is upright and honestly in love with her. From this situation result a number of strong complications which are eventually simplified by the death of the bad brother and the heroine's realization that she mixed the identities of the twins. Miss Clayton plays with good effect and scores in a heavy emotional scene when her character goes mad. Mr. Mayo is as sufficiently heroic and villainous as the scene demands and the support is adequate from first to last.

Travers Vale directed. The locations include a number of pretty pastoral and village scenes of France.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Louis La Farge (Frank Mayo), an artist, after betraying the confidence of Marie Beaupre (Ethel Clayton) deserts her. She is turned from her father's home and, in her haunt in the mountains, goes mad with grief. On a hunting trip Delaunay (Jack Drumier), a rich Parisian, finds her and places her in charge of Dr. Cochefort (John Ardizoni), who eventually cures her. She meets Maurice La Farge (Frank Mayo), Louis' twin brother, a promising lawyer, and believes him the artist, despite the fact that he fails to recognize her. Andrea Montignac (Louise Vale), mistress of Louis, see Maurice in Marie's company and is mistaken as to his identity also. She visits Marie and pleads with her to give him up to her. Marie evolves a plan to force Louis to marry Andrea at a masque ball. Louis, however, laughs at her threats and seizes her in his arms. Andrea, in a rage, shoots and kills him. Only when Maurice enters do the women realize the truth. Andrea, in the hands of the police, takes poison. Maurice is ready in his forgiveness of Marie and asks her to become his wife.

THIS latest Strand release, featuring Billie Rhodes, is replete with amusing complications of the side-splitting variety, and fully up to the Strand standard, which has been so consistently maintained. The plot is due to the fact that Mary is wedded to her art, but Art Gordon wants her to marry him. Being rejected, he leaves the city. Mary's parents decided that the artistic life is not the life for Mary, and brother William arrives to take her home. Mary tells her brother she is married, and William mistakes Ernie, a married friend of Mary's, for her husand, and his wife for her maid. The friends decide to carry out the deception to relieve Mary's embarrassment. Ernie's wife becomes jealous and complications ensue. William decides to stay over night to convince himself that sis is really married. Art Gordon (Cullen Landis) returns to the city and calls up William. Mary tells him to bring a minister instanter. While the marriage is being performed, William wakes up, grabs a shot-gun and holds up the party. Mary is forced to explain and presents her real husband, Art Gordon.

"For Art's Sake" is scheduled for release April 9, and will doubtless prove a welcome filler for any house.

"The Trap"

(World Film—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE TRAP" is another World Film production featuring Alice Brady. It is an average subject centering about a rather mechanical and forced situation and yet Miss Brady's performance gives it an element of appeal. It is hardly likely that any girl of average intelligence should come to the city to become acquainted with an artist in the intimate manner that Doris Shaw does and still not realize the true purpose of his various attentions. She lives in a rich apartment at his expense, wears rich clothes bought with his money and yet is unaware of the fact that he is not quite the thorough gentleman. She is relieved from this awkward state of affairs by a big hearted Westerner who learns of the whole situation and takes her back home as his wife.

"The Trap" possesses no big dramatic moments save for the crisis in the affairs of Doris and the artist. It moves along interestingly for the most part and will probably create no great amount of comment one way or another. Miss Brady receives support of good calibre from Craufurd Kent as the artist and Curtis Cooksey as the Westerner. Others are Frank Mayo and Robert Cummings. The story is by Robert F. Hill. George Archainbaud directed and Philip Hatkin photographed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Doris Shaw (Alice Brady), daughter of a fanatically religious leader (Robert Cummings) of a fisher village, is driven from her home owing to idle gossip about herself and Kendall (Craufurd Kent), a visiting artist. In the city she finally gains employment as a waitress, where Kendall again meets her and persuades her to pose for him. She gives up her work in the restaurant and lives on his bounty, failing to realize his motive for showering gifts upon her. Jack Masterson (Curtis Cooksey), a Westerner, sees her picture in an advertisement, and decides to meet her. He visits New York, soon locating her, and decides that she will become Mrs. Masterson. Doris grows to love this man, and accepts his proposal. Kendall schemes to disillusion Masterson, and on the night before their wedding prepares a party in the studio to which Masterson is not invited. Early in the morning Kendall calls him on the 'phone, saying that Doris is sick. He hastens to the studio, there to discover his fiancee innocently enjoying herself with Kendall's guests. He denounces her. Doris realizes the trick that Kendall has played, and at last comes to a realization of his motive in providing for her existence. She tells him what she thinks of him and Masterton overhears. He realizes the whole truth of the situations, and follows Doris, who has boarded a train out of the city.

" The Honor of His House "

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE INDEFINABLE SOMETHING" which the Paramount press sheet remarks that Sessue Hayakawa possesses is not so indefinable after all. He is a capable actor. That is the something. We don't know of another actor on the screen who can hold a dramatic scene as well as Hayakawa. He expresses the intensest of emotions with repressed skill. When he moves his face it is with significance. Obvious emoting in the face of the lens is not his style. There is a subtlety, a depth to each of his performances that makes his work stand out. Marion Fairfax, who prepared "The Honor of His House" for Hayakawa, and his supporting cast allotted him a role in which his abilities, at least, show to their very best. The fact that it is hardly the ideal version of the eternal triangle matters little when the dominating influence of his performance is considered. The reviewer for one entertains the belief that any audience, high or low, prefers a sharply defined hero and a contrasting heavy. This Miss Fairfax has not given us. There is also a certain taint of artificiality about her story when analyzed. However, Miss Fairfax as a continuity writer has quite surpassed her work as an author in this instance. It is perfectly arranged and has a series of scenes of wonderful strength when Count Ito discovers after he has poisoned his wife that she is honorable. Here Hayakawa does the best work of the picture. His realization of the wrong he has done, his abject horror at the thought of it is communicated to the spectator with a real grip.

William C. De Mille has endowed the picture with a fine production. Special mention may be made of the excellent manner in which he has handled the under-sea scene in which the ocean vessel strikes the mine. The desert island scenes ar well done and those in modern settings qualify as perfect. The camera work of Charles Rocher is always adequate. Florence Vidor always appeals, and as the young wife of Count Ito plays effectively. Her delicate beauty and refreshing appearance would be hard to duplicate. Jack Holt gives a fine performance as the third angle while Maym Kelso, Tom Kurahara and Forest Seabury complete the cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Shipwrecked on a desert island are Count Ito Onato (Sessue Hayakawa), a Japanese doctor, Lora (Florence Vidor), a half-caste dancer who, however, has all the outward appearance of possessing pure white blood, and Dr. Robert Farlow (Jack Holt), a noted physician, who is prevented from attaining the top notch of fame because of his drinking. Both the men love Lora, and she is undecided as to which to choose. The clean living of the Count eventually brings a decision in his favor, and after they have been rescued and taken back to civilization she marries him. Robert still loves Lora, and realizes that her love for him is great. To please her he makes an attempt to mend his ways and succeeds. After a while he begs Lora to leave her husband with him. She ponders, and, seeing the grief of the Count over her indifference toward him, decides that it would hurt him too deeply. But Count Ito has seen Robert's compromising letter, and, believing Lora unfaithful, poisons her. Soon after from Robert's own lips he learns that Lora is true to him. The only antidote for the poison is new blood. This Robert volunteers to give at the risk of his life, but Count Ito realizes that his excesses have rendered it impure. He decides to undergo the operation himself, assuring Robert that he will live through it. Robert takes charge of the transfusion, and only when in the midst of it does he learn from the Count that the results will be fatal to him. Time passes—years roll by, and Lora is seen with Robert as her husband. Her little son, whose father was Count Ito, glories in the fact that he has royal blood in his veins.

" Heart of the Sunset "

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"HEART OF THE SUNSET" was written by Rex Beach at the time of the Mexican border trouble. In its pictured form it presents a melodrama of a rather lurid and rough type, hardly possessing the coherence and polish one justly expects when he sees the author's name on the leader. The adaptor, Frederic Chapin, has followed the story rather loosely. His work is not the concise, compact scenario it should have been to present the melodrama at its best. There is interpolated, for instance, a long stretch of comedy concerning minor characters which though it be effective in places has not the important bearing on the plot it should have considering its length. This and some other more or less laborious passages which in their way deviate from the principal line of action detract from the interest.

But "Heart of the Sunset's" chief failings are its manner of presentation and the overdrawn performances. The modern melodrama of the screen, to be properly presented, must be subdued to a certain extent, but the producers have chosen to turn "Heart of the Sunset" into a counterpart of the melodrama of a few years back. The players with perhaps the exception of Anna Nilsson are allowed to run rampant as it were and their inability to sense the comparative values of certain situations is often apparent.

Mr. Beach's story was written in serial form and this probably is the reason for its lack of underlying motive. It runs along as in a serial with considerable changes in its characters and convenient and time-worn complications serve to bring it to a happy conclusion. On the printed page these anachronisms of plot might easily be covered up and passed off as convincing, but before the searching eye of the camera their quality is bared and laid open displaying weak pictorial elements.

"Heart of the Sunset" was produced in Texas by Frank Powell. Its locations are therefore most realistic. Long desert wastes, shots of the murky Rio Grande and full sweeps of the cattle range greet the eye. This atmosphere is perfect in its creative illusion and forms quite the best thing about the picture. The camera work by William Fildew is satisfactory. The subtitles mounted on still frames from the picture are poor. There are many times when the light lettering falls on a white background and is practically indistinguishable.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Alaire (Anna Q. Nilsson) is married to Ed Austin (Robert Taber), a dissolute ranch owner, and aside from eating meals with him and receiving letters at the same address has nothing in common with her husband. A chance meeting with Dave Law (Herbert Heyes), of the Texas Rangers, precipitates a love affair which, however, is strictly honorable, as Alaire adheres faithfully to her marriage vows. Longorio (E. L. Fernandez), a military leader of Mexico, covets Alaire, and under the pretense of honorable friendship often visits her. Longorio threatens one of his henchmen with torture unless he kills Austin, and so Alaire is eventually rendered a widow. The Mexican leader then traps Alaire in his native land, and attempts to force her to marry him. He is called away for a while, and, during the interim, Law arrives and marries Alaire. On his return Longorio makes Law captive, and plans his death. The priest, however, prevails upon the outlaw to reform, long enough to permit the escape of Alaire and Law. Relenting his goodness he sends his troops after them. They are trapped in a lone hut, which is set afire, but the Texas Rangers effect a last-minute rescue.

"The Risky Road"

(Universal—Five Reels)

"THE RISKY ROAD" has a distinct flavor of the magazine in which it first appeared as a short story under the title of "Her Fling." This magazine which circulates among the lowly bearing the inviting caption of "Live Stories" always calls to mind Owen Johnson's "Salamander." Its writers love to hover on the edge of things but naturally the mail laws prohibit them from jumping off. They lead the hero and heroine up to the door of a bedroom and then disclose the fact that it is locked and the key lost. So in "The Risky Road" the fair heroine comes so near to the crossing of the ways so many times that one can easily realize how Annie and Susie and Maggie and Kate can get a thrill from her adventures.

"Her Fling" was written by Katherine Leiser Robbins and could never have run its length had not the various characters misunderstood each other until the final closeup. The highly colored situations are similar to a debate when neither side is quite sure what the other is debating about. The heroine thinks the hero a gentleman, he believes her of virtue easily tossed aside. Other characters have different opinions but the conflict of the man and woman is the main one. So the action resolves itself into simply this: the hero's ideas of free love pitted against the heroine's desire of marriage and the more conventional idea ultimately wins. The hero comes around to a realization that marriage is all right if the girl is.

Dorothy Phillips and William Stowell are featured in this number which was adapted and produced under the direction of Ida May Park. On the whole it is interesting with only a few lapses into the ridiculous due to the constant misunderstandings.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Marjorie Helmer (Dorothy Phillips), a stenographer, continues a chance acquaintance with Kingston (William Stowell) until the affair assumes peculiar proportions. Kingston, wealthy and somewhat unprincipled due to the fact that his brother's marriage has been an utter failure, eventually persuades Marjorie to permit him to support her. While she well realizes his motive she prevents him from assuming any great liberties with her. Gradually he realizes her worth, and is disgusted with himself. She also sees the change in him, and grows to love him sincerely. Her old sweetheart from the country, Robert Grant (George Cheseboro), comes to the city to take her home. When he sees the surroundings in which she lives, he immediately jumps to conclusions, and, after a vicious attack on her, leaves. Marjorie goes to Kingston's office determining to accept him. In the waiting room she encounters his brother's wife (Claire Du Brey), and believes her the wife of the man she loves. However, explanations are finally in order, and the affair of Kingston and Marjorie ends happily.

"Her Mistake"

(Julius Steger Production—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

JULIUS STEGER presents Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell, for the second time in the silent drama. Her work in Mr. Steger's late production is of the highest order and marks a big improvement over that done in "Redemption." This much alone in the way of criticism is most favorable if you will remember the success which she met with in "Redemption." "Her Mistake" will surpass her "Redemption" for its theme offers more in the way of dramatic high lights and has a firmer foundation upon which to build real, substantial entertainment. It is in six reels and was produced under the personal direction of Mr. Steger.

The former wife of Harry Thaw has developed a fine sense of appreciation for dramatic action under Mr. Steger's direction. She has made long strides toward the finished product since her first appearance before the camera. Her facial expressions in her late work are particularly noticeable since they give no evidence of over-anxiety of registering the particular emotion sought to be brought out. Her work in "Her Mistake" is commendable and Director Steger is due a lot of credit for his capable supervision. The star's son, Russell, is not much in evidence until the later reels. He gives to the picture just the right touch of sentiment which goes a good way toward heightening the entertaining value of this screen play.

"Her Mistake" is going to be received with open arms by the public. Not because it is ultra-perfection in the list of screen dramas but it has the quality, usually referred to as the human element, predominating in every scene which goes to make up the multiple reelage. The dramatic element is heightened considerably by the beautiful exteriors which Director Steger has shot for a background. They show the country in and about the Adirondack region in upper New York. During the later reels the action shifts to the outskirts of the Greater City and here the director has registered views of the exterior of a suburban home which are good to look upon. But these views never once stand out with sufficient force to detract from the dramatic entertainment. The story runs with smoothness, a bit slow in the initial reels, but always working toward a logical climax and arriving with a good healthy punch. "Her Mistake" goes no further than the title. After the title is flashed then it becomes a most interesting account of a mistake, and the public will make no mistake in giving an hour or more of its time to see Evelyn Nesbit in her best work before the camera.

Eugene Strong, Miss Nesbit's leading man, is a fine type, acts with a nice appreciation for the role he is interpreting and affords good, substantial support. Lois Meredith, in the principal feminine supporting role, does capable work. Charles Wellsley, in one of his characteristic roles, does the usual good work. Harry Bartlett, in a character role, is fine support.

The story tells of a young country girl who meets and weds a young scion of the rich, who has been rejected by his fiancee because his financial standing was not what she expected. Later the two meet and the young wife is forgotten. They are brought together again when the husband is brought to the realization that his young wife is true blue.

"The Lion's Claws"

(Universal—First and Second Episodes)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE LION'S CLAWS," Universal's latest serial, starts with a lion's roar. It has plenty of swift, melodramatic action and plenty of lions with Marie Walcamp as the fearless heroine. The locale is Egypt, the principal members of a British army post and natives. The first episode is one of the best first episodes ever issued. Besides definitely planting its characters it presents a melodrama of great interest and starts the serial off in a direction that promises a good many thrills. Jacques Jaccard, who is directing, has presented the story concisely and the scenes and settings representing locations in Egypt are quite convincing.

The lions come up to the camera lens in both the first and second numbers. Mr. Jaccard has handled them well, although one gets an inkling at times into their state of mind. They are somewhat afraid of the whole proceeding. However, when the first episode closes with a scene showing Miss Walcamp stretched on the ground senseless with one of the beasts sprawled over her displaying anything but a congenial disposition it is certainly precarious enough to create the desired thrill.

Thomas Lingham, Alfred Allen, Gertrude Aster, Frank Lanning and Ray Hanford constitute the chief supporting cast. Mr. Hanford, evidently to be the hero of the story, does not put in an appearance until the second episode and then only in a few scenes. But hero or none the first instalment teems with interesting and exciting action and promises further complications that go to make the serial popular.

"Just a Woman" to Open on Loew Circuit

"JUST a Woman," adapted from Eugene Walter's stage play produced by Judius Steger and distributed by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, will be given its first public showing beginning the week of April 11, when it will start on the Loew Circuit of theatres.

Frank G. Hall, president, U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, purchased the world rights to Julius Steger's production of the Walter play, which has to its credit as a stage hit an unusually long Broadway run at the Forty-Eighth Street theatre, New York, followed by successful road tours and numerous stock company engagements in most of the large cities of the country. Three days after he had acquired the rights, Mr. Hall announced more than one hundred first run contracts for the picture in the large vaudeville theatres and its early opening in the Loew houses will mark the beginning of the New York bookings. Its original star, Charlotte Walker, also appears in the photodrama.

"Julius Steger deserves a lion's share of the credit," said Mr. Hall in commenting upon the picture. "The story is laid both in Pittsburgh and New York and the atmosphere of the Pittsburgh steel mills, alternating with scenes of New York high life, is so perfectly maintained that few titles are necessary to help you follow the story. In the Pittsburgh steel magnate's reception scenes, where the "cats of Alleghany society," as Eugene Walter calls them, snub the pretty wife of the steel worker, the atmosphere of Pittsburgh is wonderfully maintained and, in fact, the whole staging of the production shows the wonderful grasp of dramatic technique Julius Steger has gained by his long stage and screen experiences."

Gansborg Reports on "Eagle's Eye" Look Remarkably Good

HY GANSBORG, manager of the New York Foursquare exchange, is enthusiastic over the results upon the public of the first episodes running in and about New York, of "The Eagle's Eye." "Audiences attending the 81st Street theatre have received the early episodes with a degree of fervor indicating the record for public approval of any serial thus far offered," he said.

"After David Picker had presented the first episodes of 'The Eagle's Eye' in his circuit of Bronx theatres," said Mr. Gainsborg, "he was so impressed with the Wharton production that he immediately booked the serial for a four day run in his Rialto theatre, in Brooklyn, and one in which Mr. Picker has heretofore been unwilling to run a serial.

"It is a matter of fact that the actual showings of the early episodes of 'The Eagle's Eye' have stimulated a demand among exhibitors who had not previously booked this revelation of the Imperial German Government's spy activities against the United States and its people. The demand for 'The Eagle's Eye' is steadily increasing.

"Among the features which Foursquare is distributing the New York exchange finds 'The Cast-Off' giving a high degree of satisfaction. Exhibitors report their patrons leaving the theatre with exceptional words of praise. The arrangement just concluded between Foursquare and the U. S. Exhibitors, to sell the photoplays acquired by this progressive organization affords me and my salesmen the utmost gratification. The demands for 'Just a Woman' are very strong and I attribute this to the fact that Mr. Hall has made it a point to secure film merchandise of the highest quality only—productions of a grade such as will be exclusively acquired in the future, both by the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation and Foursquare Pictures."

Prominent Buyers Praise "Mickey"

JACOB GLUCKMANN, a prominent South-American buyer, after seeing "Mickey," released by Western Import Company, with Mabel Normand featured, said that the picture "surpassed anything that had been produced for the screen drama." Mr. Gluckmann continued:

"It contains every photodramatic element in its construction, woven in such a way that the values of the elements, without any detriment, are shown to a most pleasing state, to which treatment may be credited its great success. The elements that are generally undesirable in the picture, in order to make it have a universal appeal, have been eliminated from this production. There is nothing of a sex nature, there is no war stuff, there is no bloodshed, there are no gruesome scenes—and yet it is the biggest picture fram an appeal standpoint that has as yet been produced. It has a human touch, pathos, humor, mystery, and is sensational, but woven together in such a way that it appeals to everybody in every country.

"I am looking forward to the date of its release and hope that the Western Import Company will give me the first opportunity for the purchase of the 'Mickey' rights for distribution in South America."

J. H. Kunsky, one of the most prominent exhibitors in the country, attended the same showing of "Mickey" and made the following statement relative to this production:

"It is marvelous. It is the greatest photoplay I have ever seen—and I've seen them all. 'Mickey' is the perfect photoplay. It is different, and the most notable characteristics in this production are the absence of bloodshed, battle scenes and sex problems.

Big Shipment of Carbons to China

E. H. Kaufman, of the Inter-Ocean, announces a shipment of 20,000 Speer Carbons to China and 18,000 to the Dutch East Indies. Leon Schlessinger, manager of the Cinema Distributing Corporation, which is affiliated with Inter-Ocean, is making a trip to Buffalo and Syracuse in behalf of "The Thirteenth Labor of Hercules."

There is a "drive" on junk films in all the World markets, according to advices received by President Paul H. Cromelin, of the Inter-Ocean. "Picture fans in foreign lands stood for all sorts of films once upon a time in their curiosity to see anything on the screen that moved," he says. "But today foreign fans no more go to the cinema out of curiosity than does the American to his Rialto or Strand.

"The foreign exchange man who tries to book rainy or streaky films to his local cinemas today is going to lose his trade, for there is a real drive on by the cinema show proprietors that will make junk film as scarce a commodity in foreign markets as it is in the home one."

Big Business for "Shame"

"Shame," the John W. Noble seven-part production released by General Film Company and starring Zena Keefe, is scoring a success as a high class attraction on the West Coast, according to H. W. Schmidt, General's branch manager at San Francisco. Many important bookings, including the Strand at San Francisco and the Liberty at Sacramento, have been reported within the last few days.

Harry L. Orear, manager at Cincinnati, reports that the Ohio Board of Censors has passed favorably upon "Shame," without making a single elimination.

"Son-I guess it's up to you!

It's up to the boys at home to help those at the front. But these boys—regardless of age or creed—must be equipped—morally and physically—for national tasks. Central Gets Abbett as Sales Manager

An announcement that is considered important to the film trade in Indiana and Kentucky has been made public by the Central Film Service Company of Indianapolis, distributors of Universal, Jewel, Bluebird, Star Series, L-Ko and Nestor Comedies. This company announces the appointment of Ralph W. Abbett to the position of sales manager. Mr. Abbett, whose home is in Indianapolis, and who, for the past two years has been affiliated with the Central Film Service Company in the capacity of special representative, has a big following among the exhibitors in both Indiana and Kentucky. Mr. Abbett will be directly in charge of the sales of Jewel, Bluebird, Star Series, Universal features and news weeklies, L-Ko and Nestor Comedies. As sales manager, Mr. Abbett has a number of new wrinkles he wants to try out, he says.

Schlaifer in New Seattle Home

The L. J. Schlaifer Attractions, formerly of 233-234 Central Building, have removed their offices to 2022 Third Avenue, Film Row, Seattle. The new quarters occupy two thousand square feet of space, are splendidly located in the heart of film row with every facility for handling the largely increasing business of the firm.

The L. J. Schlaifer Attractions at the present time are distributing "Parentage," "Idle Wives," "Her Condoned Sin," "The Woman and the Beast," "The Ordeal" and a number of other standard features.

The L. A. Features Company, distributors of the Hart reissues are handling their product out of the L. J. Schlaifer Attractions offices.

Max Milder Joins Select

Max Milder, who has been manager of the Philadelphia Select Exchange, announces that he has been appointed district manager of the Select, which takes in Pittsburgh and the adjacent territories. Mr. Buck, who succeeds Mr. Miller, comes from the Foursquare Exchange, and will take active management of the local office. Mr. Rubenstein of New York goes to take charge of the local Foursquare office.

First National Extends Offices in Ohio

Contracts for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Ohio are coming in so fast that the Cleveland office is no longer able to handle the business unassisted, and in order to relieve the pressure they are opening a branch office in Cincinnati.

Select Branch Manager Establishes Record

H. A. RATHNER, manager of Select Pictures' Minneapolis branch, has been paying a brief visit to Select headquarters in New York City, where he has been the recepient of many congratulations for the extraordinary twenty-eight days' record which he made on closing contracts for Select Pictures' several series of star pictures.

The period covered in Mr. Rathner's selling campaign was from February 23 to March 23, there being four even weeks, with no extra days between these dates. The territory embraced includes Northern Wisconsin, the upper peninsula of Michigan and all of Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota.

To push this drive on the road Mr. Rathner flung out five salesmen—Ted Karatz, S. Rathner, Frank Woskie, Mark Ross and W. W. Evans. During the twenty-eight days that followed these men conducted the greatest whirlwind campaign ever driven by Select. Star series contracts were closed on the productions of Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge and Alice Brady. Each of these contracts covered all of the forthcoming Select pictures in the series to be produced by each of these stars.

As a result of these contracts the business of the Minneapolis branch was doubled for the week ending March 30, and Mr. Rathner is still at it. His splendid work has brought his office way up in the list of Select branches and has attracted the attention of the entire Select sales organization.

Have You Heard That—

General Film has appointed C. C. Knapp as manager of its Minneapolis branch. He is a former General Film employe.

Nathan Dobson has resigned as assistant manager of the Masterpiece Film Attractions, under Leon D. Netter, to become Cleveland district manager for the Allen Film Attractions.

George G. Rich, office manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., of Cleveland, has been transferred to the same company's Cincinnati branch office.

Ludlow F. Petty, formerly manager of the General Film branch at Cincinnati and well known in film circles, is acting chief of police under the Republican administration in the city of Louisville.

The Hoffman-Foursquare in Cleveland has taken over the distribution in Ohio of the United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation's releases. These include "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay" and "The Belgian."

W. L. Schmidt, the Southern traveling representative of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., New Orleans branch, has recently been transferred to the main office in Atlanta, and has just returned from a trip, covering the entire state of Florida.

Sam Rosenfeld, special representative of the Central Film Company, of Indianapolis, in the state of Kentucky, returned to headquarters recently after a two weeks' trip through his territory, and reports "unusually good" business in that state.

The Metro Picture Corporation, which has been contemplating the opening of an independent exchange of its own in Cleveland, has finally taken quarters in the Sincere Building.

E. B. Ebersole, formerly booker at the Indianapolis offices of Pathe, is now a member of the Coast artillery in training at Columbus, O.

Herman Heisler, owner and manager of the Colonial theatre, at Fort Wayne, Ind., spent a couple of days in Indianapolis, where he signed for two days of the General Film Company service.

The Sixth City Film Company, which opened offices recently in Cleveland, with a long list of the most blood-curdling melodramas on the market, has gone out of business.

Four New Managers for General

Installation of new managers at four of its exchanges are reported by General Film Company. E. W. Dustin, formerly manager of the World, Pathe, Select and Triangle exchanges at St. Louis, has become manager of General's exchange in that city.

Graham Sirwell, who has been connected with the Pathe and Select, is now manager for the General at Kansas City.

Other well known film men who have joined General Flm are J. F. Conant, new manager of the Cleveland branch, and George Weeks, now in charge of the Detroit exchange.

Philadelphia Metro Starts New Service

The Metro Film Exchange in Philadelphia has inaugurated a free advertising service bureau for exhibitors. Louis H. Bell, formerly publicity manager of the Famous Players Exchange in Philadelphia, is in charge of this bureau, and is rendering good service to Metro exhibitors in helping them with their program, newspaper and other advertising problems. Mr. Bell is also editing Metro Notes, a local house organ, that should prove of advantage to Metro exhibitors.

New Cairo Exchange

"The Standard Film Service of Dallas, Texas, has recently opened an exchange in Cairo, Ill., with H. Rittenhouse as manager and a splendid business is being secured.

H. Rittenhouse formerly established an office for the Standard in Arkansas.
